Since that time, inspired by our discover, we have, in every spare moment, snatched up our Webster's and leafed through the pages in search of new and interesting words with which increase and enrich our vocabulary. Words like "prolixity."

And since that time we have become acutely aware of vocabularial deficiencies in others. We are appalled by the language habits of our fellow students who often repeat themselves in speaking, use incorrect pronouns and adverbs and are redundant.

We met with a classic example of vocabularial laxity the other evening, when a friend described a certain physiological function of the human body as an "organism." Which was not what he meant, at all.

Such abuses to our language could be avoided if more students (and people) would take up our new hobby, "Dictionary Browsing." It is a pleasant pastime. It makes one a demon at scrabble. It is also a "must" for the college student intent on improving himself intellectually.

THE DIARY OF A YOUNG GIRL. By Anne Frank. Translated from the Dutch by B. M. Mooyaart-Doubleday. 285 pp. New York: The Modern Library: Random House. $1.65.

On Wednesday, July 8, 1942 Anne Frank and her family moved from their home in Amsterdam to a small, secret apartment in the rear of an old office building. In these few dingy rooms the Franks and four other Jews hid from the Germans who occupied Holland: for the two years and twenty-seven days of their concealment, Anne Frank could see the outside world only "through dirty net curtains hanging before very dusty windows." The world inside those windows was also largely unavailable to Anne, for she felt that none of the group was sympathetic to her unique predicament as an emergent individual, and she could confide in no one.

Unable to find her place in the outside world from which she had been suddenly removed at a crucial period in her growth, and also isolated from the world-in-small of her immediate situation, Anne was forced to seek within herself the whole structure and meaning of her existence.

Her diary is the record of that search, for Anne Frank was almost unbelievably able ". . . to write, but more than that . . . to bring out all kinds of things that lie buried deep in my heart."

The beauty of her diary lies not only in the fact that at the age of thirteen she was able to write so well, and that she was able to record with unmistakable felicity the contents of her heart: it is the nature of her soul itself, as it shines through her well-chosen words, that is the beauty of the diary.

Compare Anne Frank to any girl of a similar age, and the genius of the young diarist stands out in bold relief. At an age when most girls—and boys, for that matter—are quite unwilling and unable to question themselves, to dissociate themselves from their emergent sexuality and sociality, Anne was able to do just those things with strenuous honesty and success such as are usually found only in older individuals no matter what their native talent.

It is perhaps unjustified to assume that Anne would have been the same had the events of the war not taken place, for it was exactly those events which provided at least the immediate impetus for the thoughts which are recorded in her diary. In short, Anne was involved in a conscious confrontation with what Albert Camus, whose ideas were generated by a situation similar to Anne's, was later to call the Absurd. On the one hand, Anne was entering adolescence, and thus she felt the insistent necessity to question the habits and entire orientation of her pre-adolescent life; on the other hand, she was living "in a time when all ideals are being shattered and destroyed, when people are showing their worst side, and do not know whether to believe in truth and right and God . . . our problems weigh down on us, problems for which we are probably too young, but which thrust themselves upon us continually, until, after a long time, we think we've found a solution, but the solution doesn't seem able to resist the facts which reduce it to nothing again . . . ideals, dreams, and cherished hopes rise within us, only to met the horrible truth and be shattered. We all live, but we don't know the why or the wherefore."

"Little bundle of contradictions" that she was, at once a budding young woman full of hope and promise, and at the same time a clear-sighted individual able to comprehend and confront despair, Anne could not always remain true to her instantaneous vision of her situation often, like the best of us, she took refuge in superficial optimism. But just as often her perception was truer, and she realized that her task was to become ". . . what I would so like to be, and what I could be, if . . . there weren't any other people living in the world"; ". . . to stand on (my) own feet as a conscious, living being . . . if you do, it's . . . difficult to steer a right path through the sea of problems and still remain constant through it all. It isn't the fear of God but the upholding of one's own honor and conscience."

During her moments of what she called "superoptimism," Anne was a magnificent and pathetic example of the human will to believe in essential goodness in the face of depravity. In her deeper perceptions, she demonstrated the real glory of the human spirit: the ability to recognize the human situation in its worst extreme, without fixed standards, without God, and still to find within the individual a basis for a meaningful existence.

If Anne Frank had lived, she would now be twenty-nine years old, and it is safe to assume that she would be a human being rare in her uniqueness. But on August 4, 1944, three days after the last date in her diary, the Germans captured the residents of the "secret annex": Anne Frank died in the concentration camp where she was sent, just before the allies reached her. This postscript to the diary, confined to a brief note at the end, gives the diary an added significance: it becomes horribly clear that the world has collaborated in the murder of one of its very rare and unique human beings.

Legislature Hears Levy's Bill To Send Governors Telegrams

By DEE DANIELS

Ed Levy (ind.), whose bill to send telegrams to Governors Lindsay Almond (Va.) and Orval Faubus criticizing them for closing schools in the states of Arkansas and Louisiana, elaborated on his bill yesterday.

The purpose of the bill, introduced Thursday night in Student Legislature, according to Levy, was to show these governors that there is a body of individuals who consider public education a primary necessity overriding all other issues.

In the proposed telegram, the Student Legislature would "denounce all efforts to evade the clear meaning of the law and decision of the Supreme Court through the abolition of public schools and the diversion of public funds to supposedly private institutions."

The message would also state the Legislature's aversion to any destruction of the free puublic school system, which is necessary for the preservation of U. S. society, economic progress and national defense.

The bill would appropriate funds from the Unappropriated Balance for purchase of the two telegrams.

Three other bills were introduced Thursday night.

Davil Grigg (UP) presented a bill to appropriate $1,000 from the Unappropriated Balance to the student-faculty Fine Arts Forum for presentation of an initial Fine Arts Forum to be held the week of March 8, 1959.

Scottish influences in North Carolina culture and folklore provide the theme for the 47th annual meeting of the N. C. Folklore Society which meets at the Sir Walter Hotel in Raleigh, Friday, Dec. 5, at 2 p.m.

"Our Scottish-American Heritage" is the central title of the program, with Donald MacDonald of Charlotte as master of ceremonies, according to Dr. A. P. Hudson of the UNC faculty and secretary-treasurer of the society.

Scttish country dancing in costume will be exhibited by the Fayetteville Senior High School Dancers, with Mrs. William A. McMillan Jr., and Mrs. Hubert Black as directors, and by the Queen City's Own Scottish Dancers, with Miss Sally Southerland as director. A demonstration of Highland dancing will be performed by the Benhaven Scottish Dancers of Olivia, with Miss Martha McLeod as director.

Philip Kennedy of Charlotte and Mrs. Betty Vailen Williams of Raleigh will sing Scottish and Scottish-American songs, and Pipe Major Jack Smith of Winston-Salem will play a number of bagpipe selections.

Several of the participants in the program were born in Scotland, and most of the others are of Scottish descent. MacDonald is vice convener and commissioner of the Clan Donald Society in America and is co-founder of the Highland Games at Linville.

Folk Singers Will Be Feature Of Cosmopolitan Club Meeting

The Cosmopolitan Club will hold its last meeting for this calendar year Sunday at 4 p.m. in the Rendezvous Room.

Featured on the program will be members of the newly organized folk singing group who will present various kinds of contemporary American folk music.

The next scheduled meeting will be the International Dinner Dec. 13. Tickets will go on sale at Sunday's meeting and will also be available in the Y. A limited number of tickets will be on sale. The price is $1.

All foreign students wishing to have Thanksgiving dinner with a Chapel Hill family have been asked to give their names to Cosmopolitan Club President Nolu Halton by Sunday's meeting.

Officers of the North Carolina Folklore Society for 158 are: Mrs. Bety Vaiden Williams of Raleigh, president; Donald MacDonald of Charlotte and Mrs. E. H. Hartsell of Chapel Hill, vice presidents; and A. P. Hudson of Chapel Hill, secretary-treasurer.

Bank on the future — but don't write checks against it.

Three Carolina Air Cadets Receive DMS Recognition

Cadet Lt. Col. William S. Godwin, cadet commander; Cadet Maj. William F. Parker, executive officer, and Cadet Capt. Kenneth R. Walker, administrative services officer, were named in ceremonies held in the office of Lt. Col. Franklin W. Swann, professor of air science.

Eligibility was based on high moral character, aptitude for Air Force service, leadership, extra curricular activities and the ranking of within the top 10 per cent of his air science class and the top 25 per cent of students pursuing the same major.

One or more of these students will be named as Distinguished Graduates prior to graduation in June. The cadet or cadets named will receive commissions in the regular Air Force instead of in the Air Force reserve.

THE CLOTHES YOU SAVE MAY BE YOUR OWN

In this column we take up fashions for college men, which means, of course, the Ivy Look. Today's Ivy Look clothes have made a great stride forward. Not only do they have thin lapels, three buttons, narrow trousers, and a minimum of shoulder padding, but —now hear this!—this year they are actually covered with ivy!

This new development, while attractive beyond the singing of it, nevertheless gives rise to certain hazards. For instance, people keep trying to plant you on Arbor Day. Indeed, this is precisely what happened to two SAE's of my acquaintance, Walter R. Gurlash and Fred Rasp. Before they could protest, they were snatched up, planted, limed, and watered, and today they support a hammock in Cut and Shoot, Vermont.

Let us now discuss shirts. Again this year the campus favorite is the good old Oxford with button-down collar and barrel cuffs. This is without doubt an admirable garment, but let me ask you a question: if you don't wear anything but Oxfords, what do you do with all the cuff links people have been giving you for your birthday since you were twelve years old?

Well sir, some fellows have their wrists pierced, but what E. Mackenzie Sigafoos, a Chi Psi of my acquaintance, did was to take a dozen pairs of his birthday gold monogrammed cuff links and string them together in a charm bracelet for his girl, Jo-Carol Imber.

(It turned out, incidentally, to be a mistake. In short order so many admirers accrued to Jo-Carol on account of her gaygeen bracelet that she grew tired of plain old E. Mackenzie, and one night when she was seated on a bench in Lovers Lane throwing sticks for E. Mackenzie to retrieve, she suddenly, cruelly, without warning, told him they were through.

"I am heartbroken," said E. Mackenzie, heartbroken. "But if go you must, give me back my charm bracelet."

"No, I will keep it," said Jo-Carol.

"What for?" said E. Mackenzie. "You can't wear it. The initials on the cuff links spell Sigma—E.M.S."

"Ha, ha, the joke is on you," said Jo-Carol. "Yesterday I was voted Miss Chinese Kidnapee of 1958."

"So?" said E. Mackenzie.

"So," replied Jo-Carol, "E.M.S. does not stand for E. Mackenzie Sigafoos. It stands for Eat More Salsgum!"

But I digress. We were talking about well-dressed men, and the one essential for every well-dressed man—and every well-dressed woman too—is a well-dressed cigarette—neat, compact, flavorful, and correct for work or play, sunshine or shower, tuxedo or revelry, darkness or light. And where does one find such a perfect companion? Just go to any tobacco counter and ask for Philip Morris. Ask for it in long size or regular. Ask for it in soft pack or hard. But ask for it; that's the important thing. Don't just stand there making cryptic gestures at your tobacconist. He may be armed.

END HOME CAREERS TODAY—These four Tar Heels, in addition to several years, wind up their careers for Carolina here today against Duke. They are, left to right: Phil Blazer, co-captain of the team and a rugged All-American tackle; Ronnie Koes, one of the finest centers in the nation; Fred Swearingen, the great Tar Heel guard, and Mac Turlington, a hustling end. Not pictured are Don Kemper, Emil DeCantis, Takey Crist, Bill Hardison, Don Redding, and Daley Goff.

Today is the day. This bright fall afternoon two of the bitterest football rivals in the nation go at it tooth and nail in the arena of Kenan Stadium before an expected crowd of 42,000.

Last year's victory, coming under the circumstances that it did, was tremendous. But this year the rivalry has, if anything, waxed hotter than ever. In evidence is the fact that the student bodies of each school have raided the campus of the other several times. The excitement over today's battle has reached a fever pitch.

TEN END HOME CAREERS

On the playing field, ten Carolina football players wind up their home careers. Some of the greatest of all time to play in the sunny confines of Kenan finish up today.

Their names are household words on the Carolina campus. Blazer, Koes, Redding, DeCantis, Kemper, Turlington, Crist, Hardison, Goff, and Swearingen. Today they play for the last time before the home fans. They may have one more game left . . .

LET'S GO BOWLING . . .

In addition to the fierce rivalry between Carolina and Duke, today's battle has taken on added importance because of the possibility of Carolina going to a bowl. They will need at least a victory and probably a very convincing one before they can make the trip to New Orleans or Miami.

Old-timers around the campus all readily admit that they have never seen the rivalry so bitter since they have been here. Both teams want this one so bad they can taste it.

TWO STARTERS INDEFINITE

Each team has a man who may miss this game of games. Carolina's brilliant sophomore end John Schroeder, who injured his knee in a freak accident in the Virginia game, has a doubtful status right up to the kick-off. Schroeder says he may start, or he may not even dress. Duke's George Dutrow, rated one of the best halfbacks in this or any conference, has been announced as about the same status as Schroeder

Position for Position: Ends—Carolina's are smaller, but quicker. Goldstein is a better pass receiver than any Duke has. Duke perhaps has the nod on defense, although their ends are not so fast as the Tar Heels. Tackles—The edge to the Tar Heels, but not by much. Blazer and Redding are two of the best. The Duke tackles are just as big and have been just as stingy with ground yardage.

Guards—A very slight edge to Duke, on the basis of their Mike McGee. McGee is one of the best, but Swearingen and Mueller are also. Center—A big edge to Carolina. Koes is simply great, he's great both defensively and offensively. Byrd is good, but largely overshadowed by Koes.

Quarterback—Cummings by a landslide. Brodhead is protected by a bigger line, but Cummings is a better passer and a far better play caller. Halfbacks—An edge to Duke if Dutrow plays; if he doesn't it's about even. Carlton leads the conference in rushing and points scored, but Smith and DeCantis are equally dangerous. Fullback—The people's choice, Don Klochak. Since Hal MacElhaney graduated, the Dukes have had their problems at this position. Klochak has come along every game, is now about at his season peak.

COMPARATIVE SCORES

CAROLINA	DUKE
State 14-21	South Carolina 0-8
Clemson 21-20	Virginia 12-15
Southern Cal 8-7	Illinois 15-13
South Carolina 6-0	Baylor 12-7
Maryland 27-0	Notre Dame 7-9
Wake Forest 26-7	State 20-13
Tennesse 21-7	Georgia Tech 8-10
Virginia 42-0	LSU 18-51
Notre Dame 24-34	Wake Forest 0-29

The comparative scores may be interesting, but they don't prove a thing in this traditional battle. The Dukes own the series edge 18-22, having swept seven straight before last year.

DUKE AT BEST LAST WEEK

Last week Duke looked the best they have all season in whipping Wake Forest by a decisive 29-0 count. The Devils blocked a kick, intercepted two passes and recovered three fumbles in that one. So, Carolina will have to keep its eye one the ball today.

Although they went down in defeat last week, the Tar Heels still made a very fine showing against one of the nation's best. Most of the players are recovered from the battering they took against the rugged Irish at South Bend.

Today is the perfect way to end a football season, or a football playing career. May the best team win, and let's all hope they're wearing light blue. Somehow, I keep smelling Sugar around here . . .

Wake Forest Tangles With Auburn's Hopeful Tigers

AUBURN, Ala. —AP— Still hopeful of winning the national football championship for the second year in a row, Auburn put its 22-game undefeated record on the line against Wake Forest here Saturday.

But the Tiger coaches will be watching more than the scoreboard. They'll be almost equally concerned over the outcome of the Tulane-Louisiana State game at New Orleans.

If Tulane can upset the Bengals now in first place nationally — convincing victory over Wake Forand assuming Auburn turns in a est—the Plainsmen, who rank No. 2, will have a chance of moving back on top and retaining the championship.

Of course, they would still have Alabama to beat the following Saturday.

Wake Forest has won only three of its eight games this season, but Tiger Coach Ralph Shug Jordan isn't taking Saturday's game lightly. He exhibits nothing but profound respect for the passing ability of quarterback Norman Snead, one of the best in the South. Auburn for the first time in six weeks will be at full strength with fullback Tommy Lorino ready to start. Lorino suffered a shoulder injury against Florida and has been out of commission since then.

A victory over the Deacons will extend Auburn's unbeaten string to 23 games.

Tar Heels Shutout Duke Booters, 2-0

By JIM PURKS

DURHAM — With right wing Coleman Barks leading the offensive punch, Carolina's varsity soccer team nailed down second place in the ACC with a 2-0 victory over Duke yesterday.

Barks, who has played consistently well for the Tar Heels all season, scored both goals, assuring the team of second place with a 3-1 conference record and a 8-2 overall record.

Duke, determined to stop the Tar Heels, put up a strong defensive wall, which Carolina couldn't penetrate until Barks scored late in the second quarter to give the squad a 1-0 lead.

In the third quarter, Barks hit paydirt again with his second goal, this score coming with about six minutes gone in the quarter.

Carolina Defense Stingy

Duke was unable to start any serious offensive charges against Carolina's stingy defense, led by Dove Corkey at center forward. Corkey received ample support from Bob Quackenbusch at left fullback, with Tom Evans and Tom Cordle alternating at right halfback. Cordle, one of the most improved players on the team, played his best game of the season.

The Tar Heels, not playing as well offensively as they did against Maryland, were still able to set up numerous shots on the Duke goal. John Ghanim pounded at the Blue Devils goal several times in the fourth quarter.

First Win In Three Years

Carolina's win over Duke marked the first time in three years a Tar Heel team has been able to overcome the Blue Devils. Two years ago Duke beat Carolina, 2-1, and last year fought the Tar Heels to a 5-5 standstill.

Happy over Carolina's showing against Duke, Coach Marvin Allen said he would rate this year's squad as probably the best team he's ever coached.

Yesterday's game was the last game for several seniors. Besides Barks, left wing Rick Grausman, halfback Bob Borden, fullback Dake Corkey, and goalie Jim Rattay donned a Tar Heel uniform for the last time. Tom Rand, injured since the Virginia game, was not in uniform.

Wins by Carolina this year, besides the Duke game, were registered over Virginia, Roanoke, Emory, N. C. State, Pfeiffer, Davidson, and Lynchburg.

The only team besides Maryland to defeat the Tar Heels was Washington & Lee, handing Carolina a 3-2 surprise beating in Lexington, Va.

many feel that the Blue Devils will be forced to take to the air.

The experts, as usual, rate the game as a toss up. When the Carolina-Duke game comes down to the wire anything can happen and usually does.

The Dukes lead the long series 18-22. The famed Victory Bell, which has been residing in Chapel Hill for for the past year, also hangs in the balance of today's game.

Each team has one man on the injured and doubtful starter list. For Carolina its soph end John Schroeder who might possibly see action today although it is doubtful.

Coaching Career Next For Mac Turlington

Editors Note: This is the 3rd in a series of DTH Articles on Carolina's Graduating Football players.

By STEWART PHINIZY

Thirty seconds was all that separated Carolina from a decisive 26-7 victory over the Demon Deacons of Wake Forest.

The spectators noisely began their march to the exits.

Unawed by victory chants and the beating of Tar Heel drums was a small boy parading behind the Carolina bench.

Not many noticed the little fellow, who was wearing a Tar Heel helmet flopped proudly over his head.

But Tar Heel end Mac Turlington spotted the youngster, walked over and began playing with him.

Plans To Be A Coach

Turlington likes kids. In fact, he plans to make a life's work teaching them the fundamentals of the game he knows best . . football. He plans to be a coach.

But right now Mac is busy as a member of a wrecking crew known as the Carolina line.

Last year Carolina had a record of 6-4, it's finest showing since 1949. Instrumental in the Tar Heels comeback was Turlington. Mac caught 8 passes for 167 yards, did yoeman work defensively.

This fall Mac conceded his starting right end position to Al Goldstein, Carolina's best pass receiver since Art Weiner. Showing no bitterness, Mac unselfishly says, "I consider it an honor to play behind as fine a ballplayer as Al."

"The Biggest Thrill"

"Beating Duke last year was the biggest thrill of my career. It's been a pleasure playing under Coach Tatum, he is as fine a man as I've ever known."

Turlington and Daley Goff, Carolina's leading rusher last season, were teammates at Dunn High School in 1954. (Goff has been out most of the season with injuries but is expected to see action today against Duke.)

Probably the highest compliment Turlington could receive comes from Coach Tatum. Attesting to the hustle of his big 6-1, 210 pound senior end, Tatum says, "We couldn't ask more from a young man than what we get from Mac Turlington."

Officials Conferring On Berlin

By SEYMOUR TOPPING

BERLIN — (AP) — Western military and diplomatic officials conferred urgently yesterday on the Berlin crisis. West Germany urged the big three to stand firm against recognizing Red East Germany even at the risk of a new Berlin blockade.

The Kremlin kept the West guessing on when to expect a note on Soviet intentions. East Germany maintained the war of nerves, referring to "gangsters" in West Berlin and demanding the U.S., British and French garrisons get out of the isolated city.

West Germany took a strong stand opposing a plan said to be under study by the three powers to yield on East German control of vulnerable supply lines when and if the Russians quit Berlin.

This emerged from a press briefing given by Foreign Minister Heinrich Von Brentano in West Berlin. He refused to allow himself to be quoted directly.

The proposal for limited dealings with the East Germans came under study after the Russians indicated they would hand over control of air, highway and rail links to East Germany.

If the western allies refused to accept these controls, they would be confronted by a virtual blockade of their West Berlin military garrisons, isolated 110 miles deep in East Germany and encircled by 22 Russian divisions.

The allies therefore began mulling over the idea that the East Germans could be dealt with only as "agents of the Soviet Union." The Brentano briefing indicated the Bonn government does not regard this as feasible or advisable.

If the East Germans began harassing West Berlin lifelines, the West might be presured into negotiating with the East Germans This would amount to practical recognition. The West has refused to recognize East Germany, so as to avoid dashing the liberation hopes of 17 million East Germans.

Two Turkish Violinists Are Musicales Feature

Two leading Turkish violinists will present a recital Tuesday at 8 p.m. in Graham Memorial on the Petities Musicales series.

The performers will be Dr. Nurettin Sazi Kosemihal, a sociologist who is working at UNC this year under a Fulbright Fellowship, and his wife, Bedia Kosemihal. Accompanying them at the piano will be Joel Chadabe, a composer and an undergraduate student at UNC from New York City.

The public has been invited to hear without charge the Kosemihals' program, which will include three sonatas by Corelli, Handel and Vivaldi, plus a group of smaller pieces.

Both Mrs. and Dr. Kosemihal are well known virtuosos in their native Turkey, especially in the area of Amkara and Istanbul. They also studied together under Karl Berger, well known for his concerts in the cities of middle Europe. Mrs. Kosemihal is especially known for her many radio concerts in Amkara and Istanbul.

Dr. Kosemihal, professor of sociology at the University of Istanbul, has written many books on his field and has had more than 100 articles published in scientific and literary reviews. As one of the founders of the Turkish Sociological Society, he is very active in this organization as well as the Institute International de Sociologie.

Chadabe is well recognized in the music circles on campus, was the accompaniest for the Petites Musicales presentation of Mozart's "Impresario," and composed the incidental music for the Playmaker's production of "Peer Gynt."

Duke Wins, 7-6; Kills Bowl Hopes

By RUSTY HAMMOND

44,000 fans jammed their way into Kenan Stadium here yesterday to watch Duke's fired-up Blue Devils effectively stifle any Carolina bowl hopes as the Devils whipped the Tar Heel 7-6 in a hard-fought defensive battle.

Wray Carlton did all the scoring for Duke, and it was his extra point which provided the final Duke victory margin.

Carolina, in spite of three magnificent goal line stands, made mistakes all afternoon nad could not get a single sustained offensive drive going. Duke intercepted five Carolina passes, one of them setting up their lone touchdown.

The victory bell crossed to the opposite side of the field and the goal posts fell creating an exact reverse over last year's game which the Tar Heels won in an upset.

Te loss dropped the Heels to a 6-4 record, same as last year, and pushed the Dukes to an even 5-5 mark.

Carolina's only touchdown also came on an intercepted pass, when Jack Cummings picked off a Bob Brodhead aerial and ran it to the Duke 7. Three plays later Don Klochak crased over from 1 yard out for the score. Blazer's extra point attempt was blocked by Duke guard Mike McGee.

In the second quarter the Carolina line put on a great goal line stand, stopping the Devils four straight times inside their own 10 with the ball winding up at the Heel 1 yard line.

After the second half kick-off the Tar Heels marched right down the field until a Cummings aerial was intercepted by Royal at the Duke 32. Carolina got the ball back, but gave it back to Duke again on a fumble.

This time they couldn't hold the Dukes, who marched 57 yards in 11 plays for the touchdown. Wray Carlton dived off left tackle for the score. then kicked the extra point to give his mates the eventual winning margin.

The last Tar Heel threat of the contest was stopped when Butch Allie intercepted the fifth Carolina pass of the day and returned to the Duke 16. Cummings had led his mates from their own 37 to the Duke 17 before the play. Duke then ran the clock out and hung on for the victory.

The game started and ended on a strong defensive note, with neither team able to make a first down until there were only 4 minutes left in the first quarter. Both touchdowns came on breaks, and neither team could move the ball for long yardage otherwise.

The alert Duke defense, which picked off five Tar Heel passes and jumped on two enemy fumbles, told the story of the contest. The Tar Heels made too many mistakes to stay in the game, being kept bottled up in their own territory most of the second half.

The four records set today by the Tar Heels provided little joy for Carolina. Jack Cummings set three: ACC-total yardage in one season, passing in one season, and a school passing record set by Charlie Justice. The team set one: an ACC mark for total passing in one season. Duke's Wray Carlton, playing his last game as a Blue Devil, shattered Ace Parker's old rushing yardage record.

Organizations To Get Space Under Smith

Howard D. Henry, director of Graham Memorial, said Friday space is available in the basement of Smith dorm for any student organization that "is looking for a home."

Henry wants organizations to contact him before the Thanksgiving holiday so he can assign space immediately.

The basement of Smith dorm has been assigned by the UNC Space Committee to the University Extension Division and student organizations in an effort to allevinte crowded conditions on campus.

The Extension Division will use two rooms of the basement for its testing service, a section of the Division that mails tests to schools in the State.

Director Henry said he might get some extra furniture for all student organizations that will be assigned offices in Smith Dorm's basement. "That is why I want them to get in touch with me just as quickly as possible," he said.

Henry said since Smith is a girl's dorm there will be some limitations in using the offices. First, the student organizations should provide the minimum of disturbance to the upstair residents. Secondly, they should close about 11 p.m.

Italian Commies Losing, Says Milan Student

By ED GOODMAN

Most American college students would probably shudder should they discover that many of their classmates were Communists.

In Italy, such a finding would cause no shock whatsoever; rather, it would be expected.

This observation was noted by an Italian student currently studying English at the University. She is Miss Germana Moech, of Milan.

In the years since the second world war, Italian sentiments have been torn between a number of political parties, ranging from right wing monarchists to left wing radicals and Communists. Power has been contested and has shifted. Governments have changed hands.

The result, Miss Moech said, has been the realization by Italians that an additional switch would have a great effect on their nation's welfare and policies. These circumstances, she said, "have made politics a vital part of the life of every Italian."

Thus, many Italian college students are active members of political parties, and like their elders their choices exhibit a great variety of views.

As to their relative sentiments toward Russia and the United States, Miss Moech said that these showed great differences also. But in general, she said, both were feared by many Italians, though in different ways.

Although America still represents freedom to the average Italian, he is suspicious of too much American influence in Italy. "America has done a lot for Italy," she said, "but Italy wants to feel independent."

"Italians admire American ideals, but Italy would like to have an idealism of its own."

Communism, she maintained, has been on the wane in her homeland since the Hungarian revolution, receiving most of its support from the working class. However, she added, it is still a powerful force there. In the last national elections, the Communist Party garnered an approximate 25 to 30 per cent of the votes.

The cause of the continuing Communist strength is the nation's low standard living, which has aided Red propaganda stressing this fact, she said. "The average Italian," she explained, "doesn't look so much toward ideals as he does facts."

These economic factors have also affected the Italian concept of education, bringing academic competition to the fore. There are far more applicants, she said, than jobs, and only the top graduates find employment in their chosen field.

Thus, Italian students are more serious and hard-working than American ones, she said.

Though the economic need of finding a good job has caused great competition, it still hasn't squelched what Miss Moech called a traditional feature of the Italian culture, the desire for a liberal education.

States Rights

Now, in modern America, there is really no such thing as states rights, and there no longer is a need for this concept in American government.

Surely at the present time the states think they have rights, and many exercise these in contradiction to the federal government. However, the evolving form of American government is toward increasing centralization in which the public will is manifested most notably through the elections of president, senator, and representative. Whatever the purpose the state served before, its purpose has radically changed. It is now a political stepping stone, a place for implementation of services, and a further place for political patronage.

Very little is done on the state level that is not a reaction one way or another to the dictates of the federal government, and in the modern age this has to be the case.

The lines of communication and transportation are so tightened that it now takes about four hours to get from one end of the country to another. In some areas it is a matter of minutes from one state to any of two or three other states. Yet, for some reason unknown to modern science people stil think in terms of state lines, and most often are more patriotic to the state than to the nation.

The states at the present time are a hindrance to the development of America. In many states the development of natural resources is hindered by the policies of the state government; in others there is a great waste of these resources.

The states in the south have made the question of states rights, a question of supremacy, and it is high time that the federal government showed out supreme.

There is no action that Congress cannot take that the states can if Congress can prove that it is promoting the general welfare or implementing one of its delegated powers, and at the present time proving that specification is easy.

The question arises as to why states rights should be, and the answer is that they should not be. This does not mean that the elimination of state rights would do away with state officials or city officials, but it does mean the establishment of the supremacy of the national government, the adoption a uniform set of laws and instead of the delegation of powers to the federal government, the delegation of powers to the state and local governments in a hierarchical structure emanating down from the federal government.

If nothing else, this would insure a certain amount of equality of justice and equality of opportunity, by eliminating state laws which are in conflict with other state laws. An example of this is the divorce law which ranges from adultery being the sole grounds for divorce in New York to almost anything being adequate grounds in Nevada. Clearly, a certain amount of uniformity over the United States would be beneficial.

State and local management would be up to the state government, subject to the regulation of the federal government in defining jurisdiction.

The preservation of states rights is harmful at this stage of the game when everything in the world depends on the people assuming a broader national or international view of problems.

It is probably a little too early in the century to cry for the abolition of states rights, but like the drinking rule on the Carolina campus, states rights represents a useless holdover from the past that is making successful demagogues out of a few small men. If the majority of the public ever awakened to reality, they would find that states rights is a myth.

A couple of days ago Governor Lindsay Almond refused to raise the flag of the United States over the flag of the state of Virginia in much the same manner as the United States refuses to have the United Nations flag above its own on the flag pole. There must come soon a conscious realization that both are wrong, before the flag raised on the pole is the hammar and sickle of the Soviet Union.

The World News In Review

Ed Rowland

This week the big news was the push of the Russians to try and force the Allies out of West Berlin, the outpost in the middle of Communist East Germany.

Soviet Ambassador to West Germany Andrei Smirnov called on West German Chancellor Conrad Adenauer and told him of "steps which the Soviet government intends to take to realize the liquidation of the occupation status of Berlin."

The mayor of the city, Willy Brandt, told newsmen the city's 2.2 million citizens were going to stay regardless of what the Reds did. He said the three powers holding the city had pledged to support it.

The air and rail corridor through East Germany to the city has been turned over to the Germans by the Russians in what probably is the first step in putting the squeeze on the city. This is what happened in 1948-49 when the famous Berlin airlift was undertaken to supply the isolated city.

The West German government said the move by Smirnov was the first step in a diplomatic and political offensive against free West Berlin.

Foreign envoys in Moscow are convinced the Kremlin means business in these latest moves. A Pravda article accused the U. S., Britain and France of using the occupation of West Berlin as "venomous weapons to poison the whole atmosphere of Europe."

The diplomats almost unanimously said the articles heralded a policy called either "tough" or "hard."

In Washington top officials pledged to stand firm in Berlin. U. S. and British diplomats virtually completed drafting a defense plan for the city in case of an attack. They said the three allieds are in Berlin to stay and they intend to keep open all land, water and air routes to the city.

Geneva Talks

In other international events this weeks the 10-nation East-West talks in Geneva dragged on with no real signs of a deadlock break. The Western Powers did tell the Reds for the first time what they believe a system for preventing surprise attacks should include.

Listed were mechanical devices such as radar networks, reconnaissance flights by aircraft operating on an open skies system, and international inspection teams to keep watch on such things as missile sites.

The Russians were invited to submit a list of their own and to study these technical matters. But the Russians turned their backs on the proposals.

The West immediately blamed this same hostility for the deadlock prevailing in the other international talk in Geneva—the three-power conference on nuclear test suspension problems.

Sec. of State Dulles said the U. S. would keep pushing ahead in hopes of breaking the deadlock.

"I'm not despondent," he told newsmen.

In Paris angry exchanges erupted in the fourth annual conference of NATO legislators on the still unsetled questions of Cyprus and Iceland.

Britain bore the brunt of an outpouring of heated oratory from the Icelandic and Greek members of the conference, made up of parliamentarians from the 15 NATO nations.

The British have been embroiled with Greece for years over the future of the British colony of Cyprus, whose half million population is made up of a Greek majority and a Turkish minority.

The Iceland crisis revolves around Britains's refusal to recognize Iceland's recent extension of the territorial waters limits for fishing.

Despite efforts of Sen. Estes Kefauver of the conference political committee, the disputes broke into the open. No reply was made by the British to the attacks.

UN Talks

In other East-West talks, this time at UN headquarters in New York, the U. S. and its allies offered the Soviet Union concessions they hope will lead to unanimous UN agreement on exploration of outer space for peaceful purposes.

U. S. Ambassador Henry Cabot Lodge discussed the concessions with Soviet Deputy Foreign Minister Valerian Zorin in a talk, and Zorin forwarded them to the Kremlin.

The major difficulty in previous suggestions was that the Reds wanted U. S.-Russian parity in the study group. The U. S. wants to avoid dividing the group into two power blocs. No further developments came during the latter part of the week.

Also from UN headquarters Secretary General Dag Hammarskjold announced he was pulling all remaining UN observers out of Lebanon. He said they were no longer needed. The observers were placed in Lebanon before the U. S. occupation to see that no infiltration of arms from other nations came to the rebel forces.

Since then the rebel leader has been elected president to replace Camil Chamoun. No infiltration has ben detected for some time, and Lebanon itself asked that the observers be withdrawa.

Meanwhile, the United States began shrinking its troop strength as preparations began for a cutting down on the military budget. A draft call of 7,000 men for January—2,000 less than the mouth before—was ordered.

The administration had decided to cut armed force strength last winter but action was held up until the Formosan and Lebanese crises were over. All fort services were ordered by Sec. of Defense Neil McElroy to make cuts in manpower.

Labor Unions

A little closer to home, Sen. Sam Ervin wound up a Senate probe of union boycotting with the assertion that the Teamsters Union is thrusting a "super law" on the U. S. government.

The conduct of the Teamsters' bosses, Ervin said, "makes Attila the Hun appear by comparison a very mild-mannered and benevolent individual."

Ervin is acting chairman of the Senate Rackets Committee, which has been holding hearings to determine whether tighter laws are needed to curb secondary boycotts. In a closing statement he said the headings have demonstrated the "callous way in which this kind of union utilizes its massive power to grind down its opposition through tactics of terrorism and violence."

And in Virginia, the scene of three city school systems closed by massive resistance to integration, a three man Federal court was told Norfolk's closed system would suffer disastrous effects if the schools were not opened soon.

The testimony came from three school officials and a veteran teacher. They testified in a suit challenging the constitutionality of Virginia's school closure law and seeking the reopening of the schools.

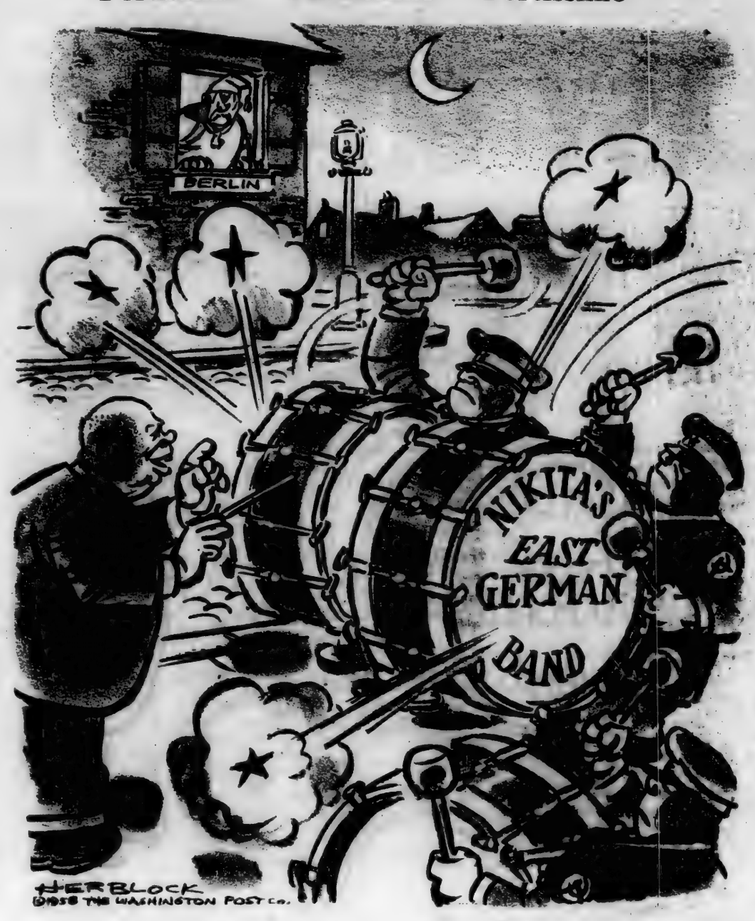
The state's large daily papers also began questioning the advisability of following Gov. Almond's "massive resistance" to integration, and the move has been called a possible forerunner to a relaxation of the policy.

Later, in Richmond, Gov. Almond said the U. S. flag won't fly atop the Virginia flag on any state-owned building. Old Glory will be displayed only on an equal basis—side-by-side—with the flag of the Commonwealth.

Buildings with one flag staff will be ordered to fly the Virginia flag only, Almond said.

The Governor didn't want his policy statement to be construed as derogatory to the Federal government or the national flag. Rather he said it seemed inappropriate to him to see the U. S. flag displayed in a position of dominance atop a state-owned building.

"Fortissimo — Pianissimo — Fortissimo —"



Rockefeller

By the looks of things it is extremely possibly at the present time that Nelson Rockefeller will actively seek the Republican presidential nomination.

Rockefeller is, of course, at the present time seeking to do a good job as governor of New York, but he has ceased vehemently denying that he would be a candidate for the Republican nomination.

If Harold Stassen will keep relatively quiet for the next year and a half, Vice-President Richard Nixon won't be the nominee. The country may yet be spared that fate.

Cyprus

Greechas used the right avenue for a proposal for an independent Cyprus — namely the United Nations. Moreover, the proposal has a great deal of merit.

Colonialism has been established in the world for a long time, but its age is past. Indeed the age of colonialism ought never to have existed. Since it has, however, it is time to be consistent with the principles of self-determination in a democracy and open Cyprus to their won home rule.

The United States will probably ally with Great Britain in trying to defeat this measure, but if the United States ever took its principles seriously it would reconsider this action. The time to end the disease called colonialism is now, so that the U.S. can live up to its stated purpose of self-determination for all people in a world in which individual rights are respected by every government.

Good Idea

A Raleigh Times editorial Thursday mentions the announcement of a TV vaccine developed here. North Carolina researchers are not responsible for that, but it might be a good idea. —C.F.

Berlin Problem

Chuck Flinner

"My son is an apprentice in a brewery in Berlin. He barely makes a living, but he is so happy just to continue living there. I would like to return, but it is necessary to have employment in order to remain. It is so crowded with incoming refugees."

The Berlin crisis is a living, human thing. This Berlin mother who is now living in West Germany very near the East German border is only one such example. She is proud of Berlin. Every Berliner is proud of Berlin, especially the Western sector, and every West German is proud of West Berlin.

West Berlin products and fashions are in high demand in West Germany, and Berlin culture is the best in Germany. The people are among the friendliest and happiest in the world.

Berliners must remain so. West Berlin under French, British and American control is probably the finest example of the free world in the communist controlled countries. It is entered daily by refugees. There in the midst of depressing communist life is happy, free, beautiful West Berlin. A miracle of reconstruction after total destruction is visible to the visitor. It must be maintained.

Millions of American dollars and West German marks poured into West Berlin in order to make it a showcase to the communist world. The effort has proved a success. There is a tremendous difference between the well lighted, well paved, and well filled streets of West Berlin and the drab, barren, dismal streets of the eastern sector occupied by the Russians. Even Stalinallee, the best effort the Russians could put forth, is pathetic in comparison to the Kurfurstendamm, the main street in the British sector.

East Berlin still has rubble in the streets, shabbily dressed and undernourished people in the majority, insufficient housing and pathetic shops owned by the state. Coffee in one such state owned shop on Stalinallee costs $10 per pound. Women are employed for heavy outdoor labor as well as directing traffic just beyond Brandenburg gate.

The 2.2 million inhabitants of West Berlin are depending on free world aid to help them help themselves improve their living standards and show the communist world what it is missing. To give up Berlin would cost the U. S. every friend in the rest of the free world.

What individual, what country in all the world could accept American friendship if Berlin is lost? Who could America depend on in a crisis if Berlin is surrendered?

It is our foot in the door to achieve a united Germany. That foot must stay there. It is time to use the hard sell.

Pip's Quips

Pringle Pipkin

The Student Legislature has passed a bill authorizing the appointment of a committee to investigate the possibility of getting the dirt area in front of Lenior Hall paved.

I hope something comes of this committee's work.

This bit of dirt is one of the few main artery areas which has not been paved. With students from 17 dormitories crossing this area on their way to Lenior or the academic buildings, it is one of the most heavily traveled areas on the campus.

On rainy days (or weeks as often is) your shoes get muddy and gravel is tracked into the buildings. It comes off the students' shoes and grinds up the finish on the floor as well as increasing the dust content of the air in the buildings.

While I realize the Buildings and Grounds department cannot lay walks everywhere, this area in front of Lenior Hall should have a right good priority by now.

A number of walks have been laid around the new Ackland Art Museum, and it looks as if there might be a few bricks might be left that could be put to good use.

While this problem is not many-more earth-shaking than getting a street lamp put up at the top of the stone stairs behind Lenior Hall (successfully done last year), it is an area in which student government can do something which will benefit the students.

It is good there are legislators who do not mind concerning themselves with ordinary problems with practical solutions.

If the Legislature is going to have any meaning to the average student, a balance must be maintained between idealistic and theoretical considerations and the everyday problems which concern the students . .

On Statements

Ron Shumate

The joint statement released Thursday by the IDC, IFC, and the Student Council was a big disappointment.

We had been built up for some time about the statement. We were expecting a real statement. Even The Raleigh Times was interested in the statement. The faculty was interested in the statement. EVERYONE was interested in the statement.

But the statement let us down. Very little, if anything at all, was said that hadn't already been said. The IDC resolution, passed following a heated debate Wednesday, said more than the joint statement.

The only worthwhile thing to come out of the statement was the shifting of gambling cases from the IDC court to the Stuent Council. As many of you may already know, this was done in order that uniform justice might be rendered to offenders. Heretofore the IDC court was responsible for trying such offenders. But these trials were only of dorm gamblers. The IFC, being unable to try fraternity gamblers, either reprimanded offenders or sent the cases to the Student Council. Therefore, students were being tried by two different courts for the same offense.

We all know that gambling is "contrary to the University policy established by the Board of Trustees, State law, the Campus Code, IFC policy and IDC regulations." The statement merely reminded us of this fact. But the fact remains that we need to be reminded.

The poker pots are reaching astronomical figures. Some of them are rearhing into the hundreds, and a few into the thousands, of dollars.

But we need more than reminding. All the reminding the faculty, the IDC, the IFC, the Student Council, and anyone else, can pour upon us will do no good unless, to borrow a phrase from IDC president Rudy Edwards, "appropriate and efficient action" is taken.

In the past, too many offenders have gone free with merely a reprimand. We are, supposedly, no longer children, and the poker games we are playing are not children's games. Therefore, we should not be treated as children by merely having our hands paddled whenever we do wrong.

So what are these three bodies going to do about the situation other than "reaffirm long-standing University policy." To go further, what CAN they do? They certainly can't station guards in every dorm room, every fraternity, and every other nook and cranny on campus. They certainly can't force students to turn their buddies, or themselves in.

To my knowledge, neither of the three bodies mentioned above has come up with a feasible solution. And I doubt that they will. They have let things drift along for so long now, that the situation has reached such a point that, as the IDC resolution says, "Trouble could arise and such trouble would not be an asset to the reputation of the University of North Carolina." It looks like we'll have to mark gambling as a debit to an expense account here. Because it seems that the trouble has already arisen. And it definitely isn't an asset to the University.

Someone may be able, in the future, to slow the gambling down, but it will never be stopped completely. And unless someone does something drastic, and unless they do it soon, the problem will continue to grow, and grow and grow. And then one day our children will enter as freshmen at the "Casino University."

But I guess the root of the whole problem was summed up aptly by Balzac when he said "The gambling passion lurks . . . at the bottom of every heart." We've reached the bottom.

A Discussion

One of the most interesting discussions that this viewer witnessed was held when student leaders gathered with members from the Visiting Committee of the Board of Trustees Friday in Lenoir Hall..

The discussion for a period of the time that students and trustees were together was centered around the Carolina honor system and its court structure.

The trustees seemed a little amazed that jurors were selected on the basis of interest, and one frankly pointed out that we would not like to be tried by a jury of interested individuals. Indeed, all of them had a difficult time seeing the wisdom of jurors selected by interest. The general feeling was that jurors should be selected from the great mass of the people, that a venire be taken from a jury box, and that the defense be able to rule out those whom he did not think would give him a fair trial. They also pointed out that there should be a penalty imposed for all those who refused to serve on a jury, and were slightly appalled when they found out that the defendant was usually not provided with a defense attorney.

Generally their wonder would have been alleviated if the Greer bill with the John Brooks-Norman B. Smith additions had been passed. As it was not, those student government leaders who opposed the bill including, President Furtado, Vice-President Cummings, Treasurer Gray, and Attorney-General Robinson were having a difficult time giving feeble excuses as to why this system was not in affect.

Their difficulty in explaining was no more than the difficulty of the trustees and the other students in understanding their explanations.

Eventually one trustee took up for the explainers and thought of the difficulty of time in selecting juries. However, the answer to this objection could be worked out procedurally without having the accused suffer for the inadequacies of the system. Maybe the trustees can talk some sense into student government.

By WILLIAM N. OATIS

UNITED NATIONS, N. Y. — (AP) —The United States and some associates were reported hopeful yesterday that the Soviet Union would vote for a new western compromise plan for an international outer-space program.

One western diplomat involved in sponsorship of the 20-nation resolution said he thought it would be adopted unanimously in the U.N. General Assembly's political committee, probably Monday. Another cautioned, "It's much too early to tell." No Soviet comment was forthcoming.

The new resolution was submitted here Friday night as a revision of one pending since Nov. 13. The changes aimed to meet Soviet Objections to the old one. The question remained whether they would satisfy the Russians, or whether the latter would push on with their own earlier compromise resolution, put in Tuesday.

The 20 sponsors of the new western draft decided to push it after U. S. Delegate Henry Cabot Lodge and Soviet Deputy Foreign Minister Valerian A. Zorin deadlocked Friday in negotiations on the make-up of an international commission to recommend what the U. N. should do on peaceful space research.

Their draft would put 18 countries on this commission, chosen to give balanced representation of all regions and to take in nations specially interested in such research.

But these 18 included two to which Zorin had objected—Australia and Belgium—and excluded one he had promoted—Ronania. Numbered among them were 12 pro-western countries against three Communist and three neutralist countries, giving the westerners an over all two-to-one advantage.

The Soviet resolution, on the other hand, proposed 11 countries for the commission. Numbered among these were four pro-western, four Communist and three neutralist countries, giving the Communists and neutralists an over all seven-to-four advantage.

The newly proposed list for the commission was Argentina, Australia, Belgium, Brazil, Britain, Canada, Czechoslovakia, France, India, Iran, Italy, Japan, Mexico, Poland, the Soviet Union, Sweden, the United Arab Republic and the United States.

The Soviet list was Argentina, Britain, Czechoslovakia, France, India, Poland, Romania, the Soviet Union, Sweden, the United Arab Republic and the United States.

Who will ever forget that time? The whole town turned out . . . well, maybe not the whole town...to see little Bobby Collegebound off to the University. There he was in his hand-stained bucks . . . plaidless khakis . . . and his varsity sweater. (Badminton 1, 2, 3, 4.) Sonja . . . ah, Sonja, his homeroom sweetheart, sobbed quietly. Sonja had heard stories about the co-eds. She was worried.

As the Toonerville local pulled in, another small cry was heard. It was Bobby's mother. Who will look after him? Who will warm his milk and care for his shirts? Then came the unforgettable reply. Bobby, head high, shoulders back, answered . . . "I will! I will wash my shirts." Ah, smart boy. He'll make the grade. Gone was the callow adolescence . . . for Bobby Collegebound had bought Van Heusen "Vantage" Shirts with his allowance. No longer need he be tied to Mother's apron.

His all cotton Van Heusen "Vantage" Shirts need not be ironed. Bobby Collegebound could wash his Van Heusen "Vantage" Shirts himself . . . and in a matter of hours they would be ready to wear. Day after day . . . far from home . . . Bobby would sparkle at college in his Van Heusen "Vantage" all cotton, wash and wear, no-iron shirts.

"Now," Sonja acted hysterically . . . "I've lost him forever. With all that free time in those handsome shirts, he'll be the target of every girl on campus. If only I had passed bookkeeping I could have gone, too."

As the train pulled away, Bobby's mother faced east and said . . . "Thank you, Van Heusen "Vantage," for being like a mother to my son!"

"Anyone who likes people—and selling—would like my job"

When Robert C. Schropp was a senior at the University of Omaha, he had definite ideas about his future.

"I wanted a job dealing with people—in sales or the personnel field," says Bob. "When the Bell interviewer explained how much emphasis the telephone companies put on sales and customer contacts, I knew immediately that was for me."

Bob graduated with an A.B. degree in Business in 1954, and went immediately with Northwestern Bell Telephone Company, in Omaha. Today, he is a sales supervisor with seven men reporting to him. His group is responsible for recommending and selling communications facilities like PBX switchboards, "hands free" speakerphones and "push button" telephone systems for all kinds of businesses.

"This is selling at its best," says Bob. "Customers respect the telephone company and the advice and service we can offer them. So they welcome our visits. And I'm getting valuable experience in business operations and in supervision that should help me move ahead.

"Anyone who likes people—and selling—would like my job."

Why not find out about career opportunities for you in the Bell Telephone Companies? Talk with the Bell interviewer when he visits your campus. And, meanwhile, read the Bell Telephone booklet on file in your Placement Office.

CUMMINGS PITCHES—Jack Cummings eludes a Duke pursuer and passes to Emil DeCantis. Cummings set three records yesterday though the Tar Heels bowed 7-6.

Murray: 'We Sacrificed Offense For Defense'

By STEWART PHINIZY

"I told my boys before the game that we'd win it in the second half. Our plan was to keep the players as fresh as possible. If you noticed, we shot men in and out of the lineup all day long. It was a rather hot day, in fact the hottest day day for this time of year I can remember for this time of the year and we wanted our players to conserve their strength as much as possible. That's why we substituted as much as we did. We sacrificed offense for defense," Duke's Bill Murray said.

"Naturally we are real happy with the win. It was a hard fought game all the way. This was just our day. The Carolina team deserves a lot of credit. You can't help but admire them. Their goal line stands were a great exhibition of courage.

The key to our win was our pass defense. Our defensive units played real well. I tell you this, I would have never thought we have had as many chances to score as we did," Murray said.

"We were real worried about our right halfback position before today's gade, confessed Murray. Our regular right halfback, George Dutrow was on the injured list, and we didn't know if substitute RHB Dan Lee was going to be able to play or not."

Somebody asked Murray if he thought his star halfback Wray Carlton played his finest game. Murray replied, "No I wouldn't say that, but he certainly was tremendous, wasn't he? Wray is a fine football player."

Carlton closed out his college career breaking the old Duke record of 1777 yards rushing set by Ace Parker. Carlton in four years carried the ball for 1787 yards.

Dwight Bumgarner said, "Get down inside Carolina's ten yard line, you can't move any more. Their line was tough."

Mike McGee had nothing but praise for Ronnie Koes. "Koes is the best lineman we've faced all season long."

I GOT IT—Carolina's Mac Turlington and Duke's Wade Byrd both leap high into the air after one of Jack Cummings' passes. Turlington ended his career as a Tar Heel yesterday against Duke.

Staff Meeting

Daily Tar Heel staff members will meet Tuesday at 4 p.m. in the newspaper office.

After a brief meeting, Yackety Yack pictures will be made.

Al Goldstein Breaks Collar Bone

Tatum: "I'd Rather Lose By Seven TD's"

By ELLIOTT COOPER

"I'd rather get beat 7 touchdowns than by one point," So spoke Jim Tatum after his Tar Heels lost the big game of the year to Duke by a 7-6 score.

"Losing by one point gets everyone to dreaming. The players think that if coach had just done thus and so we might have won the game, and I get to dreaming that if the players had just done something else we could have pulled it out."

"Our boys played their guts out," Tatum continued, "but we just didn't have a solid football team without Schroeder and Goldstein." Goldstein broke his collar bone late in the first half leaving the Tar Heels without the services of both of their first string ends.

A Field Goal

"I thought they (Carolina) would come back during that final drive," said Tatum, "but that final pass interception killed us. I called those plays (the pass series on Carolina's final drive) and if he (Jack Cummings) had not have had that one intercepted we would have tried a field goal on the next play. Blazer had the kicking tee in his hand."

"I thought Bill Murray handled his substitutions real well," Tatum stated. "Duke had the ball on us so much in the second half that we never could get started. I think the ball clubs are about even."

Commenting on the play of the Tar Heel line the coach said, "We were tremendous defensively; we made one goal-line stand after another."

When asked why he chose to kick for the extra point after the Tar Heel touchdown Tatum said, "We thought Duke would kick their extra points so we decided before the game to kick if we got the first score."

A Lot Of Difference

"I think it would have made a lot of difference if we had have made that extra point. I think Duke would have tried for the two points and I hoped we could have prevented their scoring them."

On the Carolina kicking game Tatum said, "I thought our kicking was very outstanding - as it has been all year. If it hadn't of been for that we wouldn't have been in the ball game."

"Klochak played a fine game. They were laying for him though. I also thought Wade Smith did very well."

Geting back to the subject of the final Carolina drive Tatum added, "Our instructions in the second half were to pass on first down and then run Klochak on second down. Then when we missed the first pass we had second and ten and had to pass again. Jack had more interceptions today than he had all the rest of the year."

The dejected Carolina coach stressed the fact that the loss of his ends really threw a cramp in his offensive plans. "The loss of Goldstein," he said, "hurt tremendously. He is the only real fast end we have without Schroeder. Mike Greenday was open sometimes in the second half but we never could hit him."

Schroeder actually did dress for the game and came out onto the field to take warmup drills, but during the drills his knee gave in on him so there was nothing for him to do but change into street clothes and watch the contest from the bench.

Al Goldstein was taken to the hospital immediately after his injury and was to have been operated on last night. Trainer John Lacey said Goldstein will be about as good as new in six weeks; according to Lacey the injury should in no way prevent him from playing next year.

McLendon Speaks In Heck Lecture

MAJ. L. P. MCLENDON
. . . in Heck Lecture Series

The University Law Students Association will sponsor a Heck Lecture tonight, with Maj. L. P. McLendon, Greensboro attorney, as guest speaker.

The program, open to the public, will began at 8 p.m. in the court room of Manning Hall. Maj. McLendon will speak on "The Relationship Between a Lawyer and his Client."

LSA president Joseph B. Chambliss of Rocky Mount will preside at the proglam, and the speaker will be introduced by the LSA speakers committee chairman, Robert W. King Jr. of Wilson.

This will be the third event in the 1958-30 Heck Lecture series, which is supported by a fund enlowed by George Heck of Glen Head, N. Y., the oldest living alumnus of the UNC Law School.

McLendon, who has been a member and vice chariman of the State Board of Higher Education since 1955, has served as a trustee of the University and of the Agricultural and Technical College at Greensboro. He received and honorary LL.D. degree from UNC in 1955.

In addition to his service to the State's program of higher education, he has been a leader in the N. C. Bar Association. In 1940 he served as president of the N. C. State Bar.

A former member of the General Assembly and former chairman of the State Board of Elections, McLendon is a graduate of the UNC School of Law, class of 1912.

Supreme Court Upholds School Placement Law

WASHINGTON — (AP) — The Supreme Court yesterday upheld legality of Alabama's school placement law. It left the way open for possible future tests on whether it is operated on a non-discriminatory basis.

The law makes no mention of race, but its chief author, State Sen. Albert Boutwell, says it is a plan to maintain segregation of Negro and white pupils.

In a brief unsigned order the court unanimously affirmed a ruling by a special three-judge federal district court in Birmingham last May holding the law to be constitutional on its face.

The three-judge court said the law furnishes the legal machinery for an orderly administration of the public schools in a constitutional manner by the admission of qualified pupils upon a basis of individual merit without regard to race or color.

"We must presume that it will be so administered," the lower court said.

"If not, in some future proceeding it is possible that it may be declared unconstitutional in its application."

The supreme court pointedly noted that it was affirming this decision "upon the limited grounds on which the district court rested its decision."

The case originated in August 1957. The parents of four Birmingham Negro pupils petitioned the city school board for admission of the children to the schools nearest their homes on a racially nondiscriminatory basis.

Attorneys for the Negroes, contending the school board failed to act on the applications in reasonable time, went to court. They contended the placement law was unconstitutional on its face and contended its purpose was to continue the separation of races in the public schools.

SALE DATE ANNOUNCED

Spectrum Gathers Campus Opinions

By VIRGIL EARLY

The new literary magazine, the Spectrum, is scheduled to go on sale at UNC, Duke and State in December 12. Quit naturally questions have been raised concerning the need for such a magazine, how it will be accepted and if it will sell.

In order to help answer these questions certain persons on campus were interviewed. They were asked only for a general statement concerning the need for such a campus publication.

Frances Gray Patton, author and instructor in creative writing: "I approve of all literary magazines. I think there is room for a new magazine if the students are interested. I believe you only have the Quarterly now?"

When asked if she feels there is such an interest Mrs. Patton replied: "They (the student) should be interested in this sort if activity. I think it is very healthy to have a rival magazine on campus."

Dr. O. B. Hardison, Professor of English: "As a teacher of English I am in favor of as much creative activity on campus as possible. If the Spectrum will provide an outlet, then I am in favor. I know some of the people connected with the Spectrum, particularly Dennis Parks. I have a great deal of respect for his good judgment. The fact that he is editor bows well for the magazine."

Dr. William S. Newman, Professor of Music: "There is a strong need for such an outlet. There has been a tendency to restore faith in the humanities in the past 4 years, and UNC has been a leader in this movement."

Mr. Paul Smith, Intimate Book Store: "I think it's an excellent idea. Independint magazines on campus are fine . . . I'm for them."

Mrs. Hogan; Bullshead Book Shop: "There certainly is a need . . . There is no outlet so far as I know for such creative expression."

A Junior at Carolina: "The Quarterly is a good magazine but it has a lot of outside material — which is fine. But, a lot of students are writing and I think a magazine featuring their work would be good."

A Sophomore: "Definitely a good thing, but can they get enough material? I think the University is big enough for 2 such magazines of this kind."

Russia Turns Down Outer Space Control

UNITED NATIONS, N. Y. — (AP) — The Soviet Union turned thumbs down yesterday on a proposal by the United States and 19 other countries to set up an 18-nation study group to lay the groundwork for U. N. exploration of outer space for peace.

Soviet deputy foreign minister Valerian Zorin served notice on the U. N. Political Committee his country would not take part in any work of the study group on the membership basis proposed by the United States and its supporters.

Zorin accused U. S. ambassador Henry Cabot Lodge of bad faith in the private negotiations for East-West agreement that collapsed last week.

"No amount of votes in this committee or the General Assembly can compel any state to cooperate with any study group unless an understanding is achieved with that state in advance on a basis of cooperation," he declared.

India, The United Arab Republic and Burma made a last minute attempt to get the United States and the Soviet Union together in private talks to see if the deadlock could be broken. India's defense minister V. K. Krishna Menon sparked the move.

The three introduced a resolution calling on the two big powers to reconsider the matter and report back on the urgent basis to the political committee on "an agreed and practical approach to this problem."

Lodge praised the authors of the resolution as "sincere men with the best of motives." But he added he believed it would do "more harm than good to try to comped futher conversations that would only aggravate tensions."

He urged the committee to proceed to a vote on the 20-nation resolution as the best course to follow.

He conceded that the Soviet Union could make an "uniquely valuable" contribution to the study of outer space for peaceful purposes, but declared he also had been assured by experts that a fruitful study could be made even though the Soviet Union boycotted it.

Eastern Air Line Strike Fouls Student Holiday Travel Plans

Capital Schedules Flight To Washington And New York

By JORGE VASQUEZ

A strike against Eastern Air Lines has abruptly affected travel plans for about 300 Carolina students who were planning to spend the Thanksgiving holidays outside of Chapel Hill.

However, a flight scheduled for Wednesday at 2:45 p.m. brought hope for students going to Washington and New York.

Capital Air Lines, which is now back in operation after a 37-day strike, is making plans to alleviate the holiday exodus from Chapel Hill.

The Continental Travel Agency official said the strike at Eastern Air Lines represents a consider able loss of money for the agency and for the air company.

Students in the Durham and Raleigh areas also face the same problem in their travel plans.

Eastern Air Lines went on strike yesterday at 10 a.m. The strike has been called by about 600 Eastern flight engineers.

There was little hope for resuming Eastern operations before Thanksgiving, an Eastern Air Lines official said.

Reservation of students that will find no place in the Washington and New York flight will be canceled.

The strike at Eastern Air Lines brings to two the number of strikes called so far. Trans World Air Lines has been on strike for four days and two other air companies are facing a halt in their operations.

Staff Meeting

Daily Tar Heel Editor Curtis Gans has reminded staff members of a meeting today at 4 p.m. in the newspaper office.

Pictures for the Yackety Yack will be made at this time.

Thanksgiving Service To Be Tonight

A campus-wide Thanksgiving service will be held tonight at 7:30 in Gerrard Hall.

The service, sponsored by the Carolina Christian Council, will include a brief sermon by Jack Roth, holder of a Danforth Foundation Fellowship in student Christian field work.

Roth has just finished his middle year at the Boston Theological Seminary and is spending a year on the UNC campus before finishing his studies in Boston.

CCC Chairman Tommy Iseley has invitel all students to attend the service and "experience what it means to be thankful as members of a University community."

Planetarium To Admit Students Free

University students will be admitted free to the first performance of "Star of Bethlehem" at the Morehead Planetarium today at 8:30 p.m. Students must present their ID cards.

This year's version of the tribute to Christmas is the original Morehead Planetarium "Star of Bethlehem" program, which was widely acclaimed by clergymen, educators, and other distinguished citizens from 1949 through 1956. It is being repeated this year in accordance with the Planetarium's objective to give its most popular programs during this tenth anniversary year.

Tony Jenzano, Planetarium manager, said students would be admitted free tonight "because we are anxious for those not acquainted with us and our "Star of Bethlehem" program to see the demonstration."

Because attendance usually increases after Thanksgiving and as Christmas approaches, it would be almost impossible to have free admission other than tonight he said.

The Planetarium seats about 450. There wil be only one performance tonight.

'Drys' Group For Battle On ABC Vote

Neil Clark has been named temporary chairman of a group pledged to fight the establishment of ABC stores in Orange county in a special election here Feb. 3.

Meeting at the University Baptist Church Friday night, the "dry" forces organized after hearing the Rev. R. M. Hauss, Shelby, say that at least 1,500 more registered voters will be needed.

Rev. Hauss urged the local "drys" to put the pressure on clergymen, representatives and other county leaders to take an active part in the campaign. State Sen. Ed Lanier will probably be asked to become county chairman.

Rev. Hauss told that "about half" of Chapel Hill's ministers could be counted on to take no stand on the issue, urged the 40 persons in attendance to "approach them anyhow, and light a fire under them."

The group will meet again at Hillsboro Sunday.

Carrington Wins Again

For the fourth time, Ken Carrington has won The Daily Tar Heel football contest. There have been five contests this season.

However, Malcolm McLean came close to winning this time. Both he and Carrington correctly listed the winners of nine games Saturday. But McLean, in the consolation tie-breaker, was 6 points above the 36 guessed by Carrington as the total number of points in the Duke-UNC game.

Wake Student Charged With Malicious Damage

An 18 year old Wake Forest student was charged here with malicious damage over the weekend.

Police reported they saw William Elbert Burgess jumping on the convertible top of a car parked at South building. When the officers gave chase he ran but was overtaken by the police.

Four other youths were picked up by police for allegedly tampering with an automobile behind Cobb Dorm. All were released Sunday morning in the custody of their parents.

In other weekend action the following arrests and charges were made:

Edward F. Furjanic, 22, speeding 55 mph in a 35 mph zone;

Michael Merbaum, parking violation;

Walton C. Sewell, 21, parking at hydrant;

Jack A. Hayes, public drunkenness;

Joe Hewett, public drunkenness and

Vacation Weather Is Unsettled

By MARY ALICE ROWLETTE

Weather — that good, reliable topic usually reserved to fill in conversational lulls — somehow manages to assume a place of primary importance in the minds of students a few days before a holiday.

According to the weather bureau at the Raleigh-Durham Airport, showers and clouds may share the Thanksgiving holidays with the usual turkey anl dressing this week.

Forecasters said yesterday that the weather may be "unsettled" but temperatures will probably remain "about the same" in this area.

Students who plan to fly home become so preoccupied with the weather that some have even been known to cut classes so that they could watch the cloud formations.

The weather bureau was unable to predict flying conditions for the week, but one forecaster did say that he felt the main force which might keep planes on the ground would be the airline strikes.

But who cares? Regardless of what the weather decides to dish out, that turkey will taste just the same.

Bus Schedule Is Announced

The following bus schedule for students leaving the University for the Thanksgiving holidays has been announced by H. C. Pearce, bus terminal agent:

Di Organizes Tonight

An organizational meeting of the Dialectic Senate will be held tonight at 8 o'clock on the fourth floor of New West.

Phi Topic Is DeGaulle

The accomplishments of General Charles DeGaulle and the Fifth French Republic will be the topic of debate at the Phi Society's meeting tonight.

The Phi will debate a bill proclaiming General DeGaulle "Man of the Year" for his leadership in the establishment of a sounder government and economy for France.

In recent elections for the newly constituted Assembly many right-wing parties rode DeGaulle's coat-tails to an overwhelming victory. The Communist share in the vote dropped from its usual 25 per cent to around 20 per cent. Other left-wing parties suffered similar losses.

In a country which has been noted for its strong left-wing vote, this amounts to a major reversal of party allegiance. While all the evidence seems to indicate that DeGaulle will pursue a moderate course, the upsurge of conservative and reactionary parties may force him to change his policy.

In the past General DeGaulle has been identified in the United States with reactionary attitudes and mossback conservatism. The issue tonight will be decided on the question of his sincerity in adopting a moderate course of action and maintaining it.

The Phi will meet at 8 p.m. in Phi Hall on the fourth floor of New East building. All interested persons have been invited to attend.

Vote Protest Goes To Student Council

Davis Young's request for a re-vote of last week's sophomore class president election will be considered by the Student Council tonight.

If the Council decides Young's protest is valid, it will ask the Elections Board for a re-vote.

Young, running on the Student Party ticket, was defeated by University Party candidate Charlie Graham by two votes, 273-271.

The reasons Young gave for asking for a re-vote were:

1) No ballots were distributed to the sophomores who were in the Infirmary Tuesday.

2) The ballot boxes in Town Men's III and IV were picked up and taken to Graham Memorial before the election officially ended at 6 p.m.

3) The ballot box in Everett Dormitory could not be located or brought to Graham Memorial until after 6 p.m. on the day of the election.

Graham said last week that Young had the "privilege" of appealing the election to the Student Council.

Present Generation Diverted--Reston

"Never has a generation been so diverted from great events as this one."

James Reston, New York Times diplomtic correspondent, told a group of journalism student yesterday that the changing roles of life anl the tremendous rise of population creating problems in the home and community, caused serious preoccupation.

Only when people become involved in events that startle them out of preoccupation are they made aware of the world around them, he said.

While discussing the role of the press of today, he said he believed its educational function was the greatest, but added later that it had not been developed by newspapers. "The press is more important now than ever before. It serves as a watchman on the walls."

He explained that in the extended governmental bureaus the press is necessary to open the issues for debate. "In this function there is a need for specialization and more aggressive reporting."

Reston discussed the presidential press conference and its value. He said the greatest danger would be the opposite of the press confrence. "There can be no deception or ghost writing with a press conference." The President, however, should have a 15 minute off-the-record discussion after the press conference and should be permitted to revise and extend his remarks.

When particularly difficult questions come up, the President should offer a prepared answer at a later time rather than refuse to comment, Reston suggested.

After Reston's remarks he answered the questions the students raised.

James Reston, his wife and son Jimmy were the weekend guests of Journalism Dean Norval Neil Luxon. Saturday the Restons were guests of President William Friday at the Duke-Carolina football game, and later at the president's luncheon.

Playbill Still Has Openings

Playbill, the new student publication, is still looking for an editor and business manager.

Interviews for these two positions will be held Tuesday in the Woodhouse Conference Room of Graham Memorial.

The editor and business manager will be members of the Publication Board and compensation will be provided for their work.

Playbill will provide a program for campus activities and coming events. Income will be provided through advertising and office space will be available.

Strassler To Sing In Don Jose Role

From operetta to oratorio, as singer and conductor, Gene Strassler brings a varied background of musical experience to the tenor role of Don Jose in Bizet's opera, "Carmen."

Co-starring with Claramae Turner of the Metropolitan Opera, Strassler will appear in the concert version of "Carmen," which will be presented in January by the UNC Music Department.

Strassler, a graduate assistant and voice teacher, has appeared previously in "The Marriage of Figaro" (the baritone role of Dr. Bartolo) and in the Playmakers' musical, "Brigadoon."

In addition to performances, he has been conductor for two Playmaker productions: "Seventeen" and "Oklahoma."

Strassler, a native of Appolo, Pa., entered the UNC graduate school as a student in musicology in 1954. Before that he had been director of the educational FM radio station in Springville, N. Y.

Masters degrees were awarded Strassler from Juilliard School of Music and Columbia University. At present, besides his singing, teaching and working on a dissertation, Strassler is studying voice with Walter Golde in Chapel Hill.

Other members of the cast who will appear in the January production of "Carmen" include: Joel Carter of the Music Department faculty, Martha Fouse, Brian Klitz, James Pruett, Marilyn Zschau and Rebecca Carnes.

Conducting the production will be Dr. Wilton Mason, associate professor of music.

Riddle

H. L. Riddle, in commenting to a Daily Tar Heel reporter, spoke well of the Board of Trustees' cognizance of some of the more basic needs of the University.

He pointed to the need for a new student union, better dormitory construction, and relief from the self-liquidating program of room rent as three things that could benefit the University greatly in the future in the way of student needs.

He pointed also to the need for more competitive faculty salaries as something basically needed in the University.

In every case, he has shown some insight into some of the problems that are facing Carolina. He has showed that he has the realization that there is more to a University than just the academic side of University life, and that students need a healthy outlet to channel their activities toward.

He showed an awareness that the dormitory construction at the University has not quite been what it should be, and that the self-liquidating program is becoming an increasing burden on the individual student.

He displayed an evident further awareness that in order to raise the standards of the University, one must have a faculty which is of such high quality as to recommend itself to the most qualified students, and that this takes money.

When the General Assembly convenes to consider the budget of the University, it should look to the cogency of this man's view on the state of things in Chapel Hill.

Telegram

The bill introduced by Ed Levy to send a telegram to Governors Faubus and Almond denouncing their school closing efforts of the past several months represents a commendable effort to get the student will voiced in an area where students should all be concerned.

Outside the objectors who believe that segregation should be maintained at all cost, the majority of students on the UNC campus do not support efforts which deprive children of their opportunity for education. The Student Legislature would be doing well to express that will — the will of a law abiding state.

There are those who object to the form the telegram is taking, since they feel a letter would suffice, but the effect and impact of southern students being aroused by these efforts to deny children the right to schooling depends on the money expended for a telegram and the dispatch in which it is handled. A letter clearly would not point to the urgency of the situation as a telegram might.

The passage of Levy's bill as it stands is important.

Postponement

Don Furtado ruled wisely in his veto of the suspension of the election law.

The need for delaying the election runoff was clearly seen last week by the passage of the bill to suspend the election law, however, they moved the election up so that it would be impossible to discuss the issues before election time.

However, Furtado's move will necessitate delaying the election even further, thus providing for the open discussion of all issues. This will be beneficial.

Letters

Editor:

Being one among billions, an individual is important to no one except himself and his immediate family. Others don't care about him.

As compared with the world's populatios, one person is similar to the size of a bacterium. It doesn't matter whether he lives or not: the world never misses him. Thousands of others will succeed him in his place of minuteness.

All this being true, then why is it that he thinks so highly of himself? Why doesn't he face reality and see how important he really is instead of appearing so proud?

Constantly he acts as if his every move is being watched by the whole world and as if they are going to affect all mankind.

How wonderful it would be if he and all others like him could only return to the level of human beings.

Every once in awhile. I see something that makes me want to cuss and cry at the same time.

One such event happened last Friday afternoon at the parade. Oh, it was a nice parade. The streets were lined with people who had come to look at it. There were students and older people and little children. A lot of people even got dressed up for the occasion. And it was a happy parade with its combination of ingenious floats and beautiful floats and just plain sloppy floats all dedicated to the same cause—to say in many ways "Beat Duke!" The bands played marching songs that beat right into your blood and there were girls wearing evening dresses and there were girls with silver in their hair.

Everybody was in good spirits. The Deke float members were in good spirits, also, and by the time they reached Stevens-Shepherd territory which was almost the end of the parade they could no longer contain themselves. They began to throw eggs.

Raw eggs.

Now there may be some protests from the Dekes for printing this fact. But these are the facts: the boys sitting inside the boat-like float began throwing eggs wildly and furiously.

Oh, what the hell, a few eggs, is that all?

Not quite. Because three people were in the way of these eggs.

An older man with a nice suit.

A little girl of about three who was wearing what was obviously a brand new dress.

The eggs flew carelessly and hit their mark. The woman looked in horror at her coat. The little girl looked down in awe at her egg spattered little dress and screamed. And the man calmly removed his coat and wiped at it with his handkerchief.

Someone said to him: "You ought to send the cleaning bill to the bastards."

He laughed. "Oh, that's all right. They're just having fun."

So, the parade was fun for almost everybody. And the egg-throwers were able to take out their mob-instincts on three people and makes asses of themselves and their fraternity.

Can fun and respect for other human beings not be synonymous? Grow up, egg-slingers. Grow up.

The Hate Wave

Eric Sayareid

Local authorities as well as touring senators are looking into the newest outburst of bombings in schools and synagogues. In the last year, a number of Jewish temples and community centers have been bombed, and three integrated schools — the latest at Osage, West Virginia. Said the sheriff at Osage, "We have a racial problem among ourselves here; this thing must have been done by someone from the outside." Not a local hater daring to express his wrath at what he sees before his eyes by a most dangerous gesture.

The outsider, so called, can come and go away again. Safer for him. All this suggests that the violent people doing these deadly acts are organized in some manner. There is virtue as well as evil in this fact. They are more dangerous when organized, but they are also, one would think, more easily discovered and broken up; that is arways the inherent risk run by all subversives when they take to organization. It is doubtful that these people are numerous enough or shrewd and disciplined enough to adopt the Communist system of separate cells, any one of which can die without involving any other.

These activists, so called, will almost surely be discovered and put away, and in time this wave of activated hatred will end. It may take a while. This kind of thing or the danger of this kind of thing is likely to be with us as long as the public scene is agitated by bitter quarreling over school integration by leaders in public life. Leaders who defy authority and law in these matters sincerely deplore and denounce the acts of violence; but they themselves, through not intending so, have encouraged these acts and share the responsibility.

One of the curious things about the hatemongers is that they usually lie low, smoldering in private until they see, or think they see, a lead from much higher quarters. This give them the illusion of justification for what they have always wanted to do in the privacy of their unhappy minds. Until then they are merely the barroom snarlers, the scrawlers on walls in the night, the semi-literate authors of the anonymous postcards. They are not very brave people; the courage of hatred is not quite like the courage of conviction.

Another curious thing about the haters is that they feel an identity of interest with one another, though the objects of their individual hatreds may vary widely. The intellectual-hater is drawn to the foreigner-hater, the Jew-hater to the Negro-or Catholic-hater. Let one group begin to hate publicly, especially if it has a lead from some national figure and the others immediately start to crawl out from under the rocks. This happened in the McCarthy era, where the prime and public object of hatred was Communism and, often, merely alleged Communism. This emboldened all the other haters to strike at their special and very different targets. The same thing is happening now, when the prime and public object is prevention of racial integration in the schools.

In the emotional if not the economic sense, we are a class society; members of the tolerant class recognize and draw near to one another, and so do the intolerant. —THE REPORTER

What Are The Republicans?

William Lee Miller

For six years now, Mr. Eisenhower has been working at this political thing, and he doesn't seem to be getting much closer to understanding it than when he started. In the baffled remarks at his press conference on the morning after the elections, he showed once more what a wonderall—a quite representative confusion, and therefore related to ful confusion he can make of it his own great personal appeal but not of much use in a political way to anyone else.

His remarks came at the start of that struggle which always follows each election, the struggle to interpret the results. Sometimes this battle can be almost as intense and as important as the one that preceded it: policies, candidates, and factions can win and lose by having victory or defeat convincingly ascribed to them. Among the victors, each group tries to find its own principles responsible for the victory; in this case, Johnsonian moderation, for example, or forthright liberaliam. ("The Democratic Party has won a mandate," said Mr. Stevenson, possibly to the surprise of some dairy farmers and others, "to provide the thoughtful and creative leadership our nation needs in this dangerous time.")

The struggle among the vanquished is even more intense, each faction trying to find the other one responsible for the defeat. While in one column of the New York Herald Tribune Roscoe Drummond finds modern Republicanism strong even in the party's loss, just a column away David Lawrence insists that Republicans can't win when their modernism keeps hordes of true conservatives home from the polls. (The election provided a clue to the whereabouts of those hidden hordes of Taftian Republicans, by the way; they seem to be secreted somewhere in the mesas of Arizona.)

At 7:45 on the evening after the election, Edward R. Murrow explained that the clearest meaning in the election was the defeat of conservative Republicanism, but three-quarters of an hour earlier Fulton Lewis, Jr., had advanced a much more striking, if less convincing, argument exactly to the contrary. The Republicans won, he said, when they were independent of Eisenhower and true to Republican principles (Goldwater, Hruska, and—well—Keating), and they lost when they tried to follow Eisenhower into a hyphenated me-too "modern" Republicanism indistinguishable from Democratic radicalism (Thye, Potter, Payne, and even Watkins). Mr. Lewis managed somehow to wind this interpretation around the defeat of Malone, Barrett, and Bricker (in these races there was a close finish, or overconfidence, or something) and the victory of Rockefeller and Scott (those didn't involve national issues). Never mind about Knowland. Mr. Lewis's whole analysis was a work of awe-inspiring ingenuity.

Mr. Eisenhower's intepetation was impressive for quite different reasons Like Mr. Lewis, he is consistent, but his consistency serves no Republican faction. Though verbally firm in his desire to promote a "modern Republicanism," he was his usual amorphous self in relating that desire to the election returns. His remarks really link him not to a new Republicanism but to an old Americanism: to the sturdy tradition that finds politics baffling and tries to deal with its shifting and limited conflicts over policy with huge, static, noncontroversial, and usually inapplicable words about character, personal relations, and broad (very broad) principle.

One could see it in the President's repeated insistence that he had been "preaching" exactly the same thing for six years, as though the constancy of his own rhetoric ought to have been matched by an equally constant support on the part of the public, and as though the purity of doctrine preached, rather than the effect of action taken or not taken, should have been the test. One could see it, too, in the perplexed reference to a "complete reversal" in 1958 of the 1956 results: there is a curious pathos in this popular hero's lack of comprehension of the nonpolitical bases of his own victories. Apparently he will continue to the end to believe that his good Americabelieve that, he said after the 1956 can friends voted not for him (to election, would be 'egotistical") but for the "principles" of "modernR epublicanism." How difficult that would be was clear from the same press conference: Republicanism seemed to consist in being for peace, in keeping the economy on an even keel, and—with rather sudden urgency—in nonspending; modernity seemed to extend all the way over to John Bricker.

That last matter really showed in a clear light Mr. Eisenhower's trouble with the mysteries of politics. Asked whether the absence of such men as Senators Malone and Bricker might not actually make it easier to pass some programs of his own, such as foreign aid, he said he would not want to predict about that. Except for the one thing of the Bricker amendment, he felt that he and the senator were rather in the same camp; certainly their personal relations were friendly, and he wasn't going to do anything so tasteless and unfriendly as actually to look up the man's voting record.

Notes In Review

Arthur Lessing

With an impressive recital, the second concert in the Duke All Star Series, Gary Graffman demonstrated with unmistaken power and talent that he is among the growing number of outstanding young American pianists. His performance in Page Auditorium last Friday evening revealed an artist with all the technical and artistic equipment to develop into a truly great pianist — if he continues along the path he has chosen for himself: a concern for music as an end in itself, not merely a means to present the artist. For it was precisely the care and concern with the music itself that made for an evening of music of the highest artistry in this pianist's playing. Mr. Graffman has an unassuming stage appearance; there is little to see with the eyes for he does not indulge in unnecessary motions with his head or hands. But there is plenty to hear.

The program opened with the Haydn Sonata in G Major. Graffman's palying was a revelation. He took Haydn out of the moth-balls of stale interpretation and flat performance and revealed a musical spirit that rightfully puts Haydn with the greatest composers of the classical period. The music was played with a freshness that belongs to the composer. So often Haydn's music is performed either in the dramatic fashion of Beethoven or with the refinement of Mozart. But here the artist brought out what is so particularly Haydn: a sense of containment, proportion, and light spirit that is never dull and always new and surprising. The pianist's concern with detail, his sensitivity to ranges of musical feeling, and his understanding of the real character of Haydn's music made the performance, for me, the highlight of the program. Not only rescuing Haydn, but then giving him all the brightness and love he so obviously deserves made the opening of Graffman's concert a very happy event indeed.

The artist next performed the Variations and Fugue on a Theme of Handel by Brahms. Here was evident the total range of the pianist's playing. He seems to be able to always get into the tone of the piano with his touch, and the approach toward the music he plays, therefore, appears to be one of working into the music, rather than at it. Futhermore, this approach is musically justified by staying as colse to the composer's intentions as possible. His care for the detail, his sense of a working interpretation rather than a demonstrative one, his concern with the tone and mind of the composer are all elements that make the performance authoritative and complete. He has a technique which can take care of all technical difficulties so again his attention is not to his own playing but the music itself.

The work itself is a wonderful series of variations whir some of the most lovely music Brahms wrote for the piano. Especially the more rhapsodic parts are truly "deep" in their sweeping breath and spaciousness. The performer has his hands full with a brilliant variety of mood, color, and feeling. Graffman was completely up to the task. In time, I hope, he will develop in his playing a little more of abandon and "give" that Brahms demands. The sense of impulsiveness in Brahms gives him that musical richness and excitement that is to be found in all his works. The performer must be a bit reckless in playing Brahms in order to get this quality across. Graffman's concern with detail makes this, for the moment, impossible.

After the intermission, the pianist performed Chopin's Two Nocturnes Opus 27 and the frighteningly difficult Paganini-List Etudes. In the former the music did not convey enough to make the performance particularly effective, while in the latter work, the pianist revealed a staggering technique which rolled through trills, octave runs, chromatic scales with the greatest of ease. I much preferred the music of the first part of his program to the acrobatics of List. Fortunately he played, as an encore, a sonata of Scarlatti where Graffman could once again show that he is an artist first and a technician second.

One made Nikita mad;
Then there were nine.
Nine little Bolsheviks still feeling great,
One eyed Nikita's job;
Then there were eight.
Eight little Bolsheviks looking up to heaven,
One made a speech for peace;
Then there were seven.
Seven little Bolsheviks in an awful fix,
One read "Zhivago,"
Then there were six.
Six little Bolsheviks lucky they're alive,
One liked Americans;
Then there were five.
Five little Bolsheviks feeling sad and sore,
One urged disarmament;
Then there were four.
Four little Bolsheviks up in a tree,
One dropped a secret,
Then there were three.
Three little Bolsheviks in an awful stew,
One knew a bit too much;
Then there were two.
Two little Bolsheviks wishing they could run,
One turned the other in;
Then there was one.
One little Bolshevik lying down to rest,
With nine ugly grinning ghosts sitting on his chest;
Thinking of the crimes he did, full of dreams that burn,
Staring through the lonely night, waiting for his turn.

Yack Contest

Ron Shumate

The Yackety Yack beauty contest in Memorial Hall Tuesday night might well have been called "The Yackety Yack Burlesque Show."

I say this not because of any slackness on the part of co-chairman Don Millen and Harriette Dwelle, or Yack editor Cameron Cooke, or any of the many others who helped produce the contest.

The pageant was turned into a "burlesque" by the single effort of a certain Ty Boyd, who was reminescent of Milton Berle at his worst.

I'm certain Mr. Boyd had good intentions with his many remarks, jokes (after a fashion), and the like. But the fact remains that the remarks which were obviously made in an effort to relax the girls as they came through the pillared arch-way, embarrassed them and made them more nervous than they ordinarily would have been.

Many of the girls appeared nervous enough as it were, but many of Boyd's comments could well have gone unsaid .

I speak of such remarks to the girls as "I saw you in the back row of the Carolina theater last night. Were you studying again?" and ". . . an old neighbor of mine. We lived in the same apartment house. She slept all night while I stayed up. Unfortunately."

There were other remarks, too numerous and too off-color to mention here. Some were really funny, and no doubt did help to relax the girls.

He also "entertained" the audience with jokes during intermissions. Some of these jokes were funny, others fell flat. Some of them were the type of jokes which were appropriate for the situation. The majority were "back-room" jokes.

But enough of Mr. Boyd. He said he wondered what Anthony Wolff's reaction to the pageant would be. Maybe he doesn't realize that other people write for the Tar Heel too.

The program, per se, was very well organized, but it was clearly and simply too long. Why, if 112 girls must compete, couldn't the pageant be conducted like the Miss America contest?

That is, have all contestants compete one night, and then hold the semi-finals and finals the following night. Another suggestion might be to have competition other than in evening gowns. It seems that the judges accomplished the impossible in choosing One Single Solitary beauty out of 111 beautiful faces. Because, other than poise, and a few other little unimportant things, they had nothing to judge but faces. And I think the girl who represents 7,000 other students in the year-book should be judged on something other than her pretty face.

The contestants, or at least the finalists, should at least be allowed to say something into the Boyd-corrupted microphone. "Beauty is only skin deep," you know.

The only other suggestion I have to make at this time was, I hope implied earlier. And that is, DON'T have Ty Boyd back next year. He has a whole year to dig up more smutty jokes with which to embarrass scared beauty contestants.

After the contest was over Tuesday night, I happened to hear Mr. Boyd ask a member of the UNC faculty if he (Boyd) had "embarrassed the University." He was told "No." What does it take to embarrass the University?

UNC Playwright Aids 'Teddy's' Rebirth

By DELL H. LITTLE

While many U. S. communities have been celebrating the centennial year of Theodore Roosevelt's birth, "Teddy" has come back to life again in a small town in the heart of the North Dakota Badlands.

Much of the credit for restoring "T. R." to his old familiar haunts goes to UNC playwright Thomas Patterson, who wrote the script for "Old Four-Eyes," the first outdoor drama to go west.

Presented for the first time last summer in Medora, N. D., the play had such a good reception with overflow attendance that a second drama about General Custer has already been announced in that state for a 1959 premiere. Patterson has been commissioned to write the new drama also.

North Carolina's influence on the Roosevelt drama does not stop with Patterson, for key figures in its creation include Paul Gene Strassler of Chapel Hill, and Frederick G. Walsh, formerly of UNC Playmakers director Samuel Selden also has been a main adviser to the drama planners.

"Old Four-Eyes" is proof that 2,400 miles is no barrier to artistic cooperation. And it is the sequel to a drama exchange that dates back 40 years.

Medora, now a town with a population of 150, has remained much as it was in its territorial cowtown days, when the 24-year-old Roosevelt went west seeking better health and a new environment after personal tragedy in his family.

"Teddy" arrived in the Badlands in 1883: his appearance in the rough frontier town drew attention, and his eyeglasses brought the derisive nickname of "Four Eyes." But after the "soft" easterner had whipped a drunken cowboy, the pokes and jibes changed to the affectionate title of "Old Four-Eyes."

Playwright Patterson tells of the three years in which T. R. became a bona fide Badlands rancher, and an integral part of a frontier community. Roosevelt later commented, "I would have never been President if it had not been for my experience in North Dakota.

OTHER CHARACTERS

That frontier community was founded by another highly colorful figure whose story is told in the Medora drama — the Marquis de Mores, Antoine de Vallombrosa. This wealthy French nobleman drew international fame for his plans of a cattle and meat-packing empire, and his attempts to set up a stagecoach line between North and South Dakota.

"Old Four-Eyes" tells also of A. T. Paskard, founder of the frontier newspaper, "The Badlands Cowboy," and of the cowboys, outlaws and townspeople of the area.

The rugged and picturesque Badlands above Medora are the site for the Burning Hills Amphitheater, where the drama was given three nights weekly from June 29 through Labor Day.

More performances each week will be scheduled for the 1959 season, Patterson reports, but there will be no enlarging of the present seating capacity of 1,700. "You can't create the proper impact of the play for an audience without the intimacy of a small amphitheater," Patterson feels.

But expansion is obvious in nearby communities, whose economy has received a boost from the crowds of people who flocked in to see the drama. They came in overflow numbers every night, with from 100 persons to a high of 1,500 turned away at various performances.

Housing and eating facilities were completely swamped, Patterson reported, and business was affected for 250 miles on U. S. Highway 10, the main east-west artery from Chicago to the Northwest.

North Dakota's governor, John E. Davis, has taken an active role in drama promotion, realizing the need for such attractions in his land of wide, open spaces and many travelers.

Patterson thinks it is most appropriate that North Carolinians should be the bearers of the outdoor drama to North Dakota, whose University gave up "Proff" Frederick Kock, founder of the Carolina Playmakers, when he came to Chapel Hill in 1918.

The director, Walsh, studied in Chapel Hill under a Rockefeller Foundation Fellowship and completed his M. A. degree in 1940. He holds other degrees from N. C. State College and Western Reserve University, and has been on the technical staff of "The Lost Colony" at Manteo. As a further credential, Walsh has done a survey in disserfation from of "Outdoor Commemorative Drama in the U. S., 1900-1950."

Music for "Old Four-Eyes" was composed by Gene Strassler, who is a graduate assistant in the UNC Department of Music, while working toward his Ph. D. degree.

In the drama a ballad singer acts as narrator, strumming a guitar. A large rock jutting from the hillside is his stage, an example of how the natural terrain has been incorporated into "Old Four-Eyes."

Selection of Patterson as the playwright was a round-about process: the drama organizers, who originally thought in terms of a one-week celebration, sought advice from New York playwright Howard Lindsay, whose wife is a native of North Dakota.

Lindsay passed on the query to Sam Selden, director of the Carolina Playmakers and chairman of the UNC Department of Dramatic Art, who made the contact with his assistant director, Tom Paterson. Selden's additional aid included helping choose the theater site, and serving on the advisory council of the Theodore Roosevelt National Memorial Park and Badlands Association, the drama's sponsoring group.

USED HAGEDORN'S STORY

Patterson used Herman Hagedorn's classic story of "Roosevelt in the Bad Lands" to draft a script in the rushed six weeks allotted him last spring. After attending a performance of the play, Hagedorn praised it as "like living with Theodore Roosevelt again."

The success and warm reception given the play is due, in Patterson's opinion, to the solid character of Roosevelt himself, "for was simple. It also dealt with material within the memory of people now living, so we must stick pretty close to the truth." He sums up the play as a simple story of good versus bad, with comedy, and no dances or Indians."

Democracy — It Isn't Doing So Very Badly

The fate of democracy is occupying a large part of the attention of the world's political philosophers as well as of Western diplomats these days.

There has been a rise of military governments recently in a number of newly independent countries. Despite the moderate actions of Gen. Charles De Gaulle, there is still muchw orry about the future of France.

British and Aemrican publications are full of explanations as to the reasons—economic pressures, lack of administrative experience, political immaturity and the like.

Pakistan, Burma, Sudan, Egypt, Iraq and Thailand are among those falling under military dictatorship in the last few years, many in the last few months. The military is on the ascendant in Indonesia. The pendulum is always swinging back and forth in Latin America.

Yet much of the moaning fails to take several factors into consideration. Many of these countries still are in trial periods following feudal or colonial rule. None of the patterns can yet be considered definite. If Latin America has been unable to establish permanent democraic systems in all its years of independence, shall we cry, or rejoice that definite progress has been made?

The African and Asian nations are being born in a far more trying period, and have had far less time.

Also, to strike a balance, it can be argued that democracy has earned an overwhelming victory since World War II.

Its success in India, with the attempt to wipe out the caste system, is admittedly limited yet still very great.

The same is true of West Germany and Japan, where democratic advances are still to be tested by time, but where progress shows signs of being more important than all of the temporary failures.

There is just beginning in Africa a new experiment led by Guinea and Ghana, the one newly independent of France and the other of Britain. They have proclaimed themselves as the nucleus of a United States of Africa modeled directly on the experience of the early American colonies.

There is vast difference and vast difficulty in this concept.

The American colonies were led by men with centuries of sound political evolution behind them. Their federation represented, in a way, a climax rather than a beginning of democracy.

The colonies also had before them for development the western hinterland of a continent full of riches. Without that, American democracy, still not ideally achieved, might have failed in the very beginning.

Such a development in Africa, against the background of a world in which even the most forward countries find themselves hopelessly incapable of solving their difficulties, is indeed a long chance to be taking.

Democracy, like the woman in "Porgy and Bess," is a sometimes thing. But if you throw Germany, Japan and India into the balance, it dosen't realy sleem to be doing so badly.

SP Officer Election Date Set

The Student Party held its first meeting since last Tuesday's election last night at 7:30. The meeting was mainly devoted to discussion of the party equality in the Student Legislature and announcements.

It was announced that election of new party officers will be held at the next meeting of the party on Monday, Dec. 8.

Gary Geer noted that the four independents who hold the balance of power in the legislature have all been associated at one time or another with the Student Party. Thus there is a strong possibility that the party will be able to have much of its platform put into effect.

Greer and party chairman Leon Holt both urged all SP members of the legislature to attend all sessions.

It was announced that election of new party officers will be held at the next meeting of the party on Monday, Dec. 8.

New Senators Cause Pecking Order Shuffle

By ARTHUR EDSON

WASHINGTON — (AP) — They're really scratching around in that amiable old henyard, the U. S. Senate.

The henyard — that's a Congressman's description, not mine — is busy right now because 16 new Senators will be checking in for the new congress. And getting Senators settled properly in their offices is as complicated as making out a guest list for a diplomatic banquet.

Rep. Clair Engle (D-Calif) has been in the house since Aug. 31, 1943. There he worked his way up to the Chairmanship of the Interior and Insular Affairs Committee. Furthermore, he comes to the Senate from a big, important (and often politically entertaining) state, California.

He would rate high among the newcomers, wouldn't he?

Well, Enyle said recently that it added up to no higher than fourth place.

"I understand they have a very firm pecking order in the senate, just as they do in the henyard," he said.

"I get peck no. 4."

Peck No. 1 among the newcomers goes to Jennings Randolph, a new senator from West Virginia.

Randolph, a Democrat, was elected to fill out the unexpired term of Sen. Matthew Neely (D-Va), who died in January. That means he steps in a senator immediately. He has an office here, his secretary answers, "Sen. Randolph's office," but if you want to be technical about it, congress isn't in session so he probably won't be sworn in until Jan. 7, 1959, with the rest of the new crop.

And how is the rest of the pecking order determined?

If a man ever has served in the house, he is given credit. (Curiously, if a man were elected to congress in 1934, served one term and was beaten, he still would have seniority over a man who was elected in 1936 and had served ever since).

Being a Governor also helps, and finally, if everything else is equal, the man from the state with the larger population gets first choice.

Policy Cards Not Being Issued

No student insurance policy cards are being issued this year because many students lost them in the past.

George L. Coxhead, administrator of the plan at UNC, said yesterday the cards are not necessary as far as filing claims is concerned. Alphabetical lists of students enrolled in the plan are at the infirmary and the dean of student affairs' office.

Brochures which have been given out explain the claim procedure and instructions are available at the Infirmary and the dean of student affairs' office.

Anyone who paid the fee is enrolled in the plan.

The deadline for enrolling in the plan was Oct. 10.

An old phrase reads, "It's all over but the shouting." Here at Carolina, it's all over including the shouting. The Tar Heels finished just like they did last year, with a 6-4 record, in one of the most confusing seasons anyone can remember.

After dropping the first two games of the year, they rolled off six straight. Then they dropped the last two. So, the season was a little rough around the edges, but it was great in the middle. For six weeks joy reigned supreme on the campus.

The last one hurt the worst of all. A one point loss to the most heated rival, and a quick trip down the ladder of bowl prospects.

The Duke game could have been won so many times we shudder to think about it. There were so many "ifs" in that one contest the mere word grows monotonous with usage. But they didn't win.

DUKE GOT THE BREAKS

The Tar Heels have absolutely nothing to be ashamed of in losing to the Blue Devils. They ran into a team that was about on par with them, but Duke was fired up and good. The Dukes got the breaks. Not one of the 44,000 fans who witnessed the battle will disagree. They did everything right, Carolina did everything wrong.

Carolina played the best defensive game we have ever seen any one team play in high school, college, or pro ball. We say this even after they were scored upon; even after the last of the game. Those goal line stands leave one groping for adjectives.

GOAL LINE STANDS UNBELIEVABLE

It was almost unbelievable that the Heels could stop the Devils so many times with the shadow of their own goal posts looming over their heads. Time and time again the line bowed its respective neck and held firm.

But they didn't score enough. The offense didn't click, for Duke was almost as good defensively as were the Tar Heels. Both teams scored as a direct result of intercepted passes, and neither could get a sustained drive going all day.

MORE "IF'S"

Back to the if department — IF Carolina hadn't had five passes IF they hadn't fumbled twice; IF they had made that first down; IF they had made the extra point; IF Duke hadn't made the extra point; IF Butch Allie hadn't intercepted that last pass . . . but this can go on forever, and the fact remains that a thousand and one ifs won't change that score on the scoreboard when the final gun sounded.

In spite of their record, the Tar Heels played some fine ball this season. They pulled some remarkable feats, too. Example: No team that they played scored on the Heels through the air. Quarterbacks like Harvey White, George Izo, and Bob Brodhead failed to hit for a touchdown via a pass throughout the season.

CUMMINGS SET RECORDS

They led the ACC in many departments. They set some records. Jack Cummings surpassed three ACC marks and one UNC record Saturday. Cummings set new highs in passing, total offense, and passing for Carolina.

A win over Duke would have landed Carolina a bowl bid without doubt. Now Clemson will probably face LSU on New Year's day in New Orleans. South Carolina, a team the Heels defeated, has even been mentioned as a possible Gator Bowl candidate.

HEATED RIVALRY COOLED FAST

The fierce rivalry that flared all last week ended abruptly and disastrously for Carolina on Saturday. The bonfire raid, the painting raids, the BEAT DOOK parade, the game itself are gone; and one is left with an empty feeling. So much depended on that game, and so much was lost.

Some of the best football players ever to wear the baby Blue and White closed out their careers as Tar Heels Saturday. It was a bad way to end up, but even the loss can't take away their fine playing ability.

BLAZER AND KOES

Phil Blazer, one of the best tackles in the entire nation, hung up his helmet for the last time. Blazer has been a great leader, both on the field and off. Ronnie Koes, who we think is the best center in the nation, wound up his tenure at Carolina. Koes was great as usual Saturday. Duke's Mike McGee, a pretty fair ball player himself, called Koes the best lineman Duke has faced all year. This is a real recommendation when one realizes Duke faced Max Fugler, the LSU center.

Mac Turlington and Don Kemper were both starters at the beginning of the year. They were then dropped back to second unit to make way for Al Goldstein and John Schroeder. Saturday Kemper and Turlington were the only ends left, and they did a great job. Schroeder didn't even dress and Goldstein was out the entire second half.

REDDING AND SWEARINGEN

The two tanks, Blazer and Don Redding, did their best. Redding has been overshadowed by Blazer much of the year, but he could win a starting position on any team around. Fred Swearingen, the jack-of-all-trades who finally wound up at guard, leaves Chapel Hill. Swearingen was one of the most determined linemen in the league.

Emil DeCantis, probably the most underrated player on the entire team, is the lone member of the backfield who leaves. DeCantis was overshadowed by Daley Goff last year and Wade Smith this year, but he was always around when some yardage was needed.

THE GOFF CASE

And speaking of Goff, his case is one that is truly tragic. Last season he was the outstanding back on the entire team. An injury knocked him out for almost the entiretly of his senior year, and it would have been his greatest without a doubt.

Another season is over. It ended the hard way, and we are prone to take it badly, but the Tar Heels did their damndest.

Goldstein Injury

Although Carolina's great junior end Al Goldstein broke his collarbone, he probably won't suffer such a severe injury that he won't be able to play next year.

Goldstein was injured just before the half of the Duke game when he leaped high into the air to grab a pass from two Duke defenders. He came down and landed on his shoulder, which caused the break. Goldstein walked from the field unaided, but was carried to the hospital immediately.

Trainer John Sacey said after the game Saturday that "I see no reason at this time why Al won't be able to play next year."

Goldstein earned a starting position early in the season which he held on to throughout the year. He is a junior from Brooklyn, New York. Goldstein has been hailed by many as the most outstanding pass receiver in the conference.

Schedule Released For All Three Winter Sports

The newly released winter sports schedule shows there will be plenty going on around Carolina all through the winter months in athletics.

The Tar Heel basketball team plays a total of 16 regular season games and takes part in three tournaments.

The ACC champion swimmers hit the water 12 times and participate in two tourneys.

Sam Barnes' wrestlers meet 12 opponents and are enrolled in one tourney.

Frank McGuire's first rebuilding year in a long while comes about this season, but the schedule is no lighter. The Tar Heels meet everyone in the conference twice in addition to such extracurriculur foes as Notre Dame and Loyola. The Heels are also slated to enter the Bluegrass Tournament in December to be held in Kentucky The Dixie Classic in Raleigh and the ACC tourney are the other two extra events in which the Mc. Guiremen will take part.

Pat Earey's swimmers defend their title against all the ACC lineup in addition to East Carolina (twice), VMI (twice), and Florida. The ACC championships will be held in Chapel Hill after which the mermen move on to Annapolis, Md. for the Eastern Regionals.

Carolina's matmen, who finished last season with a fine 6-4 record for the first winning slate in six seasons, meet a bevy of out of conference opposition. They will wrestle Washington & Lee, Citadel, Davidson, VMI, West Virginia, VPI, anl Navy. They also take on all the conference teams who field a wrestling group.

In the matter of home games, the swimming team is here 7 times, the wrestling team has 5 home encounters, but the basketball team is in Chapel Hill only 6 times.

BASKETBALL OFFICIALS CLINIC

The Intramurals Department will hold an officials clinic on December 2, 3, and 4 at 7:00.

When the season is under way the games will be played in the afternoons from 4 to 6 and 7 until 9 at nights. Those individuals who would like to officiate and could not in the afternoons could lend their services at night.

The Intramural Department stated that they needed 20 good officials. Those persons interested must attend the basketball clinic in order to be eligible to officiate. Anyone interested in officiating should call the Intramural Office at 9424 or come by room 315 in Woollen Gym.

Don Atkins, the official supervisor, will conduct the clinics. The first two sessions will deal primarily with the review and discussion of the rules. The last session will be devoted to practice for the officials. They will get this practice by calling regular games under the supervision of the Intramural Department.

NCAA rule books and special rules sheet will be available to those interested.

A good official may expect to earn 8 dollars per week.

Clemson Probable Bowl Pick

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Clemson's Atlantic Coast Conference champions looked like a shoo-in for the Sugar Bowl until Washington State's Cougars startel to roar Monday.

The Sugar Bowl is looking for an opponent for Louisiana State, the nation's No. 1 team. It's no secret the Sugar Bowl would dearly love to have the Air Force Academy in the other corner, but Louisiana's segregation law may be too tough an obstacle for the unbeaten but once-tied Falcons.

With the field reduced to a handful at best, twice-beaten Clemson took the inside track. That is, until Monday, when rumors flew that the Cougars were hungry for a bowl bid and reportedly had their eye on the Sugar Bowl.

The remaining possibility is Southern Methodist, but the colorful Mustangs face Texas Christian Saturday and they figure to be corraled handily.

Additional Strikes Threaten Airlines

EASTERN ASKS COURT ORDER

MIAMI (AP)—Strike-bound Eastern Lines petitioned for a federal injunction against a walkout its flight engineeres began Monday.

EAL also sought a court order prohibiting the Flight Engineers International Assn. (FEIA) from forcing the line to set engineer qualifications lower than the company believes consistent with safety.

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

More crippling strikes threatened the troubled air line industry Tuesday in the midst of the Thanksgiving holiday travel buildup.

The International Assn. of Machinists (IAM) considered shutting down National and Northeast Air Lines in disputes over wages and working conditions, but the fear that American Air Lines Pilots would walk off the job was dispelled.

The air travel crisis began developing last Friday when a strike closed down Transworld Airlines. Eastern Air Lines halted all flights Monday after a walkout of mechanics and flight engineers.

In Miami, Vice President J. M. Rosenthal of National Air Lines met with IAM officials in an effort to avert a strike but the union men said nothing was accomplished.

"I am preparing for a strike," John Sheridan, President of the Miami IAM local, reported.

The Miami News said another IAM negotiating team was meeting with Northeast Air Lines executives in Boston.

In Chicago the Air Lines Pilots Assn. said it would comply with a court order which forbade a scheduled midnight strike of the American system.

ALPA President Clarence Sayen said all American pilots had been notified to stay on the job. Sayen said his group delayed striking even though it had not been served with the court order.

American obtained the order from Federal Judge Frederick V. P. Bryan in New York on grounds that the strike would violate Railway Labor Act requirements for mediation and other "cooling off" measures.

I don't know if we will comply with the court order," Sayen commented. "We have exhausted all the processes of the Railway Labor Act several times over and nothing remains but to strike."

American's pilots are demanding higher pay, a shorter work schedule and various rules changes.

Issues at stake in the Northeast and National disputes are virtually the same as those on which the IAM was unable to reach an agreement with Eastern and Transworld — higher pay and better working conditions.

Joining in the shutdown of Eastern, the world's biggest passenger air carrier, were the flight engineers, who have refused to agree to company demands that they qualify as pilots before working on jet aircraft.

New Strike Complicates UNC Traffic

By ROSEMARY ROBERTS

Additional airline strikes have caused a transportation problem for Carolina students wanting to "get away from it all" for the Thanksgiving holiday.

Eastern Air Lines was shut down Monday. Trans-World Airlines has been struck since Friday. Capital Airlines, whose workers have returned to work after a 37-day strike will help alleviate some of the holiday havoc.

An official at Continental Travel Agency in Chapel Hill said he had "not even the slightest idea" when the Eastern Airlines shutdown would end.

The Eastern Airlines ticket office will help to arrange alternate transportation for people holding reservations on that airline, a spokesman said Tuesday afternoon.

All men's dorms will remain open during the holidays. The dean of women's office said that only Kenan Hall would remain open for women students staying here.

Since Eastern's strike, many UNC students have arranged train bus or car transportation while others have reconciled themselves to Thanksgiving dinner in Chapel Hill.

Values Group Is Formally Organized

A committee to emphasize "thoughtful, personal interpretation of the Campus Code" was formally organized here Monday night.

The Social Values Committee will not, however, exercise any judicial authority in its actions.

At a meeting Monday night, representatives from the women's residences organized the committee under co-chairmen Janie Walters and Jane White.

Also at the meeting, the following statement of purpose was drawn up:

"This committee was formed as the result of the realization that there is a need for emphasis on the Campus Code. This emphasis can only be accomplished through thoughtful, personal interpretation of the Campus Code as its applied to each individual.

"The Social Values Committee shall be composed of one representative from each women's residence. Its aim shall be to create in each person's mind a conception of her own social values. It is felt that this can best be accomplished by stimulating discussion, thought, and interest which will hopefully resolve into a more tangible understanding of the code.

"This is not to be interpreted in any way as an extention of judicial authority. There will be no attempt on the committee's part to restrict an individual's conduct."

Big Three Allied Powers May Have Berlin 'Plan'

By SEYMOUR TOPPING

BERLIN — (AP) — The western big three tonight were reported firmly united behind a new secret plan to counter any Communists attempt to freeze them out of Berlin.

Diplomats said the agreement was reached within the past few days. This indicated the allies had resolved any differences on how to react should the Russians hand over to the East Germans control of allied lifelines to isolated West Berlin.

Allied officials declined to spell out the details of their new plan, keeping the Communists guessing on what to expect.

Diplomats said, however, that under the plan the three would refuse to allow East Germany to replace Russia on the four-power allied air safety center in West Berlin. This controls all air traffic in and out of Berlin.

But East German Communist boss Walter Ulbricht, spelled out his intentions. While scoffing at western fears of a Communist blockade, he said the allies would have to negotiate with his regime for free access to Berlin.

"If I want to travel to London, I must have the permission of the English government," Ulbricht said in an interview with a British newspaper. "And if the gentlemen want to travel to Berlin, they must have the permission of the government of the DDR (East Germany). That is just the way it is."

The Communist East German news agency ADN gave the interview official sanction by distributing it.

Ulbricht gave the impression the Soviets were about to hand over control at any minute. But the Russians themselves seemed to be moving cautiously, feeling out the allies before taking the big step.

The U.S. Army quietly sent a lone truck down the 110-mile Autobahn linking Berlin with West Germany past Soviet guards at a border check point, without encountering any trouble.

This was the second test run — and carried out without a hitch — since the Soviets on Nov. 14 turned back an outward-bound convoy of three covered U.S. Army trucks. In keeping with long standing orders, the U. S. guards refused to let the Russians inspect the cargo.

The Russians have been waging a nerve war behind the scenes since Soviet Premier Nikita Khrushchev first made his demand Nov. 10 for an end of the four-power administration of Berlin.

Ulbricht told the British interviewer he believed the Soviet plan would be handed over to the West before the end of the week.

The West Germans are insisting the allies stand firm. Chancellor Konrad Adenauer has described the security of Berlin and the West as indivisible.

Don Furtado Vetoes Bill Stopping Law

Don Furtado has vetoed the bill to suspend the elections law.

The bill, introduced by Jim Crownover (SP) was passed by special orders at Student Legislature Nov. 20.

Furtado said yesterday the intent of the original bill was to allow the Elections Board more time to pursue the difficult task of printing ballots and getting poll tenders.

But at the same time, the bill attempted to abide as nearly as possible with the suspended elections law which requires run-off elections to be held almost immediately after the original election.

The bill was vetoed, according to Furtado, for only one reason "so that the studuents of the University might have more time to hear pro and con discussions on the proposed constitutional amendment to hold only one election per year."

Since the veto, the Elections Board has set as the date for the election. Tuesday, Dec. 9. Candidates have been notified of this change in the voting date.

Student Council Grants Sophmore Presidency Revote

By RON SHUMATE

The Student Council voted unanimously last night to hold a revote of the sophomore calss presidential election.

The action came following a protest by Student Party candidate Davis Young. Young lost the election to Charlie Graham, University Party candidate by two votes.

The re-vote will be held on the day of regular fal run-off elections, Tuesday, Dec. 9.

The Council granted Young's request on the following grounds: (1) Two sophomores were in the Infirmary on election day and were not given ballots, as required by the Eelections Law. (2) The ballot boxes in at least one voting district were removed prior to 6 p.m. on the day of the election. The Elections Board ruling says that ballot boxes shall be kept open until 6 p.m.

The grounds for hearing the case was Article IX, section 12 of the General Election Law: "In the event that any election held under the jurisdiction of the Student Legislature is protested on the basis of the provisions of this bill or of any other official enactment of Student Government, the Student Council shall determine the validity of the protest."

Jim Long, chairman of the Student Council, pointed out that all of Young's protests were not upheld, but that the Council felt that, on the grounds stated above, Young did have sufficient reason to protest and to have a re-vote.

HECK LECTURER

McLendon Calls Service Lawyer's Best Client

Major L. P. McLendon, prominent Greensboro attorney and vice-chairman of the North Carolina State Board of Higher Education, called the lawyer's most important client, "the client of public service."

Major McLendon made his remarks in an address to the University of North Carolina Law Students Association where he appeared as the guest speaker for the third event of the 1958-59 Heck Lecture Series.

"The cynics who scoff at the activities of lawers in politics and public affairs," Major McLendon continued, "do not speak for the majority of the people. In every community, however small or however large, there are problems of great importance to large numbers of people and the solution of these problms calls for leadership, the exercise of judgment and discretion, and a high sense of devotion to the public welfare."

In speaking of the role of the lawyer in the community, Major McLendon declared that, "because of the lawyer's education, training, and philosophy, he occupies a unique position in his community. Almost instinctively people expect him to be a leader in community and public affairs."

The veteran North Carolina attorney described the need of the lawyer's role of public service as having arisen as a result of "the advance of civilization." "In the shadow of skyscrapers and gigantic manufacturing plants and even in the shadow of great universities lie our own here in Chapel Hill," he said, "there are multitudes of people who are caught in the backwash of the rapidly advacing developments in the fields of modern science and industrial organization." In meeting and in helping to solve the social, economic, and political problems of his generation," Major McLendon concluded, "a lawyer reaches his highest value to society."

Major McLendon's appearance was sponsored by the UNC Law Student's Association in conjunction with the fund set up by George Heck of Glen Head, N. Y., who is the oldest living alumnus of the UNC Law School.

He was introduced by Robert W. King Jr. of Wilson, chairman of the LSA Speaker's Committee.

Chem Prize Is Awarded UNC Grad

A former student and instructor at the University has won the 1958 Southern Chemist Award of the American Chemical Society's Memphis Section.

Dr. Thomas P. Nash Jr., professor of chemistry and dean of the School of Biological Sciences, University of Tennessee Medical Units, Memphis, is a native of Elizabeth City. He received his B.A. and M.A. degrees in 1910-11 from UNC. He was an instructor here for five years before he left in 1915 to join the faculty of the University of Tennessee College of Medicine.

The medalist is associate editor of the "Memphis Medical Journal" and has written numerous scientific papers on his investigations.

As a biochemist, Dr. Nash has contributed importantly to the understanding of body chemistry in certain functions of the kidney and circulation of blood. Studies with diabetes resulted with increased scientific knowledge of the behavior of insulin.

The Southern Chemist Award is supported by the "Southern Chemist," a publication for local sections of the American Chemical Society in Southern States.

Third Night Of 'Angel' Scheduled

A third performance of the Playmakers' production of "Look Homeward, Angel" has been scheduled, Publicity Director Dave Peterson announced yesterday.

The extra performance will be given Dec. 7.

This is the second time the date of the show have been changed. Originally scheduled for Nov. 19-23 in the Playmakers' Theater, the time for the production was advanced to Dec. 5th and 6th and moved to Memorial Hall.

Peterson explained that the change was necessary because "the set is too big, and the theater too little." He pointed out that as many people can be seated in two performances in Memorial Hall as in five in the Playmakers' Theater.

The third performance was scheduled due to popular demand, he said.

Tickets for the hold-over night are available at 214 Abernethy Hall. All seats are reserved at $1.50.

Peterson said a few seats are still available for the Dec. 5th and 6th showings.

The Playmakers' production will mark the first off-Broadway performance of the stage adaptation of Thomas Wolfe's novel.

Mrs. Ketti Frings who wrote the stage version, gave special permission to the Playmakers to present the drama, which is still running in New York.

The Decay

One University official comments that Carolina was currently resting on its laurels, and the truth of the statement is not to be doubted.

The University in past years was the center of southern culture, the outstanding university in the south, and one of the most outstanding in the nation.

It had a standard of freedom that was unequaled except in the Ivy League schools, and standards for achievement that were as high as any in the nation.

At one time, the University possessed a faculty that was respected throughout the nation, and bright students from all over the United States were desirous of coming to the University of North Carolina.

On the campus, students were alive with thought. Discussions ranged from philosophy, politics, and economics to religion, physics, and chemistry. Perhaps student government was not a fully developed, but there was an atmosphere of freedom.

The University abounded with small organizations where lively discussions were held, and in general the tenor of the campus accentuated the academic. It was a community devoted to the pursuit of truth and to the attainment of knowledge.

Surely a certain amount of hell was raised, and surely there were non-academic pursuits, but the people on the campus never forgot that they were here for an education. This was one of the best colleges in the United States.

Symbolic of its present decay, the University Library is currently sliding down the ramp to obscurity in a helter-skelter pace that would rival the football team in the earlyf fifties.

In admissions it can be found that the University is getting somewhat less than its share of the bright students in the state, to say nothing of the nation. Indeed, in most cases the University is getting something like the third tier of students in the state, making maintenance of higher standards all but impossible.

The faculty of the University is in such abysmal shape that students can point to only one undergraduate department as being in any sense of the word on a high level. Indeed the only quality the University does possess on any large scale is in its specialized schools. This clearly does not do the function of the highest state university justice.

The atmosphere on the campus is stagnant. People live from party to party, and struggle not for academic achievement and prowess but for social acceptance. The level of conversation at a University is frightening. It seems that the present University generation is honestly afraid to have an idea.

Freedom on this campus is also a thing of the past. The atmosphere of respect for individual ideas has been distorted. Divergence is discouraged, and divergent groups are non-existent.

The atmosphere of trust for the individual student has been replaced by some of the most maternalistic attitudes. In the name of protecting the good name of the University from scandal and outrage, massive bars to individual freedom have been established for women, undergraduates, and some graduates as if a written rule would in any sense help the student to develop his own moral standards. Respect for the individual seems, in large measure, to be a thing of the past, and while the "responsible" individuals are erecting their regulations in order to preserve the name of the University, the University as an academic institution, with respect for individual freedom is going down the drain.

Too long now it has been that the men with ideas have had no say in the policies of the University. Too long is the time that the University has been run as a business by business people rather than as a place of learning by academic people. Too long has the University tried to coast along on its tradition and live in the land of yesteryear.

The time is the present, and the situation is critical. The University as an academic institution cannot long survive in this period of growth without enlightened leadership.

The University now stands only for a somewhat more liberal print of view to the question of race than other universities in the south. It stands for very little else.

The University is currently subject to many political pressures, none of them good. The one political pressure that is necessary but not present is the pressure to develop, to resurrect standards, to develop individuals, and to maintain a high standard of education. It is possible that without this the University has no chance to progress, but it can try to do things on the home front.

The good name of the University fo North Carolina is gone. The future can only tell whether its vacation will be an extended one.

Even the most casual observer of world events must consider certain events of recent days quite consequential. It is most obvious that the Kremlin is once again applying "cold" war pressure consistently on various fronts: diplomatic, economic, and political. This offensive is not one of minor proportions, and it would be seri ously erroneous to regard it as such.

The most prominent event, and naturally the one receiving the greatest attention, is the furor over a divided Berlin and a divided Germany. Russia, in an undeniably masterful stroke, has proclaimed its disavowal of the four-power occupation of the former German capital by announcing withdrawal of its troops and consequent transfer of official functions to the Communist government of East Germany.

In addition to the quite apparent propoganda benefits, this action is designed to force the United States, Britain, and France to negotiate with an East German government which they have not—up to now—recognized. Herein lies the catch. Recognition of East Germany would all but destroy any prospect of an united Germany. This is a serious prospect to consider.

Also in evidence is the omminous specter of another Berlin blockade and subsequent agitations to pressurize the West to relinquish its positions there. Berlin lies 100 miles within East German territory and presumably may be cut off from access at will. Western governments have given indications that they will fight if efforts are made to force them to withdraw. All things considered, that would be our only possible choice.

On the economic front, Russia is promotiing a most ambitious program, both in national development and in foreign aid. Communism has not seen such overwhelming planning since its inception. Khrushev is admittedly attempting to cut into the Western lead in production, and he has predicted surpassing it by 1970. This is no idle boast. His primary ambition is the usurpation of the world markets now dealing with the West, and, following from this, he is ardently desirous of convincing wavering nations that the Communist method is the surest path to successful industrialization.

In international dealings, Russia has announced a 100-million-dollar assistance program to Argentina on more liberal terms than the West would meet. Argentina is in our own hemisphere. Other Latin American countries are being wooed with similar proposals. The agreement to construct Egypt's Aswan Dam comprises another segment of this vast project.

Diplomatically speaking, the Communists are employing every propoganda trick in their well-stocked bag to undermine any unanimity of opinion on workable disarmament. Both at Geneva and in the United Nations, they are sabotaging the weakest of hopes for bans on nuclear testing, prevention of surprise attack and even for the united control of outer space for peaceful purposes.

At the same time, massive education in Russia is proceeding at an ever-growing rate. Here in the United States, schools have not only slipped back into their old program of apathy, many have been closed because of petty bickerings.

Thus, while political and personal problems are in evidence at home, it would be quite disastrous to neglect the major problem which confronts us at this time—one which will not alleviate itself, but purports to increase even more in succeeding years. The threat most definitely exists; it will not disappear; it must be dealt with soon.

MUST BUILD 'EM UP

Perfection of dam-heightening techniques must be a major new objective of dam designers and builders. Existing dams occupy many of the better sites; it is often more economical to increase their storage capacity and power head by heightening instead of building a new dam. On the other hand, when new ones are built, the ultimate demand from them may be years away; it will then frequently be more economical to build them in stages.—Engineering News-Record.

On Joy

Sidney Dakar

Recently I heard two gentlemen lamenting the loss of their ability to indulge in a certain pleasurable pastime which nature has reserved for younger men. However, they were bitter for different reasons. The first gentleman wanted very much to do this thing, but was physically unable. The second gentleman, although still physically able, no longer had the desire. The first man wished for the ability; the second wished for the desire. The first deserves our sympathy; the second was fortunate without realizing it.

Often we hear people say that it has been so long since they have had this or that pleasure that they can no longer remember what it was like. These people are fortunate without realizing it. Suppose these past joys which they are trying to recall were still very vivid in their minds. Suppose that they dreamed of these past joys and woke in the middle of the night to find it only a dream and then they were unable to go back to sleep because they remembered too vividly these joys or maybe some person whom they missed. Then they would have reason to lament their fate.

Maybe we should count our blessings when we are able to forget certain past joys. Our memories can bring us anguish as well as joy. Unhappy events are sometimes very quickly forgotten, but the happy ones usually linger on for a time. This gives us pleasure in our daydreams. These lingering memories may also bring us anguish when we have to face the reality that we may never again have these joys. We may also realize that we may never be able to forget them, no matter how hard we may try. Then and only then do we have a valid reason to say that fate has been unkind to us.

Election Results In Perspective

Max Ascoli

It always happens, and this time more spectacularly than ever: the sovereign citizen is stunned when the voice of the sovereign people is heard. The outcome of the recent elections is very much as predicted. Yet the rites of the democratic process make all of us bow our heads in wonderment when the popular will asserts itself. This is the way democracy works. Ours is very old and ingrained. We hardly know the hold its rites and ceremonial have on us.

Perhaps it is in conformity with this ritual that a number of us assume an attitude of bored detachment while the campaign is on but, like everyone else, are stirred when that supreme enigmatic entity, in whose power we partake, answers the questions put to it. The answer, invariably, is a riddle.

The task of suggesting various solutions to the riddle normally keeps a large number of people busy until the next elections. This time, the effort had better be redoubled, for there is anger in the popular will. A number of leaders have been repudiated, and though the reasons may be in part local or accidental, the nation-wide trend is antagonistic to the Republican Party. Two years of Congressional primacy are thus assured, but no amount of Congressional initiative can relieve a lameduck administration from its ultimate Constitutional responsibilities. This condition of things does not make for forceful policies either at home or abroad at a time when the very survival of the Alliance and of the nation is threatened by an exuberantly forceful enemy.

The much used and abused remedy for national emergencies —bipartisanship—has already become a habit, and whatever novelty in bipartisanship can be expected during the coming session of Congress is likely to derive from the exasperation with the Executive that prevails among a large number of Republicans as well as Democrats.

In both parties the liberal wings have been considerably reinforced, and the burden of responsibility that has fallen on leaders in and out of Congress has been increased well beyond the obligation of the offices they hold. The Executive default has brought to the fore a number of tentative leaders and tentative ideas, all compelled to develop their potentialities in a very short time and against great odds.

This is why there is such a stirring quality in the results of the last elections. The various prospectors for the Presidency will face extremely rigorous tests. Their actions or pronouncements will be projected against the background of a presidency that cannot quite be considered as fully exercised. No sane person can contemplate with any degree of equanimity the possibility that the next elections may be won by a man inclined to make a nominal or intermittent use of his leadership.

In fact, all men who have now become holders of a sizable amount of power will have their mettle tested with unusual severity. This applies to those among the Democratic Congressional leaders, who, even if devoid of Presidential aspirations, must manage to keep their party united and at the same time free from rebellion or blackmail by the extreme Southerners. This applies also to the heads of organized labor, whose rejoicing at the defeat of right-to-work legislation in many states should be tempered by the hardened anti-labor attitude in large sections of management—an attitude not likely to be mellowed by the recent political victories of labor.

During the coming years, it will be singularly inadvisable for anybody whose authority has been directly or indirectly enhanced by the popular vote to take his position or his luck for granted. Perhaps the time has come when political credit is getting tighter and will be granted only upon presentation of tangible securities. Perhaps the American people have learned their lesson: indecisiveness and vagueness of purpose are not requirements for the highest offices.

Liberalism, to which such a disconcertingly large number of people claim allegiance, will also have to face exacting tasks in the coming years. To mention only one: the fight against inflation demands institutional reforms designed to bring together the powers of government, of business of agriculture, and of labor if ways are to be found to steady the value of the dollar. It cannot be steadied without sustained, concerted efforts, and such efforts demand planning, not superstitious reliance on chance. It is the task of liberals to see to it that planning is devised and executed by defining the specific responsibilities of independent and correlated sources of authority. In the same way, it is up to liberals to find the solution to the problem raised by Edward R. Murrow in our last issue, for there are no reasons why the continuous profit of networks, of advertising agencies, and of big business should require the debasement of public taste or of public intelligence.

On the whole, the jolt produced by these most predicted and predictable of elections has been thoroughly enjoyable. Our democracy functions. There is a stupendous amount of work for liberals to do. The years ahead will be exceedingly arduous. But they can also be fun.

A House Divided

Gary R. Greer

Here's to the world of "ought to be", to the land of milk and honey, where swords, transformed to pruning hooks, shall thirst for lack of blood. A toast to the ages, past and gone, from whom man gleans his greatness. Hurrah for "the hope men set their hearts upon", and cheers for the last hurrah. Let's raise the glass (which shall never pass) in honor of the battle won and drink to ourselves, the victors true, since our thirst is not quite quenched.

And we will continue our merry-making through winter's cold and summer's heat; but, lest they inflict our ivory tower and should make its blood run cold, we'll shut up the doors and isolate them while "the band plays on."

So the three little pigs continued their "cakewalk down the aisle of time" with thus and so strictly adhered to-and daintily did their dance. Even though the wolves would huff an puff to "blow their house down", and even when the "blitzkrieg" (a sort of sophisticated huffing and puffing) struck against the "tower of the west", it stood firm.

Now it happened one day that one of the little pigs stood too near the open fire and the smoke thereof virtually engulfed the poor animal so that his skin in its entirety was colored black and when the others saw him they laughed and jeered, chasing him from the North to the South of the tower and back again, out the door and down the long road.

So it was that the chilling wind from the north came to infect that mighty tower, to crush its high walls, to end the merry cakewalk.

Editor:

I see, by recent articles in The Daily Tar Heel, that Chapel Hill's dry element is preparing to do battle over the issue of an A.B.C. store coming to Orange County. Persons who support this "dry" group would hardly change their minds from anything I might have to say because the force that compels them to ally themselves with prohibitionist elements lies too deeply in social and personal motives. Therefore, I direct my comments to those who have not yet taken a stand, and to those who might otherwise take no stand.

Let me first, not that there are many to whom I address myself. The Rev. R. M. Hauss, of the "dry" group, is quoted in The Daily Tar Heel as saying, "that about half of Chapel Hill's ministers could be counted on to take no stand on the issue". I assume that these fence-sitting ministers feel their congregations equally divided on the issue, or that they don't wish to publicly announce themselves on such a traditionaly touchy issue. If the policies of these ministers speak for their congregations, then there are many people in this area who have yet to commit themselves.

In private conversations, I have come to find the fear that an A.B.C. store would threaten Chapel Hill's reputation as a quiet, respectable, college town. First of all, this asumes that the A.B.C. store would be definitely situated here in Chapel Hill. But allowing that it would, this arguument goes on by pointing out the then easy access that fraternities and other campus social groups would have to liquor. Persons subscribing to this fear envision wild drinking in the streets, raucus parties, and a whole host of common evils associated with excessive drinking. The second point of this argument, then, is that the presence of an A.B.C. store will promote excessive drinking and its correlated evils. I suggest that a person who is bound to drink will do so to any extent he wishes whether the source of alcohol is near or far. Even under present conditions, I can't even recall a lack of liquor in Chapel Hill.

There are those who view the body as sacred, a temple of God, not to be desecrated by drink. If a man believes this, I urge him to be firm in his belief. However, I also urge him to pause and to realize that the body is desecrated only by the misuse of alcohol. It should be remembered Christ, himself, drank wine which must be assumed to have had an alcoholic content. We could follow this line of reasoning to absurdity. If the body is not to be desecrated, then we should not permit restaurants for one can certainly harm himself by overindulging in food.

When asked why they opposed an A.B.C store I found people replying that it would be for the common good. Along with this idea went the removal of temptation. "We don't want the young of our community to have temptation so close at hand. Furthermore, those who want liquor badly enough can still get it". This is the type of reasoning along this line. Those who subscribe to this philosophy would deny everyone easy access to liquor, forgetting that all inhabitants don't share their idea of temptation. I submit that any man old enough to purchase liquor has the right to do so without hinderance. He is able to make up his own mind on the question of liquor as a vice.

I have taken but three views of the people who oppose an A.B.C. store in Orange County. There are more, but I feel these to be prominent. I suggest that the above arguments for keeping Chapel Hill "dry" are not conclusive. They are camouflage for a basic failure that the proponents of prohibition don't wish to admit. This failure is a lack of self control, and the desire for the group to maintain that control. I feel it the province of each man to exercise his own discretion. It is true that sometimes he doesn't, but the artificial controls suggested in this current issue won't either, and they will infringe on the rights of the man who does control himself. I feel Will Rogers could have spoken of Chapel Hill when he said that America would vote dry as long as it could stagger to the polls.

I would like to compliment you for the editorial of Thursday, November 20, 958, titled "Independents". It was a very reasonable editorial and shows good thinking on the part of the editor.

The independents on this campus were victorious in all the campus elections, with the exception of one candidate for the Women's Honor Council and she is going to be in a run-off election.

This shows that the campus is tired of being told to vote the party line and that the independent candidates will score heavily in the Spring election.

The biggest surprise on the campus was the election of the independent candidate to the Men's Honor Council. Dewey Sheffield, a transfer student, received 712 votes and showed a great potential as a vote getter.

The victories of Jim Scott, Ed Levy, and David Evans showed that there is a strong sentiment on the part of the voters for those people who will get out and work for the job and work even harder when they are elected.

Keep up the good editorials on the independents, they really deserve them.

Fire Hazard Increasing; Hunting May Be Stopped

RALEIGH — (AP) — Gov. Hodges warned Tuesday that it will be necessary for him to close North Carolina's woodlands to hunting and other activity if the fire hazard continues to grow worse.

He strongly urged hunters and other persons engaged in woodland activities to be extremely careful with fire. The hunting season on small game, rabbits and quail opens on Thanksgiving Day.

District foresters of the western area renewed a plea Tuesday — a plea made last Friday — that the woods be closed. The western woodlands, they said, are in a "blow up" condition. There were 13 forest fires in the mountain counties Monday, all relatively small.

Hodges said in a prepared statement he had been advised that the forest fire situation in the western and central parts of the state has reached the dangerous stage, "and if the drought conditions continue the situation may become critical."

"There have been a number of small fires and we are thankful," he said, "that these have been brought under control. It is important that persons working or hunting on the woods at this time must exercise caution, and I suggest that they not carry matches or lighters into the woods. Foresters and wildlife protectors must be extremely vigilant at this time in fire detection and control."

Hodges has the power to close the woodlands on the advice of the director of the department of conservation and development and the director of the wildlife resources commission.

C&D Director William P. Saunders said "we're hoping for rain" to relieve the dry conditions and prevent closing the woodlands as a precautionary measure.

Two Debating Societies Have Long UNC History

By OTELIA C. CONNOR

"Damn you," said Thomas Hart Benton when he was expelled from the University of North Carolina. "You will hear from me again." And hear from him they did after he moved to Missouri and was elected to the United States Senate where he served for 30 years.

Benton belonged to the Philanthropic Society, one of the two literary societies of the University. In 1799 he was expelled from the society, which was tantamount to being expelled from the University, for stealing money from his fellow students.

The Dialectic and Philanthropic societies of the University of North Carolina were formed in 1795, the year when the doors of the University were thrown open for students. The first meeting of the societies were held in any convenient room attainable. About 1813 a combined meeting hall and library in the third story of South Building was given for their exclusive use. In 1848 the hall and library were divided, and transferred to the north end of the second and third stories of the newly erected Old West Building.

Tom Day of Milton, a gifted Negro cabinet-maker and well known in his day, was given the contract to construct the finer interior woodwork. The outstanding features of the two libraries were the handsome shelves made by Day and the beautiful sculptured marble mantels.

In ten short years the societies had outgrown these beautiful old society halls upon which so much money and effort had been spent. When New East and New West were built in 1858 the Societies moved into their present quarters on the third and fourth floors of these buildings.

In 1832 a University publication carried the following item: "The Societies have shown enlightment and taste in availing themselves of their advantages. Their halls of assembly are models of elegance and beauty and comfort. Their libraries contain about 15,000 volumes of standard works in literature and science. Their walls are adorned by portraits of their members who have gone forth and attained the honors of the world. They have by far the largest and most important collection, in North Carolina, of life sized oil portraits of eminent men."

In 1925 the old halls were renovated. The old chairs and lights were gotten rid of. The Philanthropic Hall was furnished desks and chairs, while the Dialectic Society was furnished with unsightly and inappropriate folding chairs, which are still there.

The first president of the Dialectic Society was James Mebane, father of Giles Mebane, both father and son later became speaker of the Senate of the North Carolina General Assembly. Among the first members were Hutchings G. Burton, afterwards governor; Ebenezer Pettigrew, a member of Congress, and father of the late General Pettigrew.

Years ago membership in one of the two literary societie's was compulsory. Today, membership in them is voluntary and is limited to fifty.

In 1957-1958 the membership of the two societies was down to 12 and 20 respectfully. Student government leaders have said that interest in the two societies might be revived with more accessible quarters.

THERE'VE BEEN SOME CHANGES MADE—Before redecoration was done in the 1920's, the hall of Carolina's Philanthropic Society looked like this. The debating society still occupies the same quarters on the top floor of New East. In the hall as it stands today there are no low-hanging light fixtures and fewer seats. Orators no longer have to face the windows since the desk is now at the west end of the hall. This picture was made facing north.

Experience Big Factor

Tar Heels Ready To Launch Cage Season

By RUSTY HAMMOND
DTH Sports Editor

"I really don't know how good they'll be. I just can't wait to see them play; we'll know how good they are after a couple of games."

Thus spoke Frank McGuire, basketball coach from Carolina who guided the Tar Heels to a National Chimpionship in 1957.

"We don't really know enough about the boys on this year's squad to say anythnig definite yet, he continued. "Larese (York) hasn't played basketball at all in a whole year. Lotz was out for a good while last season with a broken foot. Lou Brown missed half the freshman schedule with a broken hand, and Doug Moe missed about the same through ineligibility."

McGuire further explained that it is impossible to tell how a boy will react to game pressure until he actually plays. This year's basketball version of the Carolina Tar Heels will be very inexperienced, with only one senior (Danny Lotz) in the entire squad.

Experience Can Make Or Break

McGuire pointed out that this experience factor can make or break the Tar Heels. The sophomores will be heavily counted on to take up the slack left by stars like Pete Brennan, Tommy Kearns, and Bob Cunningham.

"Let's face it," McGuire added, "you just can't lose three guys like Brennan, Kearns, and Cunningham and expect to be improved."

"Last year I thought we would win the National Championship again until Joe Quigg was hurt, "McGuire continued. "When Joe was forced out for the season, it put terrific pressure on Dick Kepley and Lee Shaffer."

The only proven to be solid players on the squad are Dick Kepley and Harvey Salz, but the potential of the remaining group is staggering. Ray Stanley finished fast last season and may earn a starting role. John Crotty looked good on defense and as a backcourt man is hard to beat.

Hugh Donahue, another sophomore, is the only one of the three returning sophs who played the entire season. Donahue is only 18 years old but is 6-8. McGuire stated he would like to hold Donahue out for a year but is afraid he will be too badly needed.

Kepley Much Improved

One of the brighter spots in the lineup seems to be center Dick Kepley. McGuire thinks Kepley has come along very well and points to the big guy from Virginia as one of the solid players on his team.

Overall, the team has good height, good speed, and tremendous potential. The unknown quantity is what holds back the coaches from making definite statements. Experience, according to McGuire, will be the big factor.

Improved Defensively

Defensively the team will be improved. They have been concentrating on defense for some weeks;; it is a spot McGuire felt could be much improved. The Heels will use mostly combination defenses. Both man to man and zones will be seen in Woollen Gym in all probability.

The new charging rule, which puts the defensive man in a bad position, could be a drastic change. If a man steps in front of the offensive man, even after he has eluded his own man, he is charging. The rule is basically to make it easier on the referees. This rule could change many teams' style of defense.

All A Mad Scramble

McGuire spoke briefly on the conference race — just to say that it will be a mad scramble. This is more or less accepted as the truth in most circles, with any one of six or seven teams strong enough to win the title.

Wake Forest will be back among the powers after an off year. Virginia will be tough, as they didn't lose a man off last year's fine team. Duke, although it lost its starters, will come up with something. Maryland was the champs last year, and return with power this year.

Carolina, of course, is always a power to be reckoned with since Frank McGuire came to Chapel Hill. The team could be solid and they are eager to play.

Practice Games

Furman and Belmont Abbey will visit Chapel Hill this weekend for a very special reason. The teams will play Carolina in closed practice games on Friday and Saturday. McGuire said this was a fine thing to have happen, as it will give his boys actual game experience.

Regular rules will be in effect, the clock and scoreboard will run, and officials will be present. The only difference between these games and regular contests is that they will be closed to the public.

So Frank McGuire, along with thousands of Carolina fans, is adopting a "wait and see" attitude about his team. They could be a powerhouse, but no one will know until after the season has begun.

The premiere for the Tar Heels is just around the corner; they open with Clemson here next Wednesday.

McGuire Has Book Printed

Frank McGuire, Carolina's genial basketball coach, has recently had a book published by Prentice-Hall, Inc. The book is entitled Offensive Basketball and includes many pictures of the Carolina team in action.

McGuire said that the company had requested that he write the book some time ago, and hit the nail on the head when they wanted it written in 1957, the year the Tar Heels swept the national championship.

The pictures in the book were furnished by Look Magazine, Scholastic Coach, and McGuire himself. The book retails for $4.95 and is scheduled to hit the stands in the next month.

Another book by McGuire, Defensive Basketball, is scheduled for print sometime in June.

McGuire came to Carolina from St. John's, where he had won the national basketball championship, in 1955. His first year at Carolina the team showed a marked improvement and in 1957 they rolled over 33 straight opponents in winning the NCAA championship. The Tar Heels defeated Kansas 54-53 in the finale.

BASKETBALL CLINIC

The basketball clinic will be held on December 2, 3, and 4. The times for the Clinic will be 7:30, 4:00 and 7:00 respectivly. All persons who wish to be an official must attend all of the sessions.

Tar Babies At Duke Tomorrow

By ELLIOTT COOPER

Carolina's freshman football team can make its' season a success or a failure depending on the outcome of a game tomorrow in Durham. At 2 o'clock Thanksgiving afternoon the Tar Babies take on their counterparts from Duke in the annual Cerebral Palsy Benefit Classic.

Bud Carson's Tar Babies will take a 3-1 record into this final contest having only a 20-12 loss to Wake Forest to blemish their slate. The Carolina frosh number among their victims, Virginia, 29-8, State, 24-19, and Maryland, 20-0.

The Blue Imps won their first two games, against Virgina and State, by big margins, but in their last two outings they have lost decisions to South Carolina, 20-8, and to Wake Forest, 33-20.

Halftime Attraction

A crowd of about 10,000 is expected to be on hand to see the second football meeting between Duke and Carolina teams within a week. An added attraction to the game will be the appearance of past gridiron greats from Duke and Carolina, led by the Tar Heels' Charlie Justice and Duke's George McAfee.

These two All-Star teams will play a touch game for 20 minutes between the halves of the main event.

Tar Baby coach Bud Carson will start a new lineup against the Dukes because of injuries to key members of his squad. End Bill Ludlam is definitely out of the contest, and first stringers Gil Carson and Don Amos are listed as doubtful starters.

Lineup Changes

Breck Regan will probably take over Carson's halfback spot and Marshall Clements, a 258 pounder from Durham, is scheduled to fill in for Amos. Another change is the line finds Jack Tillery starting in place of the injured Sam Loflin.

In addition to Regan the starting backfield will be composed of Ray Farris at quarterback, Gene Shuford at the other halfback post, and Joe Davies at fullback.

Blue Imp Quarterbacks

Duke mentor Bob Cox has built his team around two quarterbacks named Walt Rappold and Roy Bostock. Between the two of them they have passed for six touchdowns. Bostock has an impressive rushing avearge for a quarterback, having averaged 4.5 yards on 34 carries. Rappold has completed 11 of 26 passes for 231 yards, an average of 21 yards per completion.

The Blue Imp line, while not an exceptionally heavy one, packs the necessay heft to do plenty of blocking. Starting tackles Dick Havens

Booters Have Fine 8-2 Season Under Allen

By JIM PURKS

"It was the best soccer team in Carolina's history, with all the players pitching in unselfishly for the benefit of the squad."

So spoke Coach Marvin Allen of the varsity soccer squad Monday night at the team's annual banquet at the Carolina Inn.

Allen, who has coached numerous fine teams at Carolina, said he would rate this year's squad as the best ever.

The veteran coach, who guided the team to an 8-2 record and second place in the conference, said the team had its own brand of team spirit and and confidence which held strong throughout the year, even in the face of what appeared sure defeat.

Allen's squad defeated all its conference foes except Maryland, perennial conference champion. The only other loss was suffered in a rough, penality-marred game with the Washington & Lee Generals in Lexington, Va.

Throughout the season, the Tar Heel defense was exceedingly stingy, allowing only 14 goals in 10 games for an average of about one goal per game.

Dave Corkey at center fullback had his best season under Coach Allen. Flanking Corkey were Tom Evans and Bob Quackenbusch at the other fullback positions. Tom Cordle, who saw considerable action at fullback after the halfway mark in the season, distinguished himself as the most improved defenseman.

At the halfback positions, tireless Hugh Goodman had another fine season. Others who played well at halfback were Bob Borden, Tom White, Bill Stem and Tate Robertson.

Marvin Blount and Captain Jim Rattay shared goaltending duties throughout the season, with Blount, only a sophomore, showing he may spell trouble for goal-minded opposition forwards next year.

Carolina's offensive unit was also very good, with its passing often razor sharp. In College Park, Md., several players on the Maryland team said Carolina was the best group they had played all year, this appraisal including soccer powers Navy and Penn State, both of whom the Terps defeated.

On the first string, right wing Coleman Barks had his finest season, setting up numerous goals and scoring several himself. At the forward positions, Mike Thompson, John Ghanim and Perkins, all of whom will be back next year, played as one together. Rick Grausman held down the left wing post and was instrumental in setting up many scoring plays.

Discounting the Emory game, which the Tar Heels won 15-1, the offensive punch of Carolina scored 24 goals in nine games. The team's leading scorer was Mike Thompson, who was closely followed by John Ghanim, Joe Perkins, and Coleman Barks.

With an eye towards the future season, the team elected Mike Thompson and Hugh Goodman, both juniors as the team's co-captains for next year.

GRIMSELY PICKS
By WILL GRIMSLEY

SYDNEY, Australia — (AP) — To get a good perspective of the year-end traditional football games, they say you need a long-range view. So we are trying it from Sydney, Australia — near the bottom of the world.

The view is a bit crooked, but let's try, anyhow:

Saturday's top games:

Army 27, Navy 20: Past performances mean nothing here. This is a game of emotion. Army has been building up steam to revenge last year's setback and the Cadets have the speed and striking power to do it.

Auburn 13, Alabama 6: Probably more teeth will be knocked out here than in any site in the country. Auburn too strong defensively.

Mississippi 20, Mississippi State 7: Ole Miss the edge on experience and speed.

Notre Dame 33, Southern California 14: This once was the upset special of the year, but the Trojans not quite strong enough this time.

'Look Homeward Angel'-- Tom Wolfe's Homecoming

The Carolina Playmakers will celebrate a Tom Wolfe Homecoming with their production of "Look Homeward, Angel," December 5, 6 and 7 in Memorial Hall at 8:30 p.m.

While a student at UNC Wolfe wrote two one-act plays which were presented by the Playmakers in their 1919-1921 seasons. The plays, entitled "The Return of Buck Gavin" and "The Third Night," were later included in The Carolina Playbook. Wolfe graduated from the University in the class of 1920.

The Playmakers have been given special permission to produce the Ketti Frings dramatization of Wolfe's first novel as a memorial to its author. The play is still running on Broadway.

THOMAS WOLFE—as Buck Gavin, in his own play "The Return of Buck Gavin" presented by The Playmakers in 1919, Wolfe graduated from UNC in the class of 1920.

The drama concerns the Gant family and the efforts of the children to escape the domination of Eliza, their mother, and the pettiness of Altamont, the community in which they live.

In the role of Eugene Gant, the figure of Thomas Wolfe himself, is Robert Ketler, of Wyncote, Pa., a graduate student in the department of dramatic art.

Other members of the cast include Foster Fitz-Simons and his wife, Marion, as W. O. and Eliza Gant; Tommy Rezzuto, as Ben Gant; and Ellen Dennis, as Helen. Chuck Nesbit plays Luke, the only member of the family who has effected his escape.

As a group of boarders who live in the family home are Pat Liston, as Mrs. Pert; Robert Bloodworth, as Jake Clatt; Carolyn Quinn; as Mrs. Clatt; Dianne Johnson, as Florry Mangle; Craven Mackie as Mr. Farrel; Martii Preston, as Miss Brown; and Betty Green, as Laura James.

Also in the cast are Art McDonald, as Hugh Barton, the husband of Helen; Herb Drinnon, as Will Pentland; Doug McDermott, as Dr. McGuire; Gene Parsons, as Tarkington; and Carolyn Marsh, as Mme. Elizabeth.

Tickets for the production are available in the Playmakers Business Office, 214 Abernethy Hall. A few seats are still available for the Friday and Saturday night performances and good seats may be obtained for the hold-over performance, on Sunday. All seats are reserved at $1.50..

'J' Fraternity Coming In '59

Officers will be installed and new members initiated into the newly-chartered Sigma Delta Chi, national journalism fraternity, on the UNC campus early in 1959, Dean N. N. Luxon of the University Journalism school said today.

A charter for the University unit was voted at a national convention of the fraternity in San Francisco last month.

The national organization was petitioned by the Men's Press Club, and 16 persons were in the petitioning group, Dean Luxon said. Charles Sloan, UNC senior from Arlington, Va., is president of the club. Other officers of the group include Parker Maddrey, Seaboard, vice-president; George Hord, Kings Mountain, secretary; and Donald L. Shaw, Waynesville, treasurer.

The Men's Press Club was initiated in the fall of 1957 for the purpose of organizing a group to petition Sigma Delta Chi for the installation of a North Carolina chapter.

Russia Probably Will Be First In Air With N-Plane

WASHINGTON — (AP) — The Pentagon appeared resigned yesterday to the probability that Russia will be first in the air with an atomic air-plane. But top officials doubted that the Soviets are already flying one.

Secretary of Defense Neil McElroy conceded that the Soviets have a "slight lead" in the development of nuclear power for aircraft. At the same time he said there will be no change in this country's cautious approach to the tremendous job of harnessing nuclear power to an airplane that can serve a definite military purpose.

The nuclear aircraft issue was brought to the fore by publication over the weekend of a report the Soviet completed an atomic plane six months ago and have been flying it over Moscow for at least two months. The report, appearing in Aviation Week magazine, said the Russian craft was a military prototype and not just a flying test craft using a more conventional frame to carry atomic engines.

Today a Moscow dispatch, delayed almost 18 hours in clearing through Soviet censorship, reported mysterious vapor trails have been sighted over the Russian capital recently. It mentioned speculation that they might be caused by a nuclear powered airplane.

At President Eisenhower's vacation headquarters in Augusta, Ga., Press Secretary James C. Hagerty said "I don't know" when reporters asked if this Government has knowledge that the Russians have developed a nuclear-powered aircraft.

MCELROY SKEPTICAL

In Washington, Secretary McElroy told newsmen he was highly skeptical of the report that the Soviets were flying a nuclear plane but he conceded the probability the Russians have a small lead and that they may well beat the United States into the air with a craft powered by nuclear energy.

Russia's capability in this field was spelled out more graphically a few weeks ago by Maj. Gen. Donald J. Keirn, an Air Force officer in charge of the Pentagon's nuclear program.

FLIGHT BY YEAR'S END

Keirn told reporters on Nov. 20 the Russians might be able to fly an atomic plane before the end of this year. He indicated Soviet developments in airborne nuclear energy were well known to U. S. military scientists and that the aircraft being pushed by the Russians would not be "too sophisticated." Defense officials use this expression to describe a relatively primitive stage of development.

Other Pentagon officials privately voiced the view that if the Russians are now flying a nuclear plane it could be similar to what the U. S. Air Force did last year when it loaded a nuclear reactor into a B36 bomber and flew it around to test various means of protecting aircraft crews from nuclear radiation.

CONNECTION WITH BUDGET

Still other Pentagon officials said there could be a connection between the new report of Russian atomic plane progress and the fact that the new American defense budget is entering its final stages of preparation.

These officials, noting President Eisenhower's demand for greater economy in the government, have said "something will have to give" to keep defense spending from mounting. All of the services are now having their proposals subjected to intensive scrutiny to determine which projects should be pushed and which must be cut back.

Within the Air Force itself there is some disagreement about whether to put more money into the nuclear aircraft program in view of progress being made on the B70 chemical bomber. Already christened the Valkyrie, this new bomber is now talked about as an eventual replacement for the B52 strategic jet bomber.

B70 BEING DEVELOPED

The B70 is designed to fly at more than 2,000 miles an hour, about three times the speed of the B25, and to be capable of altitudes above 70,000 feet.

The nuclear aircraft advocates, represented by Gen. Keirn maintain that this country is on the threshold of real progress in applying atomic power to aircraft.

The U. S. nuclear airplane program has been subjected to erratic financing and several changes of course in the 13 years since it started. Something over 850 million dollars has already been spent.

Trial Opens For Man Accused In Bombings

ATLANTA — (AP) — The first of five men charged with dynamiting the Jewish temple here went on trial for his life yesterday despite defenses protestations that the offense is not a capital one.

Defense attorneys argued spiritedly that a Georgia statue providing the death penalty for dynamiting dwellings or other houses does not include houses of worship such as the temple, especially if they are unoccupied.

But Judge Durwood T. Pye brushed the objections aside and ordered George Allen Bright, 31, to trial in Fulton superior court under the law that could bring him the death penalty.

Also charged in similar indictments — and to be tried later — are Wallace H. Allen, Kenneth Chester Griffin, Robert and Richard Bowling, all of Atlanta addresses.

Pye told the defense that it was contending the state law provides an "open season' 'on churches. Replying to an argument of Atty. James R. Venable that the statute does not cover a church, he retorted that "a church is a house of worship" and the terminology "'or other houses' means what it says."

Atty. Essley Burdine also of the defense argued unsuccessfully that since the temple was unoccupied when it was blasted early the morning of Oct. 12, the indictments should have been brought under a law providing a lesser penalty. This statute relates to the dynamiting of unoccupied houses.

The defense set out by subpoena to have brought into court extensive membership lists, newspaper and television files and other records. Finally, Rabbi Jacob Rothschild agreed to produce lists of the temple's membership and insurance records; Southeastern Director Arthur J. Levin of B'Nai B'Rith's anti-defamation league, a list of officers and employes in Georgia; and editor Ralph McGill of the Atlanta Constitution, certain unspecified records and information.

Pye threw out subpoenas for the files and office records on a WAGA-TV broadcast about the bombing by announcer Ben Gunn and Gunn's later dismissal. Atty. Venable withdrew subpoenas for records from Jack Spalding, editor of the Atlanta Journal, and Jack Tarver, president of Atlanta Newspapers Inc.

Venable claimed he wanted all this material to aid in jury selection and to show a Jewish conspiracy to force the firing of Gunn, whose broadcast included somewhat lengthy interviews with the defendants.

Pye observed that he could not see what it had to do with the guilt or innocence of the accused. At another point in the preliminary legal skirmishing, he had commented that the Jewish people were not on trial in his court.

He was prompted to make the latter statement by a declaration of Venable, seeking a list of the entire B'Nai B'Rith membership in Georgia, that this organization and its ADL are interlocked and owned and operated by the Jewish race."

Pye refused to order the B'Nai B'Rith membership list produced on the grounds that the defense subpoena named the ADL instead.

Students, Dean Attend Conference At Pfeiffer

Seven UNC students and Fred H. Weaver, dean of student affairs, joined in a three day Southern Student Human Relations Conference at Pfeiffer College in Misenheimer over Thanksgiving.

Over 150 students from 11 Southern states gathered to discuss different viewpoints and backgrounds on the problems of human relations in the South.

Kathy Glavin, Pappy Churchill and Bernadine Booker represented UNC as delegates to the unique conference of mixed races held on a non-Negro campus. Curtis Gans, Ed Levy, Russell Eisenman and Larkin Kirkman, all of UNC served the conference in various capacities.

Speakers for the three-day conference which began last Friday and ended Sunday were chosen for their variance in opinion on Southern human relations particularly on the segregation issue.

James McBride Dabbs, president of the Southern Regional Council, who spoke at the opening meeting laid the problems in the South to its history. He claimed that 300 years ago the South made a wrong choice when it decided on an agrarian economy with slavery. The South has been out of the world since then, he said.

Thomas Ellis, a Raleigh attorney, spoke in favor of segregation and declared that through intergration the quality of education would be lowered.

The conference was designed to permit students to discuss the various viewpoints and create a spirit of greater understanding of the issue. With a more complete understanding established through the conference it was hoped that constructive actions could be taken in the future to solve the issues.

Jeffries Gives Car Registration Reminder

A reminder to students who have recently brought cars to Chapel Hill has been issued by Ray Jeffries, assistant to the dean of student affairs. Jeffries said such vehicles must be registered at his office, 206 South Building.

Included are new autos belonging to the owners of vehicles formerly registered.

Penalties will be given to students not complying with the registration rule, Jeffries said.

Phi To Debate U. S. Seizure Of Industry

By STAN BLACK

A resolution favoring government seizure and control of U. S. transportation, communications and utilities industries will be debated by the Philanthropic Literary Society tonight at 8 o'clock in Phi Hall.

The bill is based on the premises that these industries tend to be monopolistic and furthermore are not self-supporting on a private ownership basis.

This is evidenced by the continual applications by airlines and railroads for government subsidies of tax benefits to continue operatons and even maintenance. The recent talk of mergers between the New York Central and the Pennsylvania and among seven smaller roads seems to point out how inevitable monopoly is becoming.

It is only a question of time before the overcompetition among airlines will bring about a similar result, some believe. These industries are considered too important to the health and defense of the nation to allow such conditions to prevail.

Competition in the utilities industry would only bring about chaos. As monopoly has been the only answer to this problem, there have arisen giant octopus-like companies dominating the various aspects of both utilities and communications.

During Vacation

Chapel Hill Is Quiet Town

By MARY ALICE ROWLETTE

A time of quiet — Thanksgiving vacation in Chapel Hill. As the campus is emptied of students, a sense of timelessness seems to envelope the entire village.

You go to the Duke-Carolina freshman benefit football game on Thursday afternoon. The stadium seats are filled with adults and high school children. About 2-3 of the seats aren't filled at all.

After the game you go to a movie in Durham and then come back to Chapel Hill. Everything is dark except the Chuck Wagon. About a dozen people are there drinking coffee. The juke box is silent. You speak to a couple of freshmen football players.

The cold night air nips your fingers as you step into the empty street. No music from Kemps. Chapel Hill is silent.

You sleep late the next morning and then watch television for a few minutes. Nothing but soap operas so you turn it off.

You wander across campus. You can cross streets without looking. Nothing is coming.

The chatter of the squirrels and the chirping of the birds sound louder than usual. You make friends with a little boy on a bicycle. He tells you his name and what he wants Santa to bring him. Then the two of you make friends with a small dog. The little boy rides off to attend to some important business and the dog follows him.

Graham Memorial is open. Six people are reading magazines and someone is playing the piano. The Coke machine won't work.

You study and put in a long distance call to your parents. Just for the hell of it you stroll downtown. Small children are holding their parents' fingers and gazing at early Christmas displays. People seem to talk in hushed tones.

Chapel Hill is silent. Not with the silence of church or of sadness. It's the silence of waiting.

On Sunday you greet your roommate. You go back to classes on Monday and you're glad you studied. For some reason you think of that little boy on the bicycle. You hope he gets the football for Christmas and, as you sit in lecture, you write "19 days 'til Christmas" on the margin of your notes.

Melachrino Orchestra To Appear Tuesday

The famed Melachrino Orchestra and Strings will appear here Tuesday, Dec. 9, in Memorial Hall at 8 p.m., sponsored by the Student Entertainment Committee of GMAB.

The concert will be free to students on admission of Identification Cards at the door. Student wives' tickets are $1. After 7:45 p.m. Tuesday, townspeople may purchase tickets to the concert for $2.

The British orchestra is making its first tour of the United States and Canada this season. The group is known in this country for its relaxed and smooth musical style.

Popular record albums the orchestra has recorded include: "Music For Dining," "Music For Relaxation," "Music For Two People Alone," "Music To Sleep By," "Music For Daydreaming" and "Music For Reading."

Conductor George Melachrino will lead the orchestra in a program ranging from light novelty numbers to familiar semi-classics.

Melachrino was the first artist from abroad to sell over a million records in this country. Record sales for his orchestra have now passed the three million mark. Records are distibuted here by RCA-Victor.

The Melachrino Orchestra was formed at the end of the war when George Melachrino developed the melodic sound, since an identification of the group, as an antidote for the keyed-up nerves that prevailed in war-torn countries.

Besides records, the orchestra has built a reputation in America through the transcribed "Melachrino Musicale" broadcast over many radio stations.

Conference

During the past weekend there was held on the campus of Pfeiffer College a unique conference.

The conference brought together students from 11 southern states to discuss the southern human relations problems. The students came from large colleges and small, public colleges and private, state schools and church supported schools. They met on a predominatly white, church supported campus. The conference was integrated.

The purpose of the conference was to bring people of differing points of view in different political situations together to discuss the southern race relations problem in hopes of finding a solution or at least a method of dealing with the problem on the various campuses. It was attempted to get as many dissimilar viewpoints as possible in order to give the widest range of interchange of ideas.

The conference was not a success.

But if it was not a success, it was also not a failure. The time spent, the effort that went into it, and the generous donation of the Field Foundation were not wasted.

If the conference did not realize its ideal of bringing a great number of dissimilar viewpoints to the conference, it did bring many, who had not heretofore seen Negroes and white living, talking, and working side-by-side, together in an atmosphere of mutual respect.

If it did not bring the desired interchange of viewpoints due to the lack of conservative people at the conference and the unwillingness of all but a few conservatives who were at the conference to speak out, it did show the students assembled a glimmer of the differences of situations on the various campuses.

If it was somewhat one-sidedly liberal, it pointed clearly to the lack of understanding that many of these liberals have when it comes to the realities of human relations. It showed simply that although these liberals may have the right point of view, the lacked the understanding of men to carry this point of view across effectively.

The conference may have failed in finding a single solution to the problem of race relations in southern high education, but the students gathered there did suggest some approaches.

There were no answers provided at the conference, and in lieu of no answers only more questions were raised. However, the conference planners could not have hoped for answers, and the questions were a healthy manifestation of frank, open, and earnest discussion.

It perhaps was a failing of the conference that it was too short, but if it leads to improved planning of future conference with the idea of having several future conferences to spread the base of discussion throughout the south; then failure may well be turned into success.

If the conference changed no one's viewpoint, it did increase the understanding of some and in doing so this brought the light of reality into the shade of illusion under which some of the participants operating.

The conference had several notable points.

It was noteworthy that conference of this sort could be carried on without incident so that no stigma of bitterness remained to mar the perspective of the conference, save the minor bitterness in the minds of some conservatives who felt rightly that their point of view was not well represented.

It was noteworthy that a man of the candor and common sense that James McBride Dabbs showed would come to such a conference and add so much.

Noteworthy, too was the deportment of Thomas Ellis, a Raleigh attorney, who has a conservative viewpoint, but had the courage to express it from the speaker's stand and the patience to answer all questions put to him in what was not a favorable atmosphere for his point of view. This does not justify Mr. Ellis' stand, but it makes him a large stride better than the man who will hold these views in private and say nothing in public.

Finally, it was noteworthy for the presence of Warren Ashby, a professor of ethics at Woman's College. His contribution in seeing clearly the issues, in evaluating the conference, and in getting students of varying viewpoints to speak out was perhaps the greatest individual contribution of the conference.

He had the answer to the question of whether the conference was a success, when he said that it could not be known. He said quite simply in the final analysis the returns are not yet in. If individuals gain some understanding through this conference now, in a week, or in a year, then the conference will be a success.

The best guess that can be made is that eventually the conference was a success.

It has happened again. A resident of Spencer, North Carolina, has taken up the spirit demonstrated not too long ago by Governor Luther Hodges and other state officials. Mr. W. G. Lineberger, in a recent "letter to the editor" of the Raleigh News and Observer, took up a rather inadequate literary cudgel and struck out at the editor of "that" Wake Forest College magazine.

Although his pained outrage was not concerned with the same incident that prompted action from the State capital—the furor over the State Student Legislature—certain similarities exist between the two condemnations.

First, and most important, is that fact that both expressed contempt with individualistic expressions of opinion on the part of contemporary college students. Secondarily, and not necessarily relevant, but unfortunately so, is the fact that both concerned a difference of opinion over the race question.

Had Mr. Lineberger's letter been a masterpiece of logical reasoning, had he presented his case with the brilliance of a Darrow and employed the commanding style of Faulkner, one still would have been hard pressed to concur with him. Regretably, none of the preceding excellences were in evidence.

The Spencer gentleman had but one phrase to use, and he repeated it twice, filling with indistinctve hogwash: "I have often heard the expression' pimply-faced intellectualism' and I believe I have come across a good example . . . . I hope that's all that article amounted to—'pimply-faced intellectualism.' "

In an attempt to disguise his being rankled at the fact that a youth would dare to question the segregation policies which more learned generations have set down, Mr. Lineberger attacked what he felt a most vulnerable point in the student's armor—"tenderness" in years. In addition to being in very poor taste. His method of attack was far more childish than he must have considered the Wake Forest editor.

Petty outburst and spiteful, inbred hate, have built the race problem to the proportions at which it exists today. Immature attitudes and childish stubborness have prevented any reasonable settlement, leaving "solutions" to John Casper's hate-mongers and the followers of Arkansas' sturdy Ozark Orval.

Look again, Mr. Lineberger; your pimples are showing.

"Easy Come . . . Easy Go . . ." These DTH headlines refering to our loss to Duke reminded me of a woodsman who worked for 10 years in the North Woods without once coming out to civilization. The woodsman was only able to save $100 per year over this period. After 10 years he felt that he deserved a well earned vacation and went to Las Vegas. The gambling and the chance for such easy money enticed him to play a few hands. Before the woodsman realized what had happened, his ten year's savings was gone. He shrugged his shoulders and as he was pushing his chair back from the table said, "well, easy come, easy go . . ."

Sometimes I wonder about the effectiveness of the security of our defense systems. A friend of mine who was at "Station Bar" (the western end of the DEW Line in northern Alaska) tells the following. The usual way they first discover that one of the lights on their radio towers is out is from Radio Moscow. "Moscow Molly" will say "I want to help the boys at Bar and tell them that the second light from the top on the west tower is out." One thing is for certain, Radio Moscow gets this information (sometimes within several hours) by some means other than dog sledge.

Speaking of subversion, this summer I saw a sign on the bulletin board of the Officer's Club at Thule, Greenland which caused me to wonder. The tour of duty up there is a year for the military personnel. There are no wives and in fact only five or ten Danish girls on a base of 6,000 men. The sign was a clipping from a magazine story heading and read: "Are you giving your wife all the companionshp and love she craves?"

We have all beard that all work and no play makes Jack a dull boy, but some of us haven't heard that all work and no play makes jack and lots of it.

Harper's Bizarre

We are writing this on the beach. Behind us the dunes rise perhaps twenty feet, matted with sea oats on the ocean side. Before us, the Atlantic. Mare Nostrum.

To our left the strand curves easily to the southeast, dotted with cottages bleached white by summer's sun and winter's salt.

On the right, golden sand bends away into the sun.

Today the wind is off the land, and the surf is hardly that at all. Yesterday it pounded mercilessly on the shore; today there are many shells left in the wake, and sandpipers are busily boring away in the wavelet-wash.

Far offshore we can see the little buoys — wreck markers. There are seven that we can count. Perhaps more, for the seventh is hardly discernible.

Each has its own history. One stands over an anchor, lost from some sailing ship drawn up under the lee of the land. Another marks the remains of a ship lost when there was no lee. Yet another, the boiler of some ill-starred blockade runner.

To the east again, the giant light flashes over the cottages now faded into gray — one, two, three, four . . . one, two, three (the third beam is slightly lower than the rest) . . . four.

Behind us the twilight fades to night; the breeze is picking up a bit; a smattering of sand rattles off our back.

Before us, the Atlantic: sea of many moods. Quiet sometimes, as now she flattens more under the nip of the northeaster. Sometimes unquiet: violent, surging; the pound of many fists along the shore — shells crackle and sandpipers skitter away, to return with hte peace of the sea. —J. Harper

Letters To The Editor

Editor:

Although by no means a faithful reader of your editorial page, I am interested in the progressive attitude which you frequently express thereon, and should like humbly to propose a means for dealing with one of the current southern problems to which you often allude and sometimes with earnest eloquence discuss—namely, integration. As a recent letter in Life magazine indicates (indeed, as is sometimes implied by the literary standards of your own periodical), education is not the southerner's dearest possession nor his most heartfelt need. Nor does religion, as evidenced by the reception which a South Carolina governor offered Dr. Graham, always claim as outherner's first allegiance. Therefore, why not concentrate on an organization which is particularly southern in its origin, yet which seems at present to be near extinction because of "lack of new blood" (to coin a phrase) or perhaps because of the unsolliciited enmity and ridicule heaped upon it by nearly every group except its own membership. Gentlemen, would you entertain a modest proposal to integrate the Ku Klux Klan?

In our increasingly matriarchal society such an action would be doomed to failure without the support of the fairer sex, but is there any reason to stop the forming of a ladies' auxiliary to the KKK? Think of the contribution they could make: those women who made bandages for the Red Cross in the forties could now turn their spare time to making gasoline-soaked rags for burning crosses, or those who won prizes for needle-work could bring their petit point to perfection in embroidering robes and hoods. Even the younger girls, at least those with Girl Scout experience, could put their rope training to good use in tying hangman's knots.

No doubt the forward-looking statesmen in Raleigh would see the reasonableness in repealing their obsolete anti-mask legislation. With hood and gloves to conceal face and skin, a good plug of tobacco to hide any distinctive accent, and a liberal amount of do-it-yourself alcohol to bring us all to the same intellectual level, we would achieve that anonymity which is the goal of American life, and could unite in some universal human endeavor such as eating, rape, or murder. Where else could one get such a complete feeling of togetherness?

Honored sir, this epistle has already exceeded the limits generally accorded such poorly expressed offerings, and there remains but to plead for your constant support of a great cause whose final achievement only future generations can decide.

With best wishes for your ever greater success in the noble battle for southern progress and universal felicity, I remain

RUSSIA TO BUDGET-TRIMMERS

The bear cringed back in panic when
The Nazis struck him low;
We helped him to his feet, and then
We helped him land his blow.
But when the German menace died,
And loud rang joyous cries,
The bear turned on us in his pride,
And hate glowed in his eyes.
With every fang a bloody knife,
With every paw a club,
He sucked his victims' blood for life,
And reared his evil cub.
So now he menaces the world,
And ravages the land;
The lion and the eagle hurled
Their challenge—they will stand.

Notes In Review

Arthur Lessing

At least judging from the audience's reactions, the appearance of the Little Singers Of Faris was an immense success last Sunday in Memorial Hall. And, no doubt, their charming voices were at times quite delightful, their little pale faces were enough to make even the most unsentimental person's heart melt a bit, their appearance in monks' robes in the first part of the program and in the second part, dressed in identical blue sweaters and short pants with white knee-socks, was all very much a part of their heart-warming appeal. Yet, there is also no doubt in my mind that this was primarily a theatrical event rather than a musical one. The program was arranged not to stir our musical sensibilities, but our sentimental ones. The costumes had little to do with the music, but added greatly to the theatrical image of the sweet innocence and youthful purity. Even the particular interpretation of the music, which must be the director's responsibility, was such that first the audience's emotional sympathies for the boys were evoked, and only second were we presented with musical values.

As it became quite clear through the program that this was all deliberate, I, for one, was unable to retain the image of innocence and purity that the audience so rapturously embraced. Especially the sight of the little boys peddling souvenir programs and recordings in the lobby of the hall, in the few minutes of the intermission when they should have been relaxing from the strain of singing an entire program of fairly difficult dimensions, was for me personally a revolting experience. The question whether these boys are being exploited presents itself almost immediately. To answer it is more difficult.

This was, therefore, not a concert but a show, and, as such, it is really unnecessary to say anything more about the musical dimensions of this show as they were, as I have indicated, secondary. The program fluctuated between the light and the heavy, between Christmas Carol and Gregorian Chant, "Danny Boy" and a song of Debussy etc. In all of these one could not help but be impressed by some of the individual voices which were high, clear, and almost shrill in the intensity of vibrato. But there was little attempt on the director's part to blend these individual talents, and, in general, the overall tone of the choir was uneven. But this was of little significance to the audience: all that was really important was their momentary belief in the illusion before them.

In fairness to all established standards of musicianship, in fairness to the audience, and in fairness to the performers themselves, the organizers of last Tuesday night's Petites Musical concert should not have asked Mr. and Mrs. Kosemihal to perform in their series. I am certain that both of them are devoted to their instrument and love to play, but to put them on a concert stage was a serious mistake. There is a world of difference between a friendly get-together of amateurs to play some music they love and the very serious task, challenge and acceptance of that challenge that faces a professional artist. It was this world of difference that made the concert a mockery of music and an insult to the musical intelligence of the audience however polite they remained. But enough, let amateurs enjoy themselves and artists give us beauty—both have their place. Let's not confuse them.

Decay

The president of Pfeiffer College in an informal conversation pointed to the difficulties that the administrators have to work with. Highest among these difficulties is the student, and this is the second phase of the decay of American colleges and the University in Chapel Hill.

The almost total lack of intellectual activity cannot be laid solely at the doorstep of the University. A great deal of the blame lies in the quality of high school education that these students are receiving.

Yet, the sutiation is bad. It is worse because the University has to give students an education they should have gotten in high school.

It has produced an atmosphere of stagnation on the campus. The situation is not limited to UNC, but UNC has its share of it.

Symptomatic of this attitude is the elaborate framework of student government that has developed here as well as the lack of participation that is the rule rather than the exception. In schools where the educational climate is better, student government becomes not so important as an outlet, and participation in intellectual activities is greater.

Another symptom is the questions over which students get excited. Such things as football and fraternities, sex and drinking cause more of a stir than politics, religion, philosophy, or science. These last cause less reaction than a pin dropping an a large lake.

It is manifest in the dormitory here study is limited or in the Rathskeller or Tempo Room where the world of party and drink continues unabated.

It is manifest in the classroom by the lack of interest, the amount of outside work being done, and the cramming for quizzes.

And one can wonder what education has come to.

People are not coming to Carolina for an education. They are coming for a party, a good time, to learn some facts, and eventually for a job.

When they are here, they strive to reach low standards and attain lower ones.

Yet, the situation is not hopeless, although there is no quick cure, no panaceas — there is only a long slow approach to a solution and this has only been started.

Student attitude is a barometer of many things, the vitality of the nations, the standards of a college, and the direction of thought. Amercia can not longer survive with the stagnation that exists today, and the responsibility for change must be placed on the University, the high schools, and the home.

There is no mistaking that the job is a tough one. To restore the University and undergraduate education in general in the United States to a high level will be difficult, but it is a job that must be done.

Nuclear Plane

Although the Russian development of a nuclear plane demonstrates the lag of the United States in key military areas and gives the Soviet Union another measure of supremacy in military power, the situation is not the same as it was with Sputnik a year ago.

The development of a new type plane is not going to mean as much as the development of missiles, for the world is coming into an era when the instruments of war will be of the automatic type, possessing great speed and maneuverability. They will supplant the plane whether atomic or non-atomic.

Yet, it should serve as a key to the future for the Defense Department in that they should look to the weapons and organization of the future and not be caught off guard by placing military emphasis on the wrong things.

It should not be taken as an ultimatum to push more funds into the defense of the United States or into education solely with a view toward developing scientists. Instead, it should start a re-evaluation process and put the primary commitment of the United States to education on all levels and in all fields.

Now Miss America Misses School Life

By CHUCK FLINNER

"I used to say, "Oh if only I didn't have to go to school today, but now I miss it."

Beautiful, charming Mary Ann Mobley would have been a senior this year at Old Miss but a slight delay is involved in the whirlwind life of being Miss America.

Her pretty face hasn't been turned from an education, though. She intends to return to the University of Mississippi next year and continue her course of study in speech and English. She will also take education courses to gain a teacher's certificate.

After graduation she hopes to use her $10,000 scholarship for graduate school. Her plans after that are uncertain, she says, but after grad school she believes she will know what she wants.

The 21 year-old personification of pulchritude visited Thomasville for the Thanksgiving holidays. Each year for the past three years Miss America has kicked off the Christmas season in the town of about 15,000 known as the "Chair City." The event involves a parade, a beauty pageant, a Miss America ball and other gatherings to fete the beauty and the season.

The petite, 114 pound brunette met the press wearing an orange and green plaid Ban Lon knit sheath skirt and blouson top with three quarter length push up sleeves. An orange scarf and was wrapped neatly at the throat. Her shoes were of brown reptile. She wore one large bracelet and no other jewelry.

Commenting on her extensive travels which have included 35 states and over 60 cities, she said, "Everywhere you go people are very nice. In the North some envy my Southern accent." she still enjoys Southern food and loves fried chicken. Since becoming Miss America, "I had to get used to the fast pace — I had to increase my Mississippi pace."

The bright brown-eyed beauty is a sports girl. In high school she was a majorette, a member of the "pee wee" basketball team and went out for track. "At home (Brandon, Miss., 2500) everyone goes out for something." Her preferences are water skiing and tennis. "I'm not very good at them but I love them both." She hopes to improve her knowledge of sports by learning how to ski on snow this winter. She is now learning golf.

Talking about dating she said, "I have never gone steady. Mother and Dad preferred that I did not, and I am glad I did not. They asked me how I would know a certain boy was the right one if I did not go out with anyone else. Of course, it is a personal matter." She was teased about dating a Wake Forest student in Winston-Salem, but she explained, "We met at a debating meet and just dated, that's all."

The matter of marriage proposals came up and she laughed. "Most are from fraternity boys as a trick on someone. Some, I guess, are serious. I had one proposal from an 11 year-old. He broke open his piggy bank and bought a gold ring with a stone. It was taped to the letter he sent. He wrote, 'I don't have much money now, but maybe when your reign is over I can afford a diamond.'"

UNC Symphony Program At 8

The UNC Symphony Orchestra, Earl Slocum conducting, will give its first program of the season in Hill Hall today at 8 p.m.

The major work to be played on this fifth concert of the Tuesday Evening Series is Edward Elgar's 'Enigma Variations." The rest of the program will consist of 'Choral and Fugue" by J. S. Bach, transcribed for orchestra by J. J. Abert; "Passacaglia for Orchestra" by Ralph Dunlap, a member of the orchestra; "Fantasia on Greensleeves" by R. Vaughan Williams; and Tschaikowsky's "Overture 1812."

Elgar's "Enigma Variation," written in 1899, is "Dedicated to My Friends Pictured Within." This series of 14 variations sketches in music the portraits of 13 friends. The last variation is really the finale, but Elgar calls it the 14th variation" . . . because of the ill-luck attaching to the number." Some of the people represented in the music are the composer's wife, a pianist, an actor, a country squire, a violist, an architect, and a publisher.

STEVENS-SHEPHERD

TRACKING TAR HEELS —

Everyone — the alumni, the students, the fans, the coaches, even the players themselves — are waiting on the edge of their seats to see what kind of basketball team Carolina will field this season.

The truth at this point is that no one really knows how good the Tar Heels will be. In fact, not many have even the faintest idea. The players are eager to play, and Frank McGuire is eager to watch them. Before Christmas everyone will know, more or less, just how good the Heels will turn out.

The starting lineup is, at this time, completely unsettled. It will probably remain in a similar position right up until the opening tip-off Wednesday night. Anywhere from 7 to 9 players have a chance of starting, and any of them will, depending upon the situation.

The Tar Heels are prepared to dive right into the biggest mess in America — more commonly known as the ACC basketball race. How many teams could win it? . . . How many teams are in the conference? This is probably a little presumpteous, but at least 6 squads all stand a good chance of winding up Atlantic Coast Conference basketball champion.

When all the votes have been counted, we think it will wind up like this:

1. N. C. State
2. Maryland
3. Carolina
4. Wake Forest
5. Virginia
6. Duke
7. Clemson
8. South Carolina

Of course, picking the ACC winner is something like picking who will win next year's Duke-Carolina football game. The conference is so hectic, that the teams above listed could conceivably wind up in exactly reversed order.

As State's Everete Case begins his 13th season with the Pack, it appears that they have the horses to assume the powers of State teams of old. A solid starting five returns headed by veteran playmaker Lou Pucillo, and unless they fall apart the Wolfpack is headed for another league title.

Maryland, in spite of heavy losses in the backcourt, seem ready to ably defend their conference championship. Nick Davis and John Nacincik will be missed, but Al Bunge and company spell trouble for anyone.

Carolina, who finished second last season, could easily come out of the race as top dog. The Tar Heels at this time, however, are so uncertain of what they can do that nobody knows.

Wake Forest returns their entire starting five, with the lone exception of Wendell Carr, and they'll be tough. The Deacs too have a chance to cop the flag and will be in there trying. An all-star cast headed by Dave Budd, Olin Broadway, and George Ritchie will spell woe to some rivals.

Virginia rates the choice as this season's darkhorse contender to the crown. The Cavaliers also return their entire starting five, and Herb Busch and company have the credentials to cause much unhappiness in rival camps.

Although Duke lost their top eight scorers off last year's regular season champions, the Devils will come up with something. We simply can state as a reason that they always have a fair team, and this year will be no exception. It will, however, be a cold winter in Durham.

South Carolina and Clemson rate about even at the bottom of the heap, but even these conference doormats are capable of rising up on a given night and slapping down one of the big boys.

There is more looking forward to this season than there has been in several years, mainly because of the uncertainity concerning the loop race. And just watch the big teams from out of the conference come sailing into North Carolina and get beat. It happens every year, and this one will be no exception.

Carolina fans can look forward to the most exciting team they've had since '57. It may be even more exciting than the champions, for no one knows how good they are . . .

Tar Heels Open Wednesday

By RUSTY HAMMOND

With Carolina's season lid-lifter with Clemson just around the corner, here is a detailed rundown of the Tar Heel personnel. The two teams meet in Woollen Gym this Wednesday night.

YORK LARESE — 6-4 — 185 — 20 — soph — New York City — out for an entire year with knee injury — cited as perhaps best shooter in ACC — said to have lost all slowness in spite of long layoff.

GREY POOLE — 6-6 — 195 — 20 — junior — Raleigh — used only sparingly last year — may be of help this season — moves well for a big man.

LEE SHAFFER — 6-7 — 220 — 19 — junior — Pittsburgh, Pa — leads returning scorers with 11.0 average last year — stepped in to fill shoes of injured Joe Quigg — a real aggressive player — averaged 6.1 rebounds per game last year — greatly improved.

RAY STANLEY — 6-4 — 200 — 20 — junior — Brooklyn, N. Y. — average only 2.3 per game last year but finished fast — tremendous play in ACC tourney earned him spot on all-tournament team — noted as one of best jumpers for size in league — valuable as rebounder in spite of short stature.

HUGH DONAHUE — 6-8 — 220 — 18 — soph — New York City — has great hook shot — only freshman scholarship man to play entire year — much of freshman clumsiness overcome — may be big help if other pivot men don't produce.

DICK KEPLEY — 6-8 — 220 — junior — Roanoke, Va. — scored only 4.8 last year while starting — probably most improved player on this year's team — much pressure on him last year — averaged 5.9 rebounding per contest — has never been a high scorer, may come around this year.

LOU BROWN — 6-4 — 195 — 19 — soph — Jersey City, N.J. — out some of last season with broken hand — great outside shot — smooth shooter — fair playmakers last season.

JOHN CROTTY — 5-11 — 165 — 20 — junior — Jersey City, N. J. — saw limited action last year — excellent backcourt and defensive man — got standing ovation for guarding job on State's Lou Pucillo — shortest man on team — may be valuable defensively.

GEHRMANN HOLLAND — 6-4 — 200 — 21 — senior — Beaufort — did not play last year — may be improved this season.

DOUG MOE — 6-5 — 200 — 20 — soph — Brooklyn, N. Y. — high scorer on frosh team while he played on it — declared ineligible last year at end of first semester — definitely ready to go now — good rebounder and can shoot from close in or outside — got over 40 points in one game as a freshman.

HARVEY SALZ — 6-1 — 183 — 21 — junior — Brooklyn, N.Y. — fourth on last year's team with 10.2 average — destined to be this team's quarterback — has uncanny ability to be where the ball is at just the right time — high percentage of shots taken drop in — can drive with the best and hit from outside — deadly at free throw line.

The principle losses from last year's squad were the three last men who played on the National Championship team. Pete Brennan, now with the pros, left with a 21.3 scoring average, tops last season in the ACC.

Detroit Chooses Koes; Carlton, Hawkins Picked

Duncan, 21, pinpoint passer and field brain of the Rose Bowl-bound Big 10 champion, was one of 10 players chosen by the pros from the perennially powerful Midwestern Conference.

Of the 48 players selected in four rounds of drafting, nine hailed from the wide open Southwest Conference, seven from the Southeastern Conference, five from the Big Eight and only four from the Eastern section of the country.

The Los Angeles Rams reaped the biggest harvest as the pros opened the 1958 college grab bag and dipped in for future stars. The Rams came up with nine players, their regular quota of four plus five secured in trades with other league teams in the past year. Detroit bagged seven and Cleveland and San Francisco five each during the four-hour session.

The first round was completed this way:

The Chicago Bears named Don Clarke, Ohio State halfback; San Francisco exercised a Pittsburgh choice and took Don James, 245-pound Ohio State center; Los Angeles collared Paul Dickson, Baylor tackle; New York picked Lee Grosscup, leading passer in the nation in 1957 at Utah; Cleveland selected Rich Kretling, pass-catching Illinois end; and Baltimore iced Jackie Burkett, Auburn's junior center.

Five players were drawn from the Atlantic Coast and Southern conferences, including South Carolina halfback Alex Hawkins, Green Bay; Duke halfback Wray Carlton, Philadelphia; North Carolina center Ronnie Koes, Detroit; VMI back Art Brandiff, Detroit; and VMI back Pete Johnson, Chicago Bears.

Carolina's 'Needs' To Be Publicized

A special committee to publicize the needs of the University is planning two meetings this week and the organization of volunteers from each county in the state.

Norman Smith, chairman of the Committee on State Affairs, said yesterday committee meetings are being held tonight at 7:30 in Roland Parker I and Friday night at 6 o'clock.

Chancellor William B. Aycock and Business Manager J. A. Branch will be special guests at the meeting tonight.

Committee work currently is concerned with lining up representatives in all counties so that members of the General Assembly might be contacted during Christmas.

The two major items to be presented to Legislators will be the need for a new student unions and for halting the rise in dormitory rents. In addition, a brochure containing these and other financial needs of the University will be presented to members of the State Legislature.

To organize county representatives in their work over Christmas, two meetings will be held within ten days before the holidays begin. At one of these meetings, a brochure, "Our Growing University," will be distributed.

Representatives from some of the state's 100 counties have already been secured, but volunteers are needed from the following counties:

Alexander, Alleghany, Anson, Ashe, Avery, Bertie, Bladen, Carteret, Caswell, Chowan, Clay, Columbus, Currituck, Dare, Davie, Gates, Graham, Granville, Halifax, Hertford, Hoke, Hyde;

BULLETIN

Power was cut off in half of Chapel Hill last night as a 1957 Ford driven by Linden Winburn smashed into a telephone pole on the Durham Road about midnight, splitting the pole in two and rendering the car a total loss.

High voltage wires were strewn on the street, but after a half hour power was restored to the area.

Spectrum Gets Student Backer

The financial backing for the Spectrum has been shifted from the campus YMCA to a student publisher, Jim Hausmann.

Editor Dennis Parks reported that Hausmann consented to back the Spectrum when the YMCA was forced to withdraw because of excessive losses on the Student Directory, which the Y finances.

Jim Hausmann, a junior from upstate New York, became interested in the Spectrum through the editor. When the YMCA backing failed, Hausmann offered to make a collateral loan for whatever amount the Spectrum needed.

As a result, $200 was signed over to the Spectrum's account at the bank; however, it is hoped that the advertisements and circulation will cover the first issue's expenses and this money will not be needed, Parks said.

Hausmann said he is leaving the editor the same freedom of selection concerning the magazines content which the YMCA had agreed upon. His move leaves the Spectrum completely independent of the University at least for this first year of publication.

A printer for the Spectrum, the Triangle Press in Glen Lennox, has been contracted and will do the work at slightly above cost.

The shop's owner said the opportunity to print a quality magazine will not only assist Spectrum establish its character in the area, but it will also reflect well upon his printing establishment.

"This is the kind of business we like to handle. When a publication stresses originality and creativity, and it wants quality in its presentation . . . here is the kind of work a printer likes," the printer said.

Basketball Starts UNC Clemson Clash In Woollen Tonight

By RUSTY HAMMOND

The curtain goes up tonight on the 1958-59 version of the Carolina basketball Tar Heels when Frank McGuire sends his cagers up against Clemson College at 8:00 in Woollen Gym.

The inexperienced Tar Heels take the floor having lost three of last season's starting five. Gone are Pete Brennan, Bob Cunningham, and Tommy Kearns. The returning starters, led by Harvey Salz, Lee Shaffer, and Dick Kepley have the credentials to make things hot all over the ACC.

This game is the first for Carolina, Clemson has one contest under its belt. The Tigers absorbed a 76-59 loss Monday night at the hands of the Georgia Bulldogs.

Last season the Heels finished second in both the regular season and the ACC tourney, losing in the finals to Maryland. Carolina's final record was 19-7. Clemson closed out sixth in the regular games and was knocked out in the first round of the tourney by these same Tar Heels.

The Tigers wound up with an overall slate of 8-16.

Clemson returns virtually all of the cagers who started for them last year, and towel-chewing coach Press Maravich would like to cause some trouble. The only major loss was southpaw Vince Yokel, who led the team in scoring with a 13.8 average.

The returners, led by Doug Hoffman and George Krajak, belonged to a squad which last year finished fast and proved to be real comers. Dutch Shample was injured Monday night in the Georgia game and his condition is not known.

Last year the Tar Heels rolled over the Tigers in three consecutive contests, the closest of which was a high-scoring 90-81 verdict on the Clemson court.

Starting for Clemson will probably be Hoffman and Krajack at forwards, Walt Gibbons at center, and Dutch Shample and Bill Warren at guards.

The Tar Heel starting line-up is a bit unsettled, but it will probably read like this: Harvey Salz and York Larese or Lou Brown at guards. Dick Kepley at center, and either Doug Moe, Lee Shaffer, Ray Stanley or Captain Danny Lotz, at forwards.

Clemson, while losing to the soph-laden Bulldogs, still showed a well balanced offense, as four players hit in double figures. Nearly everyone got to play in their season lid-lifter as Maravich experimented with different combinations.

USNSA Sends Students To N. Africa, Russia

Plans are being made to send student representatives to North Africa and the USSR by the United States National Student Association in cooperation with the Young Adult Council.

Arrangements have been made to send three delegates to North Africa (Morocco and Tunisia) and a delegation of six members is planned for the USSR.

Applications may be made by a letter to the International Commission of USNSA and should include current address, date and place of birth, educational, employment and travel background, language competency, extra-curicular activities and references from three professional or academic people. The deadline for the receipt of applications is Dec. 15.

Since final selections must be made prior to the opening of the spring semester, all applications must be sent in as early as possible. The exchange team to the USSR leaves April 1, and the team to North Africa is scheduled to leave April 15.

Qualifications for candidates include: 1) a broad understanding of international issues, well informed on USA, and a basic knowledge of area to be visited, 2) the team to North Africa requires a fluency in French; the team to the USSR requires a good working knowledge of Russian, 3) leadership experience (preferably on a national level) in youth and/or student organizations, 4) good health, 5) U. S. citizenship, 6) age: 30 years or under; (should exceptional candidates be found who exceed this age limit by one or two years, some allowance will be made), 7) Teams to North Africa must be available from April 12 to June 20, and the team to the USSR, from March 22 to July 3.

According to the USNSA the dates are still tentative and may be subject to change.

Cage Coach Requests Good Conduct

"I would rather lose a contest played by sportsmanlike methods than to win one by a display of poor sportsmanship," Coach Frank McGuire said as he urged UNC students to "display the highest standards of sportsmanship" at the basketball games this year.

In a letter read to the University Club in its meeting last night, Coach McGuire expressed concern over unsportsmanlike incidents in past years and said that he hoped to see higher standardss on both sides of the court.

UNC Homecoming Queen Judith Bunn was presented with the University Club's Homecoming Cup Club President Dave Jones presented her with the sterling silver Paul Revere cup that she will keep for a year.

Eight-millimeter motion pictures of the Cheerleaders, the UNC Cheering section and the half time activities at the UVa. game were shown.

Ad Research Called 'Bunk' By Ad Exec

By RON SHUMATE

"Mr. Advertising" told the UNC Press Club Monday night that motivational research is advertising is "a lot of bunk."

Elon Borton, a former president of the Advertising Federation of America, said motivational research is important but has been vastly overrated. He said it is one of the oldest aspects of advertising because advertising men have, from the very beginning, tried to answer the "whys" of the trade.

Borton, however, listed research as one of the five major classifications of advertising. The other four were sales, management, production and creative. He said that the sales part is probably the easiest to get into.

"We spend about twice as much for advertising in the United States as we spend fofr organized religion, and almost as much as for organized education and gambling," he said. He estimated that America spends 10 billion dollars a year for advertising, which is more than the rest of the world put together spends.

Borton in commenting that the average person thinks that an advertising man must be creative stressed the fact that advertising people are "just ordinary folks." He said the same aptitudes and abilities are necessary as in any other job.

"Advertising is only a phase of selling, but it influences every phase of our lives," he said. "Men and women who get into it and get active in it almost never get out."

In speaking of advertising aptitude tests, Borton said they aren't needed in order for a person to find out whether he should go into advertising. Anyone with a good mind and some ambition can "find a niche" is advertising, according to Borton. He said creative ability is not necessary at all. He said however, that aptitude tests are necessary to find out which field of advertising one should go into.

He disagreed with the radio and TV advertisers who deliberately "irritate" their buyers, but his "hat is off to those creators of TV

Arts Forum Postponed Two Years

A proposed Fine Arts Forum in the spring has been called off because of lack of financial backing.

Members of the Fine Arts Forum Committee heard yesterday that sufficient funds had not been raised by the deadline, Dec. 1.

Plans for a forum were begun last spring when several students became interested in having outstanding speakers in the field of the fine arts participate in discussions here. The forum would have been held in the spring and other years alternating with the Carolina Symposium.

Though the plans did not materialize for a forum in 1959, members of the forum committee will continue to meet periodically so that work might be started early for a forum in the spring of 1961.

The committee, headed by Mark Wilson and advised by Dr. Wilton Mason, received encouraging letters from prominent individuals in the fine art fields. These letters will be kept for possible future contacts for the forum.

IDC Meeting Cancelled

The regularly scheduled meeting of the Interdormitory Council tonight has been postponed until Wednesday, Dec. 10, at 7 p.m. in Phi Hall.

Two Speakers Are Announced For 'Y' Forum

William L. McGovern and Edward P. Morgan will speak here Dec. 7-9 at the annual Human Rights Forum sponsored by the Public Affairs Committee of the Y.

The theme of the forum will be "Human Rights in a World of Tension."

William L. McGovern, a Washington attorney, has served as special assistant to the attorney general, Department of Justice, and on the Board of Welfare as chief economic Intelligence officer for Chunking in 1946.

He has also served as deputy assistant attorney for Georgia in the Georgia vs. Pennsylvania case. In 1950 he became a partner in Arnold, Fortas, and Porter, a Washington law firm.

Edward P. Morgan, ABC commentator, received the George Foster Peabody Award for the best radio broadcasts in 1956. He was also cited in 1956 by the Overseas Press Club for his coverage of the Geneva Summit Conference. Morgan broadcasts Mondays through Fridays at 7:45 p.m. over the ABC radio. At present he is vice president and vice chairman of the Radio-Television Correspondents Association.

Graphic Art To Be Shown At Ackland

"Five Centuries of Graphic Art" is the current exhibit at the Ackland Art Center.

Consisting mainly of works in black and white the show constitutes a survey of etching, engraving and related methods. Color prints are a minor note, with antique chiaroscuro and contemporary lithography represented.

Works by old and modern masters are included. The Art Department's small collection is augmented by numerous prints from the Burtotn Emmett Collection of Graphic Art and the Jacocks Collection of Prints, both now in the keeping of the department because of newly acquired facilities.

The main gallery holds works from Italy, Germany, The Netherlands, France, England and Spain, chronologically ranging from mid-Fifteenth century to the early-Twentieth.

The north gallery is given to explanation of the technical aspects of ecthing, dry-point, mezzotint, wood-cutting, wood and metal engraving, soft-ground and stipple methods, as illustrated by typical examples.

The south gallery contains a variety of prints including American works. In addition, the showing is accented by a section no popular and practical graphics with inclusions at various levels of appeal and interest.

The galleries with the graphics exhibition will be open to the public from 2 to 5 every afternoon including Sundays, and from 7 to 9 evenings, Monday through Friday, until further notice. The Joseph Palmer Knapp Collection of antique furniture will be open for viewing on a limited schedule: Saturday and Sunday afternoons, from 2 to 5.

First Lecture In Humanities Set Tuesday

The first lecture in the 1958-59 series of Humanities Lectures at UNC will be given Tuesday night by Walter Allen Jr., professor of Latin.

Dr. Allen will speak on the topic, "Private and Confidential: Cicero's Correspondence," at 8 p.m. in 106 Carroll Hall. The lecture is open to the public.

The Humanities Lectures are sponsored by the Division of Humanities of the University at Chapel Hill for the purpose of bringing before a general audience the professors endeavor to make the results of their special researches available to a wider group than their classes.

Dr. Allen came to UNC as associate proffessor in 1946, and has been professor of Latin since 1949. He has published widely in the field of Greek and Roman antiquities, with especial emphasis on Cicero and Tacitus, and in 1947-48 held a Guggenheim Fellowship to pursue his studies in Cicero.

GM Planning For Yule Season, Invites Students To Take Part

The Receptions and Decorations Committee of GMAB is sponsoring a "decoration party" Thursday night from 7 to 9 to decorate Graham Memorial for the holiday season. All students have been invited to "pitch in" and help make the building the most festive ever.

Refreshments will be served after the decorating is completed.

"NOW LET'S GET THIS STRAIGHT"—Thomas Wolfe, in the role of Buck Gavin in a 1919 Playmakers production of "The Return of Buck Gavin," by Thomas Wolfe, seems to be questioning Robert Ketler, who plays Eugene Gant in the 1958 Playmakers production of "Look Homeward Angel," by Thomas Wolfe, concerning his (Ketler's) billing as Thomas Wolfe in yesterday's Daily Tar Heel. The insert is Ketler, who plays Gant, whom Thomas Wolfe intended to be interpreted as yep, Thomas Wolfe.

Personality

A member of the administration for whom the editor has a great deal of respect questioned why one should write editorials in criticism more often than editorials in praise. His point of specific departure was an editorial written last Wednesday on the University, where he expressed concern about the negative tone of that editorial in relation to the University.

Indeed that editorial is indicative of a certain personality, a kind of schizophrenic personality who can love a place very much, and be appalled at its shortcomings, and who deems the fact that something should be done to erase the shortcomings more important than the parts of the University that he likes.

He does not want to feed the delusions of comfort and supremacy that many people have, but wants rather to awaken them to some of the colder realities of the situation, for he believes that people who know the situation have the potential to do something about the situation.

He does not want to do the thinking for other people in creating solution, and sometimes his resources are not great enough to think of the solution himself, so he writes as a plea for solution.

He is a part of a class of men that can best be termed "unhappy", in an age where "beat" and "angry" are the general terms applied to some of these people. His unhappiness is manifest in everything he does.

He is called by some as an opponent of fun, joy, love, and happiness, but he is not. He is unhappy with fun, joy, love, and happiness used as an escape from reality, as a further withdrawal from the world of is.

He may be overly critical at times, but in doing so he hopes that he has given people cause to reflect, to think, and to act. He hopes that more people than the insiders know what is going on.

He believes in praise but does not believe in creating the world of sweetness and light when sweetness and light do not exist.

In short, he believes in "ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."

Forum

The Fine Arts Forum has gone the way of all flesh, and with it has gone the hopes of many who would have wished that this year a precedent could have been set to have a symposium on public affairs in alternate years with a symposium on artistic and philosophic problems.

The Fine Arts Forum may yet become a reality, if there can be sustained interest in its coming to be in two years.

It died not really of lack of money, but it died of lack of time and effort. One cannot expect to start a conference in the spring before it is to be, and have it either come off at all or be a success with as little planning as could have gone into the affair.

The Symposium on Public Affairs for next year had better take the Fine Arts Forum's demise seriously by selecting a chairman now, so that letters of invitation to speakers and letters in request of funds can be out by February. One may think a year is a long time ahead to send letters, but experience has shown that any shorter time is usually too late.

Christmas Vacation

Next year when the calendar makers of the University consider the schedule, they might think about opening school a week earlier, and breaking up for Christmas recess a week earlier also.

This year there are only four days between the beginning of vacation and Christmas, and many students depend for a certain portion of their income on the labor that they can perform before Christmas.

It is next to impossible for a person to get a job for four days, while for a week, and a half in the height of the Christmas rush, a job ould be more easily procured.

All American

Despite the cynical and true comments somewhere else on this page, congratulations are in order for Al Goldstein for making an all American team this year.

His performance on the field justifies the award.

What It Was, Was Football

Burns Bennett

Goodbye old football! You've been a nice season. Of course, you aren't gone yet. There'll be weeks and weeks of "all" teams. They started way back in July.

There was a pre-season All-American team. Now comes a deluge of post-season All-Americans.

Time was when three or four team selections did it. Now everybody is in the act. The guy who doesn't make somebody's All-Something or other is either wheel-chaired, or suffering advanced BO.

There are pre-season all-Americans, mid-season all-Americans, all-Irish all-Americans, all-Sigma Chi all-Americans, all-Catholic all-Americans, all Polack all-Americans. Just name it and we've got it. Some day maybe they'll even have an all-American all-American team.

This season I discovered I had an unerring instinct about my choice of seats. No matter where I sat in the saidium, I was always right between the Coke man and his best customer.

Numerous coaching changes may be in store next year. Somehow I keep think that the late Herman Hickman, of Tennessee, Army, Yale, and way points, had the best formula for job security. Rotund Herman said he never tried to win all his games. "That would be setting too high a standard. My aim is to lose just often enough to keep the alumni sullen, but not mutinous."

I had a strange football dream the other night. It was unbelievably hilarious I dreamed I saw an all-American player who got a broken collar bone, two twisted ankles and other grievous wounds who insisted on leaving the game and going to a hospital.

In this dream, I saw a ame referee who instantly raised his arms upward after the extra point kick, without waiting several seconds to extract that last ounce of ham from his delayed action.

My fantasy had me at an alumni banquet at a school which had just lost all of its games and he old grads issued a statement that they were perfectly happy with the coach, and had written him a new five-year contract.

I dreamed I met a man whose team got licked, and he admitted that his team just got whomped, and wasn't the victim of hometown officiating, or blind luck on the part of the other team.

Also, I dreamed that I met the coach who had predicted before the season that his team was terrible, and that he wouldn't win a single game, and it turned out that his team was terrible, and didn't win a single game.

I dreamed I interviewed the star who ran 100 yards for the winning TD, and he modestly said 'I done it all myself. Them other 10 guys ddin't do nothin' but get in my way."

I dreamed I met a college press agent who told me, "Yes, our man Howie Bloxom is a great fullback, all right. But have you seen Jarrin' Jim Joltem, at Asafetida Tech? I believe he's got it all over our guy."

I dreamed I ran into this shapely drum majorette whose only costume was a very scanty Bikini and two batons. The weather was below freezing, and she frankly said, 'You think I'm crazy in the head or something? Of course I ain't going to march out there on the field in this cold weather with nothing on but this."

Letter From Olympus

Both Arthur Lessing and Anthony Wolff have been under constant attack this year, some of it merited and some of it not. But the problem of dramatic and musical criticism on this campus is certainly acute.

A critic owes his responsibility not only to the principles of edification he applies to the performers or the audience present on whatevr eventful night he is present, but also to his readers at large. He must not be arbitrary or subjective and he must, to be successful, support his views with his conceptions of what should have been. This is not the case in Chapel Hill. Both of the aforementioned critics have all too often directed their remarks to the audience that was present, criticizing details and criticizing arbitrarily.

The existence of a critic is necessary, but his necessity is not justified by his destructive powers or his standards of professionalism. The real necessity is for a valid commentary on the meaning and execution of creative events.

Professionalism is not a point in question. There is no production or organization here at Carolina that has the budget or the time or the experience to arrive at the detaild perfection in technical execution that is so often referred to as "professionalism." This is not even attempted in most cases. Even the Playmakers, who boast that they are a business organization, and indeed they are, are not "professional." They are "commercial" in that they do not choose the plays for their schedule that will most benefit the student, but those that will most benefit the box office. However, this is not the same thing. Once the plays are chosen and moved into production, they become educational experiences for their participants.

A critic can only criticize two things. He can criticize the conception of a work and the execution of that work in accordance with its conception. In other words, he can disagree with the basic idea of a production, and if he does this he is bound by his rsponsibility to give his reasons. If he does agree with the basic idea, he is free to criticize the execution of that idea in relation to it. "Oklahoma" was conceived as a turn-of-the-century gala musicale, and not as a serious drama wedded to music. This conception can be criticized. If it is agreed with, then what is the critic's evaluation of the show in terms of this conception? The recent University Quartet concert featured one of the last Beethoven string quartets, and conceived of it as a musical entity in a certain way. Did the critic agree with this conception, and if he did, was the execution up to par? These are the questions that must be answered.

There are two things a critic must remember. First, that he must always oppose his views with what he feels should have been the case and, secondly, that by criticism is not necessarily meant destruction. Praise is also considered valid criticism.

Then, although the axiom is time-worn, there is a difference between constructive and destructive criticism. To be destructive is terribly easy. A kleig-light might be a few inches off-center. A mountain may be missing in a theatrical set. A clarinet sixteenth-note may be played slightly off-pitch. These details are unimportant (although if enough of them are presented the results can be devestating). What is important is an all-around view of the event that has occured and, above all, justification.

Segregation

Russell Eisenman

The failure of Negroes to obtain equality is a cultural weaknes, and is hurting the United States. The only barrier to acceptance of Negroes seems to be the emotions of many Americans, southerners and northerners included.

The segregationist's arguments are weak. He says he believes in separate but equal facilities, yet Negro facilities are not equal. As long as the Negro remains in a lower economic strata there does not seem to be any hope that his separate facilities will be equal. As Wilenski and Lebeaux pointed out in their book Industrial Society and Social Welfare, the average nonwhite college graduate doesn't earn as much money as the average white man who didn't complete high school. They conclude, as most reasonable people would, that in spite of his education, the Negro does not have equal opportunities. This, along with the quality of Negro facilities, makes the separate but equal argument a myth.

Thomas Ellis, segregationist and Raleigh attorney, told the Human Relations Conference at Meisenheimer that tests have shown Negroes to be two grades behind whites in school ability. He used this as an argument against integration. Even if this statement is true, it isn't a good argument for segreation. Pupils should be placed in the class which they are intellectually suited for; in the case of a 12-year-old Negro, if it should be found that he could only do the school work of 10-year-olds, he could be placed in a class with that age group. So. Ellis' point doesn't hold. It's still a distortion. Even if this discrepancy exists between white and Negro children, a great deal is due to the south's having spent more money on white education than on educating Negroes. Many states are trying to change this now by spending more money on Negro education, but all Negroes I ask tell me that such-and-such college, a Negro institute, does not have the facilities that the state supported white college possesses. All tests would reflect this discrepancy.

Another statistic is found in Professor Clyde Kluckhohn's book Mirror for Man. The Harvard anthropologist stated that in I. Q. tests in Tennessee, Negroes averaged very low. But in Los Angeles, with its integrated schools, Negroes rated above average. Kluckhohn concludes that the quality of the schooling was the determining factor.

The 14th Amendment to the Constitution guarantees equal rights to all American citizens. Segregationists claim the Supreme Court didn't follow the intent of our forefathers in interpreting this amendment. Yet, they don't say that to follow every intention of our forefathers would put us in a chaotic state. Under the New Deal administration the Supreme Court used the interstate commerce clause to insure protection against abuses in child labor. This is only one example of the times demanding a change away from previous concepts. There are many more examples. Segregation is one.

"Here, Boy — Steady, Boy — Have Some Sugar"

Neither Black Nor White... Mostly Shades Of Gray

Norman B. Smith

Once upon a time, long, long ago in a land far, far away where people lived in harmony, and when no one knew what it meant to be selfish there was born a child. The child's name was Ego. He was different from the others.

The onion came out of the ground all new and fresh with rich particles of loam clinging to its healthy skin . . . He cried a little longer and a little more loudly for attention that the other babies did. He was particular in selecting the baby foods he would eat—being careful to throw away the vegetables so he could demand more of the tastier meats and fruit. Soon his parents were forced into a shocking realization. The naturally self-centered tendencies of the infant, normally outgrown by children when two or three years old in that land, were being alarmingly extended and even intensified in their son Ego's development.

Now the outer skin was pealed back to reveal a shining layer of the meat of the onion . . . Ego was taller and heavier than his schoolmates when he was of age to enter the first grade. This was probably a result of the extra attentions, of the extra foods he had demanded from his parents. He was big enough to force his way ahead of the other children when they lined up for the mid-morning milk break and when they gathered at the door to go out for recess.

As he grew older Ego began to realize that although his selfishness was gaining him much, he still wasn't applying it as gainfully as he could. He learned from the angry glances and the whippings his parents and teachers gave him, from the bloody noses he got from his schoolmates and from their failure to invite him on hikes and parties that he was becoming unpopular because of his outward selfishness.

More layers of the onion were pulled aside, the body taking on a new firmness and a new sheen . . . He thought about in and finally decided that he should disguise his selfish qualities in more indirect forms. He was already noted for industriousness, dependability, and good organizational ability because he worked so long and assiduously for himself. Now he sought reputation for sincerity and friendliness. This he effortlessly achieved by pretending to be immensely interested in other people's activities and troubles.

He next made the discovery that by using a small amount of spare time and hardly any money he could, by being obviously, publicly kind to old women, little children, and handicapped people, gain a magnificent reputation for charity.

By renouncing his old morality in order to enjoy the worldly pleasures of drink, of gambling, and of women he could be immensely liberal to people of all complexions of morality, amorality, and immorality without the slightest quaim. So Ego was reputed far and wide to be graciously tolerant toward all!

Deeper into the onion bulb the peeler penetrated revealing a greater smoothness, an almost unbelievable luster . . . Ego knew all the time that deep down inside he was basically selfish, that he was entirely self-centered, that all his actions were products of egotism. He finally made his cleverest ,his subtlest move: he declared to his friends that he was indeed motivated solely by self-interest. They shook their heads in disbelief and determined that they must in fairness add modesty to the list of his many wonderful attributes.

Every subtlety that Ego learned was directed toward a fuller implimentation of his selfish desires. The more virtuous he appeared outwardly, the more grossly, horribly dishonest he was in dealing with the great, obscure, indefinable values that lie within the soul. With every subtlety and its attendant gross dishonesty of progressively deeper and deeper nature Ego was more exalted, more admired, more trusted, more loved by other people.

As it seemed the actual heart of the onion was being laid bare, the flesh took on a dazzling brilliance; all who looked on it were filled with awe at its perfection . . . .

. . . but with each success, with each increase of his stature in the eyes of others, with each skillfully concealed subtlety Ego found the realization of his selfishness which had before been so obvious to him begin to grow dimmer and dimmer and dimmer.

This process continued until finally one day Ego completely forgot his motives. In an excess of zeal and self delight he climbed a great mountain and shouted to the heavens as loud as he could shout: "I am unselfish! I truly love my fellow man!"

Forever after people lived in discord and were always selfish with one another.

. . . . And with that the final shell of shining, brilliant, hard onion instantaneously fell away to reveal an unspeakably rotten, stinking core. The putrid core was so repulsive that it fomented a gigantic explosion. Bits of the exploded core were wafted by the winds into all the land. These particles grew, multiplied, and were perpetuated into eternity.

What a wonderful surprise! Not that this new volume from Mr. Cummings is surprisingly different from his previous work; the poet is still up to his old magic, and you can tell from any page viewed at twenty paces without glasses that this is genuine Cummings. Nor does the surprise lie in any astonishing improvement in this book over the previous works; for although many of the poems in this new volume may well be among Cummings' best, there is probably none here which has not its equal in his earlier work.

95 POEMS is a wonderful surprise only because surprise and wonder are what Mr. Cummings has to give (and awe as well; so the opening of this review might have read, "What an awfully wonderful surprise!" thus compounding an already criminal pun).

If Mr. Cummings is giving away "surprise and wonder and awe," these trinkets are not there simply for the asking; and after the four dollars have been paid they still haven't been bought, for the four dollars is only the admission fee. Now to the poems.

Unfortunately, the four dollars was the easiest part as well as the least important, for the truth is that Mr. Cummings writes "difficult" poetry — difficult in spite of the fact that his poems are concerned with the simplest categories of human existence, and also the most fragile. The poems are difficult precisely because they are of simple and fragile things.

The "simple things" have been Cummings' themes in all his poetry, all of them emanating from his intense love affair with life (his quarrels and hates are not like Frost's "lover's quarrel with the world"). They are, essentially, Love and Being, themselves and inseparable, celebrated as epiphanies in each possible moment, and bitterly, sarcastically, angrily noted in their absence.

And yet, though Love and Being are indeed the simplest things in life — are life itself — "most-people" find them difficult to apprehend. We are weaned from them, and it is often a difficult process to approach them again, especially as the moments of truth which they are for Cummings. Epiphanies are hard to come by.

Not only are they exceedingly rare these days, and elusive, but they are also impervious to scientific-type or even literary-type prodding and poking. They are like protoplasm in their inability to withstand dissection. (So if this review has come near to the poetry at all it has probably killed it.)

Mr. Cummings' magic, then, is to contain Love and Being in his poems in such a way that they can be released again as the reader awakens to them, without becoming mangled in the process. By making his poems difficult, by using language as a tool to make the reader see and think more truly, in a way which is obscured by the everyday world, Cummings renders the reader receptive to the "wonder and awe and surprise" which characteristically come as the final revalation.

The review ends here, for no amount of criticism or yea-saying can approach the poetry. The only thing for it is to pay the four dollars and read it. Merry Christmas! (And Cummings and Christmas are closer than rhyme.)

Humphrey Calls Berlin Dangerous

By HAROLD K. MILKS

MOSCOW (AP)—Sen. Hubert Humphrey (D-Minn) said yesterday after an eight-hour talk with Premier Nikita Khrushchev that the situation in Berlin is 'fraught with danger—plenty of danger."

The senator emphasized however, that his long interview had not changed his conviction that "the United States has a commitment in Berlin and we will keep it."

Humphrey, third ranking member of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, was asked at a news conference what he thought of the prospects of a compromise on the Soviet proposal for making West Berlin a neutralized free city. He said he saw none, so far.

Humphrey called at the Kremlin Monday for a chat with Khrushchev—but stayed for dinner with the premier and Deputy remier A. I. Mikoyan.

They talked over many subjects —from health matters which were the main purpose of Humphrey's Moscow visit, to Berlin, Formosa, the Middle East, China, agriculture, religion, trade, capitalism, political philosophy and practice. The senator is advocating a five-point program for increased collaboration between the United States and the Soviet Union in medical affairs.

Geographer To Discuss S.W. Asia

Southwest Asia's land area and its problems will be the subject for an address here Wednesday by Syracuse University geographer, Dr. George B. Cressey.

His public address will begin at 8:15 p.m. in Room 112, New East Building, sponsored by the Department of Geology and Geography.

Borton doesn't believe that pay TV would affect the 10 billion dollars spent for advertising. "How much more could you get on pay TV that you aren't getting now?" he asked.

When asked if he thought the sum spent for advertising was used to its fullest advantage he said that large firms such as Good Year and General Motors wouldn't spend such tremendous sums if they didn't think their investment would be worthwhile.

"If General Motors quit advertising, people wouldn't quit buying cars but would quit buying General Motors cars."

Borton, who has been in advertising since 1923, said advertising today is "more intensified, more skillful in technique and a little cleaner" than when he first began work. He said that figures show that less than one per cent of advertising today is openly dishonest.

"Advertising by its very nature is trying to draw attention to itself. It is operating in a glass bowl. Its every mistake is seen by everyone," he said.

When asked about the advertising control acts, he said they weren't entirely forced on business. He said business helped put over the Food and Drug Act and cooperates with the Federal Trade Commission on the Act.

"Advertising ought to be more on the alert than it is, to protect itself," he said. He also mentioned that companies aren't spending larger amounts for advertising which they were before the excess profits tax went into effect.

GENEVA (AP)—Delegates at the nuclear test suspension conference yesterday began defining divergent eastern and western views on an international control system.

For two hours and 40 minutes representatives of the United States and Britain on one side and the Soviet Union on the other sounded each other out.

It was one of the longest sessions since the three-power talks convened more than a month ago.

Both sides felt some progress was made in getting a clearer definition of ideas. But there was no broad movement toward East-West agreement.

Cummings, Smith Named Co-Captains

Jack Cummings, a rising senior from Lower Merion, Pa., and Wade Smith, a rising senior from Albemarle, were yesterday named co-captains of the 1959 Carolina football team by their teammates.

Cummings, already named to honorable mention all-America as a junior, returns for his last season next year. Cummings led the conference in total offense this year and was named to the all-ACC team.

Smith, who came into his own as a flashy halfback this season, was also named to the all-ACC team. Smith led Carolina in rushing, playing his finest game against South Carolina in which he scored the lone, and winning, touchdown.

TRACKIN' THE TARHEELS

by RUSTY HAMMOND
DTH SPORTS EDITOR

Tonight when Carolina officially ushers in the 1958-59 basketball season, Woollen Gym will be, as usual, packed. Half of the student body, as usual, will be left out in the cold.The game will, however, be broadvised by WUNC-TV. Students unable to obtain tickets can watch the action and tune in the play-by-play on the radio.

It would seem to the casual observer that the pressure which existed at the beginning of last season is no longer present. Last year the Tar Heels were riding on the crest of a 32-game winning streak and, of course, wanted to extend it as much as possible.

PRESSURE BACK

This season the pressure is back again, and for a number of reasons. The biggest is that nobody in the ACC is a pushover and the season is just one long rat race from beginning to end. Another is that players on the Carolina team are for the most part untried, and feel they have to show what they can do. Still another is that there is terrific competition for starting berths and performances tonight will go a long way toward determining them.

Clemson got off on the wrong foot Monday night when they lost to Georgia. They are on the rebound now and have the advantage of one team under their belts.

State College, the team to beat, started off on the winning trail Monday night by clubbing Penn State in Raleigh. The Pack will be tough, make no mistake, but they'll lose a few over the stretch.

Wake Forest, one of the eight question marks in the league, opened last night with Davidson. Virginia meets Virginia Tech Friday night and Duke opens against Clemson on Friday night.

FEVER HERE AGAIN

So, the annual round-ball fever is upon us and fans can look forward to one of the most exciting seasons in years. This conference should provide enough thrills to last for a long time. The first big clash is set for Saturday night when Wake Forest meets State. Duke plays host to powerful Kentucky Monday night. State has another tough one when they meet defending champ Maryland tonight.

Over the holidays the NEA released its all-American team. One of the picks was Carolina's own Al Goldstein, who won his selection over some of the greatest in the nation. Goldstein showed well in every game this season, proving himself to be one of the best, if not the very best, pass receivers in the country.

RICHLY DESERVED

The honor came to one who richly deserved it. Goldstein had no tremendous advanced press ratings like most of the players who made the NEA team with him. He wasn't, in fact, even a starter until after his briliant performance in the State game.

Shirley Povich, sports editor of the Washington Post, called Goldstein's play in the Maryland game the greatest he had seen all year. That was the one when Goldstein rushed Terp quarterback Bob Russeviyan, knocked the ball out of his hands, grabbed it, and raced some 45 yards for a touchdown.

The ACC team was also released over the holidays and Goldstein made it, too. Carolina almost completely dominated the team, landing four posts. Wade Smith, Jack Cummings, and Phil Blazer also made it. The crying shame was the omission of Ron Koes as center on the all-ACC. Somebody goofed.

When it came to picking players for the Senior Bowl the same mistake was omitted. Koes, along with Fred Swearingen and Phil Blazer was chosen for the bowl. Moe Decantis was named to the Gray squad for the Blue-Gray game. The pros knew what they were doing also, for they chose Ron in the second round. The selection of Koes by Detroit puts two Tar Heels of this year under Lion Guidance; Coes and Phil Blazer, who was drafted last year.

The freshman football team finished up with a 4-1 overall record by stopping the Duke Blue Imps 24-22 on Thanksgiving Day. It would apepar that a lot of help, whether needed or not, is on the way up from that fine aggregatino.

Random Note—MONITOR, NBC's weekend program which goes all over the nation, dropped into Chapel Hill last week. The show interviewed Pete Mullis, who is in charge of the maintenance of Kenan Stadium. Mullis gave about a five-minute chat to the nationwide audience about the problems such a job raises.

HEELS TOP STAX

Carolina's football team ended up tops in the ACC in both total offense and total defense. Jack Cummings led the league in total offense. The team allowed opposition only 4.1 yards per try on defense.

Frosh Open Here Against Hargrave

Dean Smith makes his debut as a Carolina basketball coach this evening at 6 o'clock when his freshman cagers take on Hargrave Military Academy in a preliminary contest before the varsity game.

Fore both teams this game is the first of the season, and the potential of each squad is an unknown quanity. The visitors from Chatam, Va., will bring in a squad composed of boys who are taking an extra year of high school before entering college and should in no way be lacking in athletic ability.

Starting Five

Coach Smith has chosen a starting lineup built around 6-7 Jim Hudock who will open at center for the frosh. The two fowards will be Ken McComb and Bill Hubbard while Don Walsh and Yogi Poteet complete the first string at the guard positions.

In addition to these five, Smith said that Denny Clark, Lew Phillips, and Pep Callahan should see plenty of action during the course of the game.

The frosh coach said that the team's offense will be determined by the defense set up against them. Defensively, Smith plans to rely strictly on the man-to-man pattern.

The Tar Heel freshman currently are holding down a roster of 14. Smith has made four cuts to make room for the addition of John O Bannon, Ward Marslender, and Louis Sullivan who came out after competing in fall sports.

Melachrino Orchestra Schedules Varied Program For Tuesday

Samples of the well-known music of George Melachrino and his Orchestra will be brought to Memorial Hall Tuesday night at 8 o'clock when the group performs here in a concert free for all students.

Sponsored by the Student Entertainment Committee, the orchestra's program will range from light novelty selections to semi-classics.

Melachrino and his Orchestra have already established a reputation in America through record albums and radio broadcasts, but 1958-59 marks the first tour of the United States and Canada for the British music group.

The popularity of this orchestra is noted in the increasing number of record sales. Melachrino was the first artist from abroad to sell over a million records in this country. Since then, record sales have risen to over three million.

GEORGE MELACHRINO
...specializes in relaxed music

Though Melachrino specializes in relaxed music, he once commented that "Rock 'n' Roll is just fine." Melachrino even admitted that he and his wife had danced to Elvis Presley records.

No rock 'n' roll will be included, however, when his orchestra presents a concert here of such music as "Autumn Leaves," selections from "South Pacific" and "My Fair Lady" and "Greensleeves."

UNC students will be admitted free to the concert on admission of ID cards at the door. Student wives may purchase tickets for $1.

Bob Borden, chairman of the sponsoring Student Entertainment Committee, said townspeople may purchase tickets for $2 after 7:45 p.m. Tuesday. This is being done so that as many students as want to many attend the concert and be assured of seats in Memorial Hall.

Social Rooms Opening Slated For Dec. 12

By A. PRINGLE PIPKIN

Social rooms in 17 men's dorms will probably be opened to coeds for the weekend beginning Dec. 12, according to an Interdormitory Council official.

Jim Scott, chairman of the IDC committee on the coed visiting agreement, said the opening was pending the completion of the necessary alterations to the dorms and approval of the visiting committee.

SPONSORS REQUIRED

He expects the work to be completed in time for the visiting committee to make its tour sometime next week. Before the dorms can be opened they will also have to have two faculty couples as sponsors.

Scott explained that none of the dorms had yet turned in their sponsors, but he did not think they would have too much trouble in getting the necessary sponsors.

The sponsors are to chaperone parties, receptions and dances in the dorms. For dating it is only necessary that a dorm officer, manager, or adviser be in the dorm and be available, though not necessarily in the social room.

The dorm officer is to be responsible for the students' conduct in the social. Scott does not anticipate any trouble on this count. No drinking will be allowed in the social rooms.

The administration has the right of revoking the visiting privileges of a dorm. The dorms are scheduled to review the visiting agreement and its operation after the first semester. The dorms will vote on the advisability of continuing the program.

The agreement, between the IDC and Dean of Women Katherine Carmichael, permits women to visit the dorms on Friday from 6 to 12 p.m., Saturday from 2 to 12 p.m. and on Sunday from 2 to 11 p.m.

Action to implement the agreement was started by Rudy Edwards last spring as part of his program as president of the IDC. This fall Jim Scott took over the committee.

The visiting agreement was drawn largely from visiting agreements which were held by Connor and Whitehead Dorms. Both were men's dorms for grad and medical students, respectively, at the time.

Their agreements became effective in the spring of 1955. Since then some of the other men's dorms which had suitable social rooms have had them open for coed visiting before and after the football games.

Legislators To Hear Bill Asking Telegrams

A bill calling for telegrams to Governors Orval Faubus of Arkansas and J. Lindsay Almond of Virginia on the closing of public schools will highlight tonight's Student Legislature meeting.

The other bill to be considered by the body concerns the creation of a chaplain for the Legislature and was introduced at the last meeting by Norman Smith (Ind).

The telegram bill, introduced by Ed Levy (SP-UP) calls for telegrams to the two governors reading, in part: "We denounce all efforts to evade the clear meaning of the law and the decision of the Supreme Court through the abolition of public schools . . . We decry . . . any destruction of the system of universal free public schools . . ." The telegrams are to be signed, "The Student Legislature of the University of North Carolina."

The purpose of the bill, according to Levy, is to show the governors that there is a body of individuals who consider public education a primary necessity overriding all other issues. "Firstly, the thing at stake is education, and it is the responsibility of we who are a part of the educational community to speak out on this issue."

Student Body Vice President Ralph Cummings disagreed with the bill, remarking, "I feel that the wording of the telegram is too blunt and undiplomatic to adequately express the views of the Student Legislature on a subject so emotional as integration. If the body wishes to express opposition to the policies of Faubus and Almond, this could be better accomplished in a letter which would more fully explore the problem.

"Integration is not a matter that can be solved by haste and denunciations. A firm stand of opposition, which might do some positive good, could be offered in a much more diplomatic manner than the proposed telegram, which is limited in length due to cost. The principle is admirable, but the method might negate any possible positive effort of the communication."

Charlie Gray, UP floorleader, commented on the bill as follows, "At the present time the bill is in bad taste. The Legislature has many more problems on campus to concern itself with without prying into the affairs of other states. I am very much against the bill in its present form."

Don Furtado, president of the Student Body, said, "I believe that the intent of the bill condemning the closing of a number of Southern schools is admirable. Students, more than any other group, should be loud in their condemnation of all practices which prevent others from the pursuit of their condemnation of all practices which prevent others from the pursuit of their education. Irreparable harm may have already been done to those students who are being denied an education because of the bigotry and lack of foresight of a number of their state leaders."

John Brooks, member of Student Party and president of the Philanthropic Literary Society, commented, "I think there should be a letter containing much more than what the bill said would be in the telegram, particularly the first paragraph. I am in favor of the idea, but not the telegram."

Kepley Leads Tar Heel Scoring With 24 Points

By RUSTY HAMMOND

Carolina's basketball Tar Heels lifted the lid on the '58-59 season in very convincing style last night in Woollen Gym as they rolled over the Clemson Tigers 83-67.

The Tar Heels suffered through a so-so first half before running away with things in the second stanza. Clemson and Carolina fought to a 36-36 tie in the first half with Clemson leading most of the way.

Dick Kepley provided most of the scoring spark for Carolina in the first half by pouring in 16 by intermission. The Heels showed it was their first game of the season, looking ragged in spots in the initial half.

The Tar Heels also suffered from an inability to work the ball inside and to keep the Tigers from hitting from the outside.

59% Shooting Average

Clemson couldn't do anything wrong in the first half as they hit a hot 66% of shots taken from the floor. This average cooled considerably, to 46%, in the second half.

The second half was a completely different story as the boys from Chapel Hill took the law into their own hands and nearly ran Clemson out of the gym. They outscored the Tigers 47-31 in the last half and held down the outside hitting by the Bengals.

Kepley, in the finest game of his career, wound up with 24 points for the night. Newcomer York Larese was impressive before the home fans, hitting for 15 markers. Soph Doug Moe and Lee Shaffer shared third place with 12 points apiece.

Moe looked very good on his playmaking from the outside, feeding to the big men in the middle several times for scores. Harvey Salz quarterbacked the plays from the outside and chipped in with 10 points.

Larese, a guard, proved to be the leading rebounder for the night as he hauled in 7. Kepley had 6 and Moe 5.

Krajack Gets 19

Clemson's big gun was George Krajack, who ripped the cords for 19 counters. Walt Gibbons had 11 and Doug Hoffman 9. Hoffman was the leading rebounder for the Tigers with 6.

Carolina wound up with a shooting average of 50.9 after a 46.4 in the first half. The Heels looked much better defensively in the second stanza.

Kepley, in addition to his 7 field goals, just missed a perfect night at the free throw line, pumping in 10 of 11 foul shots.

The big Tar Heel margin got under way at about the mid-point of the second half when the Heels outscored the Tigers 16-2 in one stretch.

Amendments To Get Vote Test Tuesday

The student body will vote Tuesday on two amendments to the UNC Student Constitution and in run-off elections for two offices.

A run-off election will be held between Bunkie Jester and Sandra Trotman for the third seat on Women's Honor Council.

The sophomore class will re-vtoe for class president. Davis Young (SP), defeated by Charlie Graham (UP) by two votes in the full election, appealed the decision to the Student Council, which granted the privilege of a re-vote because of certain discrepancies in the previous election.

The "discrepancies" Davis listed were: 1) no ballots were distributed to sophomores in the Infirmary, 2) the ballot boxes in Town Men's III and IV were picked up and taken to Graham Memorial before the election officially ended at 6 p.m. Nov. 18, and 3) the ballot box in Everett Dormitory could not be located or brought to Graham Memorial until after 8 p.m. on the day of the election.

The amendments up for approval are: (1) to hold a single annual fall election for Legislature seats and (2) appointment of the head cheerleader by student government.

Jester and Trotman tied for the third Women's Honor Council seat in the fall elections Nov. 18.

Phi Defeats Bill Calling For Controls

By STAN BLACK

The Phi Society defeated a bill calling for government ownership and control of transportation, communications, and utilities industries in a close vote Tuesday night. A 5-5 tie vote was broken by President John Brooks' vote against the bill.

Rep. Clarence Simpson introduced the bill, citing the monopolistic and inefficient conditions in these industries as sufficient reasons for government ownership. He also pointed out that the government would save on subsidies and could apply any profits onto the national debt.

Rep. Maurice Johnson challenged this presentation on the basis that this country achieved its present prosperity under the free enterprise system, and any departure from it would be contrary to American ideals.

Better service and wider operations were noted as primary benefits of the change by Rep. Bill Jackson. Other speakers pointed out that a little government ownership could hardly affect the U. S. economy, already the most competitive in the world.

Christmas 'Adoption' Near End

This is the last week to "adopt" an Orange County family to help this Christmas through the Empty Stocking Fund.

All campus organizations have been contacted by letter by the Junior Service League Empty Stocking Fund Committee, urging support again this year in selection of a specific family to provide with food, toys and clothing during the holiday season. Detailed information is available from Mrs. Charles Stevens at 9-0112.

Mrs. L. L. Vine, 1958 Empty Stocking chairman, said yesterday, 'Family adoptions by campus groups are vital to the success of the Empty Stocking Fund. Now that Thanksgiving vacation is over we hope that all group leaders will organize an individual effort to urge participation in this worth while community project."

Boxes packed for a specific family should be taken to the Sinclair garage in the Glen Lennox shopping center Dec. 8-16.

Cash donations, can be made by mail to Empty Stocking Fund, Box 374, Chapel Hill.

GM Sets For Decoration

"Yes, Carolina student, there is a Santa Claus."

As sure as Graham Memorial is having a Christmas decorating party, there's a Santa Claus.

The party's tonight from 7 to 9 o'clock in GM for any student who wants to help decorate the building and have a good time.

The "feature" of the evening will be the decoration of a big Christmas tree in the main lounge.

Refreshments will be served after the decorating is completed.

Petite Musicale To Feature Music For Strings, Percussion

Music for strings and music for unconventional percussion instruments will be presented at the third Petite Musicale program at 8 p.m. in the Playmakers Theatre Sunday, Dec. 7.

The program will feature original compositions by two graduate students in music at the University, Thomas N. Rice of Washington, D. C. and Peter Ford of Meriden, Conn. The public is invited to attend the program which is free of charge.

Among the pieces included on the portion of the program devoted to Rice's works will be a Petite Suite for Flute and Strings. It will be performed by Earl Slocum, UNC music department faculty member, and a string ensemble including Edgar Alden, Jean Heard, Dorothy Alden and Mary Gray Clarke, members of the University String Quartet.

Daniel Gore of Chapel Hill will perform a Suite for the guitar and Raymond McGuire, tenor associated with the Grass Roots Opera Company, will perform a group of songs called 'Love Lyrics" set to poems by Peele, Herrick, Carew Shelley, Lyly and Milton. Michael Cordovana will accompany McGuire at the piano.

Also included on the program will be an arrangement of two dance sequences for piano-duet from an opera in progress, "Whatever Passes Along the Paths of the Seas."

In contrast to the first half of the program, Peter Ford's compositions present a "different" kind of music. Among the unconventional instruments utilized will be an alarm clock, balloons, ratchet, three-way locomotive whistle, a bird whistle and others.

Ford's orchestra called a percussion ensemble will be directed by Joel Chadabe, UNC undergraduate student from New York City.

'You Can't Go Home,' But

Wolfe Is Home In Playmaker Production

By SANDRA WHISNANT

"You can't go home again," Thomas Wolfe said. But Wolfe will come home to North Carolina when the Carolina Playmakers present the first off-Broadway production of "Look Homeward, Angel" Dec. 5-7 at Chapel Hill.

The Playmakers will present this special production as a memorial to their famous alumnus on the 20th anniversary of his death. Harry Davis, associate director of the Playmakers, will direct the show.

The Playmakers were granted the right to present this first amateur showing although the play has completed only its first year's run on Broadway. Usually it is customary to grant production rights to private theatrical organizations only after the play has had a long on-the-road run.

This special production was arranged through Mrs. Ketti Frings, the playwright; Kermit Bloomgarden ,the New York producer; and the late Edward C Ashwell, administrator for the Wolfe Estate. The fact that Thomas Wolfe was a charter member of the Carolina Playmakers was the important factor in securing the rights to produce the play. The play was not being released to other amateur groups when the Playmakers obtained production rights.

ENGLISH MAJOR

An English major, Thomas Wolfe began studying playwritting at the To be a writer was his ambition. University of North Carolina in 1918 and he felt that his future would be in writing for the theater.

At 18, Wolfe became a member of the first playwriting class and a charter member of the Carolina Playmakers, a dramatics group organized and directed by the class instructor, Frederick H. Koch. The class was to teach the writing, acting, and staging of plays with the use of familiar situations as subjects.

Wolfe was the only male member of the class in the original group of eight students because of World War I. The only reason Wolfe was in school was that he was to young to fight. In the "Carolina Playbook", Professor Kock tells of Wolfe's comment after the first class.

" 'Proff,' Wolfe said, 'I don't want you to think that this co-ed Ladies Aid Society represents Carolina. We have a lot of he-men seriously interested in writing here, but they're all disguised in uniforms now. I tried to get into one myself, but they didn't have one long enough for me.' " Wolfe was 6 feet 6 inches tall.

In the first bill of plays presented by the Playmakers was one written by Wolfe, "The Return of Buck Gavin." This one-act play was a tragedy of a mountain outlaw. Unable to find a suitable person to play Buck Gavin, Wolfe was forced to be the hero in his own play. Professor Koch recalled that the roll of Buck Gavin fitted Wolfe perfectly. The play was presented on March 14-15, 1919 on an improvised stage in the Chapel Hill high school auditorium. This first play and first published work was included in the second volume of the "Carolina Folk Plays", edited by Koch.

SUPERNATURAL

The other and less publicized play that Wolfe did at Carolina was "The Third Night," a mountain play based on the supernatural. This was among the third series of plays and was produced in Dec. of 1919. In this play also, Wolfe played the leading role.

After having studied dramatic composition at UNC from 1918 to 1920, Wolfe went to Harvard for two years' study at the 47 Workshop under George P. Baker. There he made intensive efforts to achieve success in playwriting under Baker's direction.

On Jan. 19, 1922, Wolfe entered his first literary contract. It was with the Playmakers, giving them the right to copyright and publish his plays with the agreement that the royalties would go to the playwright. Wolfe received his first money for writing in the form of a royalty check from the Playmakers for a production of "The Return of Buck Gavin."

Wolfe devoted eight years to studying and practicing playwriting before turning to the novel and its more flexible form of expression. In a commemorative issue of the "Carolina Playbook" Wolfe is described: "He sought above all to be and to become, a playmaker."

Harry Davis, the director of the Chapel Hill presentation of "Look Homeward Angel" is using the same script as that used on Broadway, with only minor alterations.

"A rotating stage similar to that used in the Broadway play will be used, though it won't be as elaborate," Davis explains.

The sets will be original with suggestions supplied from the Broadway sets. Tom Rezzuto Jr., in charge of the sets, is a native of Asheville and is familiar with the designed with a base of realism Wolfe home. Rezzuto's scenery is fading off into imaginary unreality, rather than with a superimposing reality as was used on Broadway.

Davis considers the Broadway play to be stylized and poetic, rather than realistic. The whole play is a dream of Wolfe's and thus unreal; for although the characters are presented as realistic in the book, they are only Tom Wolfe's ideas of people.

"The overtones involved are highly important to the play," said Davis The play is compact, concise, and concentrated on climactic incidents; thus Davis considers the characters to be intensified.

The play — originally scheduled for presentation near Thanksgiving as was its original Broadway opening last year — will instead be shown Dec. 5-6-7. This is so that the play can be given at Memorial Hall rather than in The Playmakers Theatre. This change was to make possible the use of a larger size setting than could be used in the tiny Playmakers Theatre.

The Ugly Truth

There was a man who laughed so hard that you could see the blood oozing out of his wounds. And the wounds could not be healed as long as he was laughing. And the process continued until the patient didn't know there were wounds and believed himself cured, and then he died.

Honesty

Most people have been taught since they were children to be honest. They have been taught not to tell lies, not to cheat, not to steal, and a group of other don'ts that make up the conventional interpretation of what honesty is. And yet, most of these people are not honest.

Even if they followed every one of these maxims they could not be considered honest, for their concept of honesty is too limited.

Honesty, like everything else that is worth existing, requires work, more work than the average individual is willing to give.

It requires a daily introspective bath to find out what a person stands for, for what he stands for is largely what he is. It then requires an evaluation of his actions in light of what he stands for, and of the few people who go though the first part successfully and develop a system of values, or a view of one's self, quail at the second stage. They come to rationalize their actions that are inconsistent with what they stand for. They talk about human weakness, about the cold, hard, cruel world, and about the hundred and one other things that people use to rationalize their actions without once admitting that their failure has been dishonesty and lack of courage.

There are some who view ideas and reality as being in two separate worlds, but for these the analogy is still there that the head could not exist without the body, nor the body without the head, and when the two are acting at cross purposes a trip to the hospital, the morgue, or to perpetual inner agony is the result.

The result is a society that is afraid to face issues, a society unwilling to act, and a group of people that can never really reconcile themselves to their actions.

Honesty implies so much more than the do's and don'ts learned in childhood. It implies a basic congruity between thought and action, between belief and word, and between the individual and himself as expressed through his primary commitments.

There are a group of people who never have made a primary commitment, for whom the do's and don'ts have seemed to suffice, but they have never really faced this world either.

They have never adopted a framework that can say why a thing is good or bad or why they should act in such a manner, and until they do they will continue to vegetate — to not think, act, or reason.

It is an unfortunate situation that in a society where under law there is the opportunity for all people to make ideological commitments, so few do. It is even worse that those who make these commitments will not act accordingly.

Honesty is truly something basic. It is the basic relationship between the individual and himself. It is indeed a shame that more people do not possess this type of honesty.

Competition

People compete for so many things. The compete for offices, meaningful and meaningless, for honors, for notoriety, for prizes, for scholastic achievement, for money, and yet while a certain amount of competition is healthy, people lose sight of the thing that they should be competing against.

The only thing seriously worth competing against is one's own potential ability, and when one falls short of fulfilling his potential, the other titles, awards, esteems, merits, and adulations that he has received do not suffice to make him a winner. He has lost the race that counts — the race against himself.

Love

P. W. Carlton

What is it that makes us rush round in mad confusion, that fills us with ecstatic dreams of bliss? Why it's love, of course. There is so much of it manfiest about us that we cannot choose but see it—providing we open our eyes for a peek. It's obvious in the faces of men and women, in works of beauty, in every creation of God and man.

Take for example the infatuated couple staring at one another as they proceed aeross campus, knocking down little children in their path, oblivious of all but the minute twitching of each other's masseter muscles and the elevation of the superoptic pubescent area. He trips over a chain and disappears into a rose hush, but this accident has no effect on the two. She simply stands and gazes lovingly at the prostrate form before her until he rises, sighing, and accompanies her into the waiting sunset. Boy, stone cold dead in the market.

Love is the most precious commodity in existance today. On second thought, we cannot call it a commondity, for true love cannot be bought or sold, (regardless of what you're thinking, you lecherous rascals.) Love is an ephemeral entity, something you can't quite put your finger on. Like silvery drops of liquid mercury in a dish, you're never able to quite pin it down. Paradoxically, once you've got it, nothing can take it away from you. You've picked a winner at last. No one can kill it or even touch it. It's always there, a part of your consciousness, a living, glowing thing that renders any situation humorous, any obstacle surmountable.

Love has a way of sliding into one's eyes, making them sparkle differently. It affects the speech, rendering conversation agreeably pleasant. Those in love are often found guilty of actually being nice guys, a terrible accusation. Love is the sugar that coats the bitter pill of living, that tints the drabness of existence with the hopeful hues of joy.

We said previously that love cannot be bought or sold. Well, it cannot be taken by storm, either. When one deals with the force of life, he must needs tread lightly. No one can gain love by demand. When you try to grasp it, it slides through your fingers like putty. It can't exist in a vacuum, for it requires a vehicle to do its work and this vehicle is man. Love attracts people as honey does flies. Those that manifest it are always sought after by their contemporaries. In fact it's liable to get downright annoying at times. These glowing individuals become the center of attraction at meal time, so that everyone wishes to dine at their table. Nine people at a four man table is too much of a good thing. Their social life is so excessive as to be detrimental to academics. But these are minor details in veiw of the overall goal, manifesting the rapture of pure goodness.

Love is visible under the oddest and most unusual of circumstances. The little boy in dingy jeans, whistling a ditty and giving me a cheery greeting as he tried to bum a ride for himself and his tired mother, trudging wearily beside her beloved son, somehow touched a chord within me. The love and concern in this youth had moved him to this pathetic but almost beautiful gesture.

Love appears in all things. Examine any situation closely and the evidences of its presence will be observed. This is inevitable. My roommate was criticizing my singing today. I warbled the opening lines of "Twelfth of Never" and went at it hammer and tongs. He bore it as long as he could. Then he had to cut me down. I sang:

"Hold me close, never let me go."

He said: "Let me go to the head and barf. This is too much."

"Hold me close, melt my heart like april snow," I yodeled.

"Give me a blowtorch and I'll fry your brain," he snarled.

I feigned tears. This brought:

"Oh that they were drops of blood."

Then he threatened to stuff a sock in my mouth if I didn't shut up. So I did. This description presents roomie as a real rotter. To an outsider we appear to fight all the time. But we're really quite close. Somewhere under all the invective and blasphemy that is roommate, I know there's the spark of love, and this makes all our attacks upon one another innocuous. He must see it in me, too, or he'd have murdered me by now.

The crux of the matter is this. Love is worth having. If you've got it, bask in it, 'cause you're doing well. If you haven't got it, start looking for it. You are OTL until you know love. (There are, unfortunately, a large number in this category.) Thanksgiving Day is past, but the time for thanksgiving is never past. Let us pause in our daily routine to thank God that He, in His infinite wisdom, saw fit to give us the greatest thing in the world, Love.

"I Don't Quite Know How To Tell You This —"

Out Of Joint

March Wind

We are all the prisoners of our skin. And we have all experienced the exquisite agony of an attempt at genuine communion with another human being in the face of this irreducible handicap. But if we add to the omnipresent skin the omnipresent machine, then even the attempt at communion must fall by the wayside.

These thoughts are triggered (note the mechanistic metaphor) by the recent news that U'N C has acquired an electronic brain. I am not at all sure that this is A Good Thing. Granted there is an acute shortage of human brains on this campus, I am still dubious as to whether a maze of wires and transistors can substitute.

It is my understanding that Dean Godfrey recently presented a small problem to one of these electronic computers. The machine coughed, spluttered and whirred for a few seconds and then popped up a card that said: "Cogito, ergo sum." My informant tells me that it took six strong men to stop the good Dean from strangling the machine in its electronic cradle.

Other faculty members have shown a similar nervousness with respect to the "educational television" offered by WUNC. This nervousness is hidden beneath a lot of jovial banter to the effect that television repairmen get paid better than UNC professors, so why worry and get all upset? And then, of course, there are those clever fellows who have decided that the early bird will capture th electronic worm. At least one of these scholars is known informally as "The Tarheel Zorro" for his frequent appearances in front of the zoomar lens.

The battle for ratings will inevitably spill over into "educational television." The story will go something like this:

"Professor G. V. Taylor's exciting spectacular on the French Revolution soared to an all-time high in the latest Trendex. Survey results released last night showed that Taylor captured 33.1 percent of the potential audience. Bucking the powerhouse Taylor show in the same time slot, C. Hugh Holman's Southern Literature Cavalcade slumped to 15.7, and there is talk at Network Headquarters that South Building will not renew Holman's option at the conclusion of this 13-week period. There is a distinct possibility that Country Music Time with Big Jim Tatum will be moved in to oppose the Taylor show."

The latest issue of Playboy has two splendid little pieces satirizing this onrush of technology that we have been talking about. First of all, for those big time executives who have a telephone gadget that says: "This is a recording. Mr. Johnson is not at home. If you would care to leave a message, please wait for the tone signal. Beep." Playboy suggests the following responses:

Response A: "Mr. Smith is calling Mr. Johnson. He can be reached till 7:30 at MA 6-0076. This is a recorded message." This response suggests you have a machine that calls other machines.

Response B: Make a recording of the weather forecast you get over the telephone and play it back to Johnson's machine. This will make Johnson think that HIS machine is calling other machines.

Response C: "This is Smith's machine speaking. Be on the corner of Sixth and Sheffield at midnight. We machines are taking over."

Response D: When you finally get Johnson instead of his machine. "Hello, Johnson? This is Smith. Let me speak to your machine."

The other Playboy piece is a monologue by the "Sick, Sick, Sick" cartoonist Jules Feiffer. The conclusion of the monologue goes like this:

"She finished off four whiskey sours and a lobster dinner. I offered her a nightcap up at my place. But she said she had to get up early the next morning. Then I told her about my NEW DANISH SPEAKER, SWEEDISH TWEETER, ITALIAN-BALANCED, WEST GERMANY-ASSEMBLED HI-FI. You can bet she changed her mind. I let her play all my MEGATON FILTERED, VACUUM GROOVED, COLLECTOR'S SPECIALS. She likes to sing so I taped her voice on my MIRACO STEREO MULTI-DUB PLAYBACK SETUP. She likes to dance so I put her in leotards and shot FIVE HUNDRED FEET of 16 MM. COLOR. And then I asked her to stay over. And she slapped me. I HATE girls who try to use me."

Sic transit gloria mundi.

Meters

Sidney Dakar

I hesitate to comment on a subject that was prosaic to begin with, yet one that has been beaten to death by all sides, viz., parking meters. Let's hope that I am the last to comment. Let the foul deed be forgotten.

This whole controversy has been distorted from all directions. Many have been lamenting over the question of parting with a nickel. This is ridiculous. Very few of us really value a nickel any more, not to mention a penny. Most of us give about the same thought to spending a nickel as we do to brushing our teeth.

This is an emotional issue to most of us and isn't concerned with the pros and cons of parking space or revenue. Most of us who have lived here for any length of time look upon Chapel Hill as a special place and not merely just another town. However, more and more as time goes on the commercial interests in the town are changing this for us. More and more the town is loosing its intimate contact with us. Given enough time and a few more city ordinances, some of us will leave our once beloved Chapel Hill with a positive dislike for the place or at best only a neutral feeling. I personally reacted to the installation of these meters as if someone had installed one in my front yard at home. But, I suppose I am naive.

In this machine age man instinitively revolts against all machines. It is a battle between man and the machine to see which will be supreme. It is a rare man who doesn't have the malicious urge to take a few good swings with a fire axe at a $1,000 vending machine that has accepted his dime and yet stands there and contemptuously refuses to give anything in return. Paying homage to a parking meter is no exception.

If it is a question of revenue, there are certain other psychologically less painful ways of collecting it. There are all kinds of sales taxes that most of us are willing to pay without becoming emotionally involved.

However, the merchants are using the argument that the measure was largely for creating more parking spaces downtown. This argument insults the intelligence of anyone who has hunted for thirty minutes for a parking space in the thousands of towns that have parking meters. Within a few weeks when everyone becomes accustomed to the parking meters the spaces will be just as full as they ever were. As I have said, not many of us really value a nickel today and we will certainly be glad to put one into a meter to have a place to park. Unfortunately everyone will feel the same way and consequently there will be no meter available for us to deposit our nickels. When we do find an empty space, many of us will find that we don't have the proper change and untold oaths will be uttered that should shock this very religious minded town.

In terms of Polonius' hyphenated "art," THE MAGIC MAKER: E. E. CUMMINGS might be called a biographical-historical-anecdotal-critical treatment of the poet. Happily, only the publishers claim for this book the title of "biography": Mr. Norman is wise enough to omit from his introduction all possible name-tags.

If the entire book must be fitted into a category, it can only fit into that ambiguous catch-all, unprovided for in the Dewey Decimal System, but popularly known as the "profile." Mr. Norman chooses a number of aspects of Cummings' life—some of them external events, some of them activities — and uses them as beach-heads for inspections of the man and his poetry.

With the exception of his detailed and beside-the-point account of the events connected with Cummings' imprisonment in France during World War I, and his sallies into the often confused world of Cummings criticism, Mr. Norman sticks close to the man and the poetry. The strictly historical investigation and documentation of Cummings' imprisonment, quite apart from its influence on the poet, is justified despite its impertinence by the fact that the information has never before been published, and it is high time that the public record was set straight.

On the other hand, Mr. Norman's defense of the poet against his critics is both unnecessary and poorly handled. Obviously, Mr. Norman appreciate Cummings as a poet, and his own experience as a poet as well as his close and long friendship with Cummings may have led him to defend his appreciation against the critics. However well intentioned hs criticism of the critics, however, it is quite pointless. No amount of rebuttal will satisfy everyone and after more than thirty years of writing poetry, Cummings' reputation is sufficiently established in both high and low places to make further recruiting, particularly of this sort, slightly tedious.

The fault is compounded by the fact that Mr. Norman, perhaps unintentionally, has chosen some rather silly criticism to represent the anti-Cummings faction, and opposed it with excerpts from Cummings' most articulate supporters. He omits, on the other hand, any consideration of such an astute critic as R. P. Blackmur, who takes lengthy exception to Cummings' poetry in LANGUAGE AS GESTURE.

Apart from this consideration, the book is generally rewarding. Mr. Norman has quite wisely allowed Mr. Cummings to define himself through his writings as much as possible, and his selections from Cummings' work are abundant and apt. The illustrations — photographs of the poet and some of his paintings, as well as some of Cummings' fine drawings — add to the delight.

To repeat: this is an excellent piece of work. Future writers will undoubtedly further the examination of Cummings along each of the lines which Mr. Norman has begun, but this is a valuable beginning; valuable not only for such as the brave few who participate in Dr. Cotten's thrice-weekly intellectual exercises, but also for anyone who has ever encountered the beautiful soul of Mr. Cummings through his poetry.

The Old Well Remembers

Sam Hummel

This article is new, and we are new at the University. However, the University is old, very old and, it remembers the days gone past; before motor cars, airplanes, and prohibition. The times have changed, the school has changed, but the people who come here are the same. As the Old Well remembers, through newspapers articles of years gone by, you may feel a little closer to those who went before, who were so much like us.

November 26, 1898

Carolina had just finished their football season with the Georgia game, when they received this message from a Georgia paper which had covered the game. "No dirty playing was resorted to on either side, and the North Carolina boys won the admiration of all by their gentlemanly behavior, as well as by their superb playing." Whether in victory or defeat North Carolina has always upheld her reputation for clean sport and gentlemanly conduct and that we prize more than all victory.

Editorial: If you are so fortunate as to own an auto, do not strive to advertise the fact by driving it about the campus and arboreturn walks, thus forcing the rightful owners over into the gutter. Certain faculty members and the majority of the student body firmly object to this practice. Be an altruist and keep your auto in the street where it belongs.

And academic complains.

Letter to the Editor: Graduated students will certainly have a nice Thanksgiving. One reason is that the professors in Bingham Hall and Peabody are giving last minute quizzes on Wednesday. At least three professors I know will Tuesday night be enjoying an opera while I will be in the library sweating with the rest of the commerce students in preparation for their quizzes. Most of us poor devils have two quizzes tomorrow.

Won't some of the professors please change their quiz days? Won't someone give us a break? It would be good psychology.

Have the people changed? Not a bit.

Letters

Editor:

I recently had the privilege of attending the Fifth World Order Study Conference held in Cleveland, Ohio, Nov. 18-21. The theme of the Conference was "Christian Responsibility on a Changing Planet." The meeting was called by the Department of International Affairs of the National Council of Churches, and was by definition a "study" conference.

Most of the publicity given the Conference has reflected the position of the delegates on the China problem. There are other significant aspects of the Conference which deserve to be noted, however. Following are three impressions which were most vivid in my mind at the close of the meeting.

The 500 laymen, women, youth and clergy delegates of the churches, represented a high level of competence. Among them were political scientists, economists, members of Congress, government officials, diplomats, scientists, theologians, college presidents and other leaders in public life. Many of them also hold important responsibilities in their denominations, and in the ecumenical movement.

The large number of carefully selected delegates was evidence of a growing concern for international responsibilities among the people of our country. This promises well for the nation-wide education and action program for peace to be carried forward across the 49 states of our nation from June 1959 to June 1960.

The delegates combined their technical competence with deep Christian conviction. They sought to combine Christian idealism and hard realism, looking squarely at some of the toughest and most complicated problems which hold such high promise or dire peril for mankind in our time. The reports and message of the Conference reflected not simply the wisdom of this world, but an urgent concern for their fellow human beings of every race and nation and for the will of God for more justice, freedom, love and peace on earth.

Frosh Beat Hargrave 100-78

By ELLIOTT COOPER

Carolina's freshman basketball team had things all their own way last night as they won their first game of the season from an outmanned Hargrave Military Academy five by a 100-78 score.

The Tar Babies combined half scores of 52 and 48 to hang up their total of 100 for the night.

Dean Smith's frosh led 52-32 at halftime, but were only able to add 2 points to their margin in the last half as the visitors from Chatham, Va., got 46 markers in the final 20 minutes.

Walsh High Scorer

Donnie Walsh was the high scorer for the frosh with a total of 21 points. Center Jim Hudock and Bill Hubbard followed Walsh with 17 and 16 points respectively. Other Tar Heel frosh starters Yogi Poteet and Ken McComb grabbed off 18 points between them.

The Tar Babies led big most of the way and were only in trouble for a short time during the second half when their twenty point margin was cut almost in half. The frosh charge in the final five minutes, however, and built up their lead to 22 points.

The great number of fouls committed was the only thing that detracted from the performance of the frosh. Hudock went out on fouls with 12:30 left in the second half and was followed by Poteet who left the game with 7:53 remaining. McComb, although he did not foul out, played most of second half with four personals.

Smith Pleased

Coach Smith said after the game that he was especially pleased with the performance of his second unit which played a great deal due to the foul situation of the starting five.

With 3:40 left in the second half the visitors came as close as they could with the score standing 82-70. Les than a minute later Walsh hit on three straight foul shots to give the frosh an 89-72 advantage. This was followed by Denny Clark's field goal and two free throws by Pep Callahan.

After a field goal for Hargrave John O'Bannon hit on two straight outside shots to build the Tar Baby lead to 97-74. Two more successful foul shots, this time by Fred Engel, set the frosh one point away from cracking the century mark. With 10 seconds left O'Bannon sank one of two foul attempts to give the winners a 100-76 lead.

Andrews scored the final two points of the game for Hargrave on two foul shots after the final buzzer.

The Scoring

Carolina—McComb, 8; Walsh, 21; Hudock, 17; Poteet, 10; Hubbard, 16; Callahan, 8; Clark, 6; Phillips, 7; O'Bannon, 5; Engel, 2.

Hargrave—Brown, 18; Byrd, 20; Holman, 14; Kresky, 10; Krost, 14; Andrews, 2.

Carolina Swimmers Set To Defend Crown

By JACK RUDY

Carolina's swimmers start their 1958-59 season here this Saturday in Bowman Gray Memorial Pool as host to the Clemson Tigers.

The mermen lack the depth of previous years as graduation greatly depleted the ranks of those swimmers with experence. But Carolina possesses an aggregation of outstanding swimmers, the majority of whom are last year's freshmen. Thus Coach Pat Earey will be placing his chips on his sophomores and returning lettermen to lead the team to another undefeated season.

Returning lettermen who will anchor the team and provide the backstop of experience are Brent Nash, Kit Mercer, Glenn Greene, Tony Schiffman, Pete Reynolds, and Dick Cashwell. Standout sophs, as yet untested in ACC competition, are Harry Bloom, Randy Dodson, Bob Hunter and Vinny Simonton.

Coach Earey sees Clemson and the two meets following, ECC and USC as not being "real tests of our team's potential." These meets are to provide the sophomores with invaluable experience in ACC competition. This is not to say that they will be pushovers; as these teams will be fighting their best to beat Carolina a feat unaccomplished in many years.

Earey sees the teams real threat in Duke on December 20. He feels that this will be the mermen's biggest test as "Duke has a good nucleus of lettermen back from last year—supplemented by a host of rising sophomores who as freshmen were outstanding."

In Earey's estimation, Carolina should go all the way if it beats Duke. The Tar Heels possess the potential and the competitive spirit, the only missing ingredient being experience.

FAMILY CONFERENCE — W. O. Gant, portrayed by Foster Fitz-Simons, and Eliza Gant, played by Marion Fitz-Simons, talk things over in a scene from the Playmakers' production of "Look Homeward, Angel," by Thomas Wolfe, which opens tonight in Memorial Hall.

Playmakers Present Wolfe Tonight In Memorial Hall

The Carolina Playmakers production of Thomas Wolfe's "Look Homeward, Angel" opens tonight at 8:30 for a three-performance run in Memorial Hall.

Foster Fitz-Simons and his wife, Marion, will appear together on stage for the first time in 15 years in this showing of the Pulitzer Prize play.

A member of the faculty of the department of dramatic art, Fitz-Simons was a member of the dancing company of Ted Shawn. For several seasons he was choreographer and principal dancer for "The Lost Colony," Manteo. For the past six summers he has served as choreographer for "Unto These Hills," Cherokee.

Fitz-Simons is the author of "Four on a Heath" and "Road into the Sun," two published one-act plays; "The Twilight Zone," a full-length play written in collaboration with Tom Avera; and "Bright Leaf," a best-seling novel which was made into a successful motion picture.

He was last seen on the Playmakers stage in the role of Ephraim Cabot in "Desire Under the Elms." In "Look Homeward, Angel" Fitz-Simone portrays W. O. Gant.

Mrs. Fitz Simons returns to the Playmakers stage as Eliza Gant, the wife of W. O. Her other roles for the Playmakers have included Lady Macbeth, Medea, The Mother in "Blood Wedding" and The Dowager Empress in "Anastasia."

Mrs. Fitz-Simons has appeared in summer stock work at The Yacht Club Theatre, Nantucket, Mass.; "The Lost Colony," Manteo; "The Highland Call," Buies Creek; and "Unto These Hills," Cherokee.

She served as associate editor for the Koch Memorial edition of The Carolina Playbook and illustrated Josephina Niggli's volume of short stories entitled "Mexican Village."

The Playmakers production of "Look Homeward, Angel" marks the first American showing of the Ketti Frings dramatization of Thomas Wolfe's novel outside of New York.

Tickets are available at 214 Abernethy Hall. The box office at Memorial Hall will open on performance evenings at 7. All seats are reserved at $1.50.

Decoration Competition Set By GMAB

A Christmas-spirited GMAB committee has announced a Christmas door decorating contest for fraternities, sororities and men's and women's residence halls.

The Special Events Committee is sponsoring the contest "to create more Christmas atmosphere on the University campus."

Edna Faye Pugh, chairman of the committee, said yesterday engraved trophies will be awarded winners in these two divisions: 1) fraternity and sorority and 2) men's and women's dorms.

To enter the contest, the dorm or Greek organization must contact Edna Faye at the Alpha Delta Pi house by Thursday, Dec. 11.

The doors will be judged by several residents of Chapel Hill Monday, Dec. 15, at 7 p.m. The judging will be based on originality of the decoration, neatness and appropriateness.

Flick Time Changed

The times for tonight's free flick have been changed slightly because the movie lasts nearly two and one-half hours.

The first showing of "The High and The Mighty," starring John Wayne, will be at 7. The second show will be at 9:30.

Saturday's free flick, "Pete Kelly's Blues," will be shown at the usual times: 7:30 and 10 p.m.

Coed Gets Note From Aga Khan, Pays Three Cents Postage Due

By ANN FRYE

Barbara Deans, junior, paid three cents postage due on a letter gladly because that particular letter was from—the Aga Khan!

That's right, the leader of millions of Moslems and a student at Harvard, wrote to this Carolina coed who'll "do most anything on a dare."

Miss Deans decided, after reading several newspaper and magazine accounts of the Aga Khan, that she'd invite him to spend the Christmas holidays at her home in Red Oak.

Wednesday the letter from Aga came.

Type-written on what looked like a 5 1-2 by 4 inch note card, the letter said. "Dear Miss Deans, I thank you most sincerely for your kind letter and for your invitation for the Christmas vacation which I am unable to accept. Yours sincerely, Aga Khan."

The letter was dated Nov. 24.

In the upper left corner of the card was a silver emblem, probably signifying his official position.

Miss Deans said she didn't expect an affirmative reply, but it was fun just writing and getting a letter in return.

Right now, she's very proudly showing off her Aga Khan letter to girls in McIver Hall. But she's also guarding th ekeep-sake closely from the envious, but less daring, coeds.

Army Planning Moon Shot With Modified Jupiter-C

WASHINGTON—(AP)—The Army has moved to stage center on the lunar shooting gallery at Cape Canaveral, Fla., and may fire its first space probe this week, possibly tomorrow.

The Associated Press reported Nov. 23 that the Army's initial shot aimed toward the Moon had been scheduled for Dec. 6 and would be fired with the basic intent of going beyond and eventually orbiting the Sun. There were no indications here yesterday of any change in plan.

The rocket, Juno II, was seen being readied for its trip. The huge rocket sat in the open for a brief period earlier this week after the service tower was rolled back as part of the early countdown for launching.

The Air Force, with its three unsuccessful lunar probes, had hoped to orbit the moon and span its far side, sending back data to be converted to crude photographs. It therefore had only three days out of the month when the conditions for such a shot were favorable.

The Army, hoping to shoot on by the Moon with a simple payload containing no scanning device, has a more leisurely schedule. It can take most of next week for its try, if need be.

The Army team, headed by Dr. Wernher Von Braun and Maj. Gen. John B. Medaris, will try something new in launching vehicles. Theirs is a considerably modified Jupiter intermediate range ballistic missile topped by three high-speed upper stages of solid propellant rockets.

This combination is considerably more potent than the Jupiter-C rocket, a combination of a Redstone missile with a rocket cluster of three upper stages with which the Army launched the Explorer Earth satellites.

Juno II, having no scanning device and no reverse rockets to send it into a lunar orbit, is lighter as well as simpler than the Air Force pioneer probes. Its instruments weigh only about 15 pounds, compared with 25 pounds aboard Pioneer I.

Because of the giant push of the Juno II rocket, the Army looks for its probe to span the quarter million miles to the vicinity of the moon in about 33 hours and 45 minutes.

Publishing Firm, Writer Sued For Libel

The Chapel Publishing Company, publishers of The Chapel Hill Weekly, and C. Phillips Russell have been named defendants in a civil action charging libel, filed in the Orange County Superior Court.

Plaintiff in the suit is the News Leader Company, Inc., publisher of the Chapel Hill News Leader. Russell is a former editor of the News Leader.

Basis of the action is a statement written by Russell and published by the Chapel Hill Weekly last August in which, among other things, it was charged "two stockholders have usurped control of the management of the paper and its finances" and that the paper has been placed in receivership.

The plaintiff charges that portions of the statement are "false, libelous and defamatory" and that they were published with "actual malice on the part of each of the defendants and in a wanton disregard of and indifference to the plaintiff's rights and to the effect of said publication on the plaintiff's business and business reputation."

Actual and punitive damages totalling $75,000 are sought by the plaintiffs.

Summer Jobs Under Study By Placement

The Placement Service is already thinking in terms of summer jobs for students.

A meeting for students interested in working at resorts next summer has been planned for Wednesday, Dec. 10, at 2:30 p.m. in 210 Gardner Hall.

Several UNC students who have worked previously in resort hotels in New England, New York state, the West and Western North Carolina will be present to give suggestions on picking the hotels, writing letters of application and applying for the right job.

Curtis Griffin and Lewis Hicks, who worked in Massachusetts, will show slides. Others present will include Alex Coffin, Gail Godwin, Eunice Simmons, Harry Rosenberg and Graham Claytor.

To its list of possible resorts for student work the Placement Service has added those resorts which have been popular with UNC students for several years. This list of resorts and new annual summer job directories are available at the Placement Service.

Some of the job possibilities at resorts which will be discussed Wednesday include: waiters, waitresses, desk clerks, bell hops and bushops.

INFIRMARY

Students in the infirmary yesterday were:

Geographer George Cressey Urges Sympathetic Policy

A leading American geographer Wednesday night urged that American foreign policy toward Southwest Asian nations be more sympathetic and geared to meet the needs of the people living in these strategic locations.

Dr. George B. Cressey, who spoke to the UNC Department of Geology and Geography, has just returned from a year of travel and of teaching at the University of Beirut, Lebanon, to resume his duties as Maxwell professor of geography at Syracuse University.

During his travels which ranged from Turkey to Afghanistan to Arabia, Dr. Cressey observed the economic, political and social transformations in countries east of the Mediterranean.

"Those people are undergoing two revolutions," he said. "In their efforts to throw off foreign domination, they are experiencing something like our Revolution of 1776. They are also following the example of the French Revolution of 1789 in reforming the domestic government and overthrowing rules while searching for a regime which can solve their basic problems," he continued.

Dr. Cressey noted that the American press is often critical of these actions, when it should be sympathetic and try to develop good will. "We don't have to agree with their objectives to have good relations," he said.

Centering his remarks on Iran, Iraq, Saudi Arabia and Kuwait, he stressed these four nations' important possession of two-thirds of the world's petroleum reserves.

This oil forms the "black" on the area's landscape, he said, and although concentrated in a small 5,000 square miles, has great significance in providing cash for the economy.

Other dominant colors are the green of the agricultural land in the oases, the brown of the desert's million square miles and the white of the snow-covered mountains whose run-off provides water. "It is the 'white' which makes like possible in the area although the 'black' shows more dollar value," Dr. Creassy said.

Dr. Creassey has been on the Syracuse faculty since 1931, and is past president of the International Geographical Union. Winner of several research awards, he has traveled widely throughout Asia, including the Siberian Arctic, Japan, interior China and Java.

His daughter, Mrs. Bradford Seasholes, is living in Chapel Hill while her husband does graduate work in political science. Mrs. Seasholes has a graduate degree from UNC and is doing public welfare work.

Fire Damages Station Here

Considerable damage to the interior of a Carrboro service station was done this morning by a fire which started, firemen reported, when gasoline being used to clean a floor was ignited.

Firemen answered the call at 11:15 a.m. today at the Elmer Pendergraft station on West Franklin St.

Most of the damage, the firemen said, occurred in the garage section, where the floor was being cleaned.

UNC Doctor Made Admiral In Reserves

Dr. Robert A. Ross of the UNC School of Medicine received his official appointment as a rear admiral in the Medical Corps of the Naval Reserve here Thursday.

The ceremony was held in the Morehead Building last night and was atended by UNC and Duke University officials and a number of Dr. Ross' close friends.

Dr. Ross, professor and head of the Department of Obstetrics and Gynecology, joined the UNC faculty in 1952. Previously, he taught at the Duke School of Medicine.

The official Navy Department notification of Dr. Ross' promotion to flag officer status was presented to the new two-star admiral by Rear Admiral J. C. Daniel, commandant of the Sixth Naval District. He told Dr. Ross, Your selection for promotion to Rear Admiral is indicative of the high esteem in which your professional skill and your interest in the Naval Reserve is held..

"As an associate member of Naval Reserve surface divisions and in your present assignment as Commandant's Local Representative, you have always found time in your busy schedule to render advice, support and assistance to the Naval Reserve program.

Solons Defeat Levy Bill 27-18

By DEE DANIELS

A two and a half hour session of the Student Legislature last night rescinded the single fall election amendment from the ballot next Tuesday, and defeated Ed Levy's (SP-UP) bill to send telegrams to the governors of Arkansas and Virginia disapproving their closing of the public schools.

The amendment was called back after Norman Smith (ind.) introduced a bill changing the single election time from fall to spring. The bill would apply only to Legislative elections, and will be sent to committee.

Levy, in defense of his bill, said it deals entirely with education. "I believe that you believe in education." Therefore, he contended the body should say what they believe in helping others to fight for their education.

Arguments against the bill centered on its impracticality. It would not actually accomplish anything. Gordon Street (UP) stressed it would cause strife on campus but would not affect Arkansas or Virginia in any way.

David Grieg (UP) pointed out that the action the bill is dealing with would be hindered by any stand which is not positive. It could also possibly bring bad publicity for UNC. He believes it is a problem for the federal government and the individual states.

Don Furtado, student body president, expressed regret that students are willing to ignore a national problem such as this and confine themselves to their own campus. He feels the problem is facing educational systems all over the land. Furtado urged the Legislative body to "make yourselves heard".

"It is a right of mankind to become educated", stated Gary Green in defense of the proposed action. He reminded the solons that they are students speaking for other students. Consequently, "to say it is not our problem is merely passing the buck."

But despite firm stands for the bill, the opposition championed as the legislators voted the proposed action down.

A bill introduced at the last session by Norman Smith (ind.) to create the office of Legislature chaplain was sanctioned.

Harry S. Truman Speaks Tonight

Former U. S. president Harry S. Truman will speak in Memorial Auditorium in Raleigh tonight.

UNC 'Needs' Publicity Group Hears Aycock

Chancellor William B. Aycock and other administrative officers have suggested ways for the Committee on State Affairs to carry out its plans to publicize the University's needs.

In a meeting of the committee Wednesday night Aycock outlined the needs of the University as being increased faculty pay, appropriations for teaching supplies, a new student union, repairs and additions to classroom buildings, additional books for the library, an appropriation for the extension division of the University and a remedy for the rising dormitory rent.

A meeting is scheduled for Monday, Dec. 15, at 7:30 for student volunteers who will contact their representatives during Christmas to present the financial needs of the University to them. Chancellor Aycock, who supports the committee's program, will speak at this meeting.

"Our Growing University," a student presentation of the needs of the University, will be released during the middle of next week. Copies of the publication will be given to the members of the General Assembly during Christmas.

An office has been set up in Roland Parker 3 to interview students interested in volunteering to contact their representatives over the Christmas holidays. The office will be open every afternoon next week.

OVER 55,000 CHARTS

Map Collection Growing

UNC's Library, known as "all things to all people," is even a haven for topographers!

Map-makers and anyone else interested in learning quickly where windmills are, or where almost anything else is on a map, will surely be at home among the more than 55,000 charts in a special room in the Library.

The Library was selected, in 1945, as one of the depositories for the Army Map Service maps, and 50,000 maps were received until 1950, when the service was suspended.

The service has been reinstated and 1,400 Army maps were received last month.

Until the Map Room was opened last July the Army maps were stored away. They are now filed in special cases in the Map Room, located on the southeast corner of the first floor and entered through the Manuscript Department.

The Army maps, which vary in scale, projections, size, form and color, are topographic maps. They give such detailed information as motor highways, main and secondary roads, paths, causeways, railways, churches, cemeteries, windmills, woods and orchards.

Should anyone anticipate a personal visit to Khrushchev, some 50 maps on Russia are available. Latin American maps are on hand for cha-cha fans, courtesy of the Institute of Latin American Studies.

Five 64 by 40-inch maps are shown of the world, South America, Venezuela and the United States. These maps, in three dimensions, are printed in 11 colors to emphasize relief features. In addition to topographic features other information includes: cities, rivers, national parks and monuments. But, alas, Sad Sam isn't shown.

For air-minded folks there are 2,000 aeronautical charts, published by the U. S. Air Force. They cover the entire earth and give topographical and physical features in addition to specific data of interest to pilots.

Civil War maps and National Geographic maps are available.

Seven relief plaques exhibited on the walls of the Map Room depict the contours of Europe, Asia, Africa, North America, South America,

A POWER POLE WOULD FIT HERE—The indention on front of this late model car is no new design . . . it came from a power pole, which the car hit a few minutes earlier Tuesday night. Limitations

There are certain limitations to the press and all other mass communications media which hampers their effectiveness in stimulating individuals to thought or action.

The press can very often attain group action, occasionally it can attain mob action, but almost never does it attain sustained individual betterment.

It can attain social reform, it can spread ideas, but it has difficulty in making people have any realization of the pertinence of those ideas to the individual.

Occasionally, it can shock a person or two out of his lethargy, but due to the constant need to inform, it cannot follow the shock with therapy on the individual level.

Yet, whatever hope remains for man as man, it is contained in the development of each individual, for one group or mob is about as bad as another group or mob in the unreasonableness of its actions.

Thus, some things must be handled on the individual level, and here is perhaps the challenge of the teaching profession — to awaken maybe one or two individuals in a class of fifty, to see their eyes opening, to realize that suddenly they have an awareness of what is going on in this world, and to see them pursue this newly found interest.

It perhaps does not shake any mountains, this awakening of one or two individuals, but its result is much more important than the mountains shaken or the social security plan begun.

The challenge, however, is no less great. The challenge is indeed greater, in that the teacher alone offers the chance to open the door for people to that wonderful world of thought, and offer the sole opportunity to develo pa group of thinking individuals or even a society o fthinking individuals.

They may not be able to instigate mass action, but they, and they alone, can provide the conditions where group action has any meaning whatsoever in itself and for the participants.

The challenge is there. It is a pity that more do not rise up to it, and that the few that do here and in other places are not more richly rewarded for their endeavor.

Butler

Paul Butler, perhaps has not been one of the most capable chairmen the Democratic Party has ever had, but Mr. Butler has surely been one of the most outstandingly courageous.

His forthright statements on civil rights have added a little distinction to what in ordinary years is a servile political job. His insight on this question may have angered many southerners, but it has reflected nothing but credit on the Democratic Party in general and Mr. Butler in particular.

The current potential move to unseat is no more than a patent political gambit to show party unity at a point where the split between the northern and southern parts of the Democratic Party is almost inevitable in 1960.

The unseating of Butler would be no more than a sanction of the attitudes of the Southern Demagogues toward the civil rights issue.

The Democratic Party now and in 1960 will have the opportunity to make a clear and unequivocal stand in favor of the rights of all citizens whether black, white, christian, or Jew, in a democracy. It has the opportunity to get out from the mud of Southern demagoguery. The ousting of Paul Butler would severly damage this purpose.

The Time

This is the time of year when students are working in direct cross purposes with professors. It is a time for quizzes, term papers, and book reports in the instructor's zeal to have the Christmas vacation time to grade and correct.

For the student it is a time of delaying tactics in hopes that he can postpone the quizzes, book reports, and term papers until after Christmas so that he too can have a chance to study.

The result is general confusion and a deluded victory for the professor, which perhaps is justified.

One would think an accomodation could be made so that either the quizzes or the papers could be done after the holidays. These three weeks will probably have more to do with a student's future in Chapel Hill than any other comparable period of time.

The Professor Problem

Sidney Dakar

It should be mandatory that everyone from the highest administrator to the lowest graduate instructor and all students read George Williams' book SOME OF MY BEST FRIENDS ARE PROFESSORS. Mr. Williams has described quite eloquently and humorously the feelings of almost all students.

We can probably assume correctly that very few of the bad professors (and there are many) will bother to read this book. I suggest that you suffering students pool your dimes and send anonymously a copy of this book to certain professors. Be sure to plainly mark the passages which pertain particularily to him.

After studying at several universities, I completely agree with Mr. Williams on all of his points. I have always had the feeling that most administrations look upon the student as an undesirable, although necessary, part of the university. If possible, they would eliminate the student entirely in order to have a more perfectly functioning organization.

When the student maybe suggests that one of the "required" courses doesn't fit his needs, he is looked upon with great disdain as if he were trying to put something over ontheprofessors. Indeed, he may not be able to make his request to peopie with any authority. Arrogant secretaries guard the dean's time as if he were a deity. After all, a dean has more important duties than troubling himself with a student's problems. I am sorry to say that I have had many encounters with such secretaries on this campus.

The 25 year old veteran transfering to this university with 75 semester hours (all A's and B's) still has to take all of the lower division "required" courses. This veteran has spent a year in the Mediterranean, he has visited the cultural centers of London, Pairs, Vienna, Rome and Athens; he has talked with smugglers in Istanbul; he has tried to console a prostitute in Naples who, in an unguarded moment, sobbed helplessly while relating how her mother and father were killed in the war when she was 9 and how she had to eat garbage to stay alive; he has shared a bottle of Gordon Bleu with a Negro in Trinidad and tried to encourage him who had saved for ten years in order to study law in London and then had to spend everything when his little sister contacted polio; he has visited the opium dens in Hong Kong; he has felt a deep sense of shame while watching hungry little boys and girls eat the scraps from his meal; he has lain for hours in a rice paddy, helpless and afraid and resined to the fact that he was going to be killed and has seen his whole life flash before him and has realized just how petty most people and their worries are; he has tried to write the mother of his best buddy who has been blown into by a gernade and has ended by cussing, getting drunk and then crying. He sees all of these things and many more when his advisor solemnly tells him that he must take hygiene and social science I and II in order to graduate. If he was not already a confirmed cynic, he would laugh in the face of his advisor.

The veteran and the 18 year old freshman are given the same treatment here. Both must take all of the "required" courses. Both must be put into the production line at the same point and both are expected to come out the other end as "well-rounded" men. They are well-rounded all right; any sharpe edges their minds might have had will have been ground to a dull, smooth and uninteresting finish by the "required" courses along the Aldous Huxley type assembly line.

Notes In Review

Sam Worthington II

(Reviewer Worthington is substituting for regular reviewer Arthur Lessing, who was participating in the concert.)

The University Symphony Orchestra chose an especialy difficullt program Tuesday night, but the final result was extremely good. Starting with a Bach Prelude and Fugue, which was very capably done, they then performed a far more ambitious work, the Enigma Variations by Edward Elgar. This set of variations is rather unique in that each variation is a musical portrait of an acquaintance of the composer.

University orchestras rarely get the chance to achieve professional perfection in their performances. This is chiefly for two reasons: thd large turnover in membership each year and the ever-present problem of rehearsal time. Although the orchestra got slightly out of control a few times, they played with an interest and vitality that was most enjoyable.

After the intermission, we heard a Passacalia, written by one of the members of the orchestra, Mr. Ralph Dunlap. Passacalia writing involves a repeated figure that is changed from section to section of the orchestra, along with which we are treated to an ever-changing melody. Consequently, at best a Passacalia can become monotonous and at worst devestatingly dull. But when the main motive is dull, the pains are tripled and the result is music scarcely worth writing. This was the case with this particular Passacalia. Professor Slocum conducted it, however, very sympathetically.

Next the orchestra played an old favorite of mine, the Ralph Vaughn-Williams fantasia on Greensleeves, a lovely work revolving around that famous English tune. It was conducted with a great sense of poetry, and the melody, now peaceful and now deeply moving, filled the auditorium.

Last on the program was the famous 1812 Overture by Tchaikovsky. This work is overplayed and amazingly simple in its implacations and structure, but one never tires of hearing it. Perhaps it is its energy, its exuberance but in any case it was the rip-roaringist finale I have heard in a long, long time. Worthy of special mention in the performance of this piece is the bass-drummer, who whacked that drum as if it were a battery on the Big Mo, and who succeeded admirably in capturing the particular sonority of a cannon. This was in keping with the spirit of the piece. It is a pagaent, a festival. It is not deep, but it is fun, and it was performed to its limits Tuesday night.

Mr. Slocum has proved over and over again to be an extremely capable and expert director. He chose a challenging program and met the challenge well, conduct-in always with spirit and good taste. Tuesday evening was an evening well spent in Hill Hall.

Letters From Many Readers

Editor:

On many occasions, some of the students around the campus have asked this question, "What do you think of Nasser?" My answer to them is this, "Nasser is a man of peace, unity, and prosperity." Some of them accepted this because they understood the situation in the Middle East, but those who have been reading articles written by people who are prejudiced against Nasser say, "no, he is a dictator with a bid D."

Well friends, if Nasser is a dictator, we need such a man as he — a smart, forsighted leader who is very sensitive to the Western nations' colonialism. He declared his independence and neutrality, but the West did not like it.

Nasser had no choice. Since the West denied help to Egypt, Nasser turned to the East, because he could receive help from them. Most of the American people now call him a Communist. But if he had not been denied help from the West, he would not have turned to the East.

So, friends, realize that Nasser is building a nation and trying to unify the Arab people just as the American states are unified, and he needs help. He is neither a Communist nor a dictator, and much of what you read about him is just of pro-Israeli propaganda which is hostile to Nasser's United Arab Republic and too hospitable to the Israelites, who are hoping to recover the ancient Empire of King Solomon, which stretched from the Atlantic Ocean to the Persian Gulf. They want to see the Arab people asleep, as they were in 1947, so that the Israelites can take the opportunity to do more things like they did in the case of Dair-Yasien.

Spectrum, a "new campus magazine," is due to come out in the near future. Are we getting a new "heal" magazine on campus? Is another literary magazine necessary in addition to the North Carolina Quarterly? Certainly there are a few points to be considered.

At first, Spectrum was to have been sponsored by the YMCA but they withdrew their support after the material had been decided upon for the first issue. Apparently some merchants here in Chapel Hill refused to advertise in the new magazine before reading the first issue. However, in spite of this well-timed tacit opposition to the magazine, it will be published privately, under the independent auspices of a student here at Carolina, Jim Hausmann. Obviously, those interested in the Spectrum are determined to make it a success.

The North Carolina Quarterly is the traditional literary magazine of the univesrity, but it draws upon sources outside the university for its material. Less than one tenth of the material in the Quarterly is derived from students of North Carolina. Spectrum, on the other hand, will accept material exclusively from the students and faculty of the university, and will not have the impersonal pseudo-sophisticated nature that characterizes the Quarterly. There may be a need for another publication of this type more closely associated with the students of North Carolina, and there should be sufficient material available for both magazines unless the Quarterly changes its present policy in an attempt to compete with the new student magazine.

It is to be hoped that the Spectrum will not be just another "beat" magazine, and will not justify the fears of the YMCA on this account. Certainly any student who writes good quality material will be published according to the standards of the Quarterly. Why have another magazine at all?

Editor:

In fairness to Mr. Arthur Lessing, author of the column entitled "Notes in Review" (The Daily Tar Heel for December 2, 1958), it must be observed that his remarks, as musical criticism, are quite obviously based on a sound knowledge of music and on a very commendable concern for high standards of musical performance. While his competence as a critic is thus not brought into question (we may discount, in this connection, a certain tendency to indulge in splenetic pontificating as part of the price one may have to pay for exactingly high standards), Mr. Lessing's extremely poor taste in brutally censuring the recital of Mr. and Mrs. Kosemihal makes it obvious that he is not to be credited with being able to discern the proper occasion for bringing into play the awesome instruments of his craft. A critic has responsibilities no less than performers, empressarios and one might pertinently add, editors. These responsibilities include, we must insist, those which are imposed by common courtesy and hospitality. I do not know who was responsible for scheduling Mr. and Mrs. Kosemihal on the Petites Musicales; I do know that they were embarassed and put in an extremely disadvantageous position at the outset by the irresponsible remarks of The Daily Tar Heel, which introduced them without warrant as virtuosos. Mr. Lessing might legitimately have complained to those who scheduled this recital; to air such a complaint in puble was an act of barbarous incivility to people who are guests in our community, and as such, entitled to immunity from an outrage of this sort.

Is there any real reason why the Petites Musicales should not include amateur performances from time to time, provided that the proper distinctions can be made in announcing them? And indeed, does the scheduling of a recital on this series necessarily mean, even now, that a performance of professional caliber is to be expected?

Yours for more responsible journalism,

Walter H. Bishop

Harper's Bizarre

The Thanksgiving Holiday, '58, ended at exactly 6:54 p.m. on Sunday, 30 November.

We got back to Chapel Hill around 6 that evening. The dorm was oppressively warm, and as silent as an empty catacomb.

After unpackin we went to Lenoir, hoping to catch the last of the supper line. To our disappointment the hall was closed down tight.

We were on the verge of going down town when we heard voices in the Pine Room entry below:

"Do you want to fight the line?"

"I don't want to go down town."

"OK."

The voices faded, and we stepped down to investigate.

Supper, or something, was being served. A four-days' growth of line was there ahead of us. Eating was impossible, so we bought a cup of coffee and took a table.

Somber thoughts undoubtedly prevailed, for there was hardly a human sound. Indeed, the only sound that could be traced to humans was the clatter of dishes and associated "clink" of change in the cash register.

As we sat, puzzled students peered in the door, paused, then hurried away, discouraged by the crowd's size, frightened by its silence.

At 6:47 the Holiday almost ended. A student approached the juke box, his hand obviously reaching for change. He regarded the machine for a moment, glanced furtively around at the group, then sheepishly slouched back into line.

After that, the silence increased. The line moved, but on soundless feet, and the "clink" of change was hushed.

At 6:53 the outer door opened, and another student walked in. Disregarding the line, he walked straight to the juke box. The coin was in his hand when he reached it. He plugged in the coin, punched the button, and turned to go.

As he walked away, someone began to sing, "Please love me forever . . ."

It could have been worse.

Prohibition Repeal

Today, not too many years ago, the people of America were again allowed to fill their cups to the freedom of choice that may be exercised in a democracy, for today is the anniversary of the repeal of that scourge to individual freedom and temporary happiness — Prohibition.

It was a healthy day, a day for singing, shouting, laughing, and rioting that signaled the end of prohibition and the triumph of the honest people within a democracy over those who thought ill of people and those who sold liquor illicitly.

It was an achievement for those who believed that you don't make a person stronger by taking away temptation but by having him face temptation and try to overcome it on his own initiative.

The issue is currently being fought in Orange County this very year. The issue is whether the people in a democracy will have the freedom to choose their own pleasures provided these pleasures do not interfere with other people pursuing their pleasures. Again it is not now nor ever has been a right of another to select the pleasure for anyone. They can counsel or advise, but not force.

Indeed such a thing as prohibition is much like the Communist educational system in Russia, where there is a limitation on what is offered the student, so that when he grows up he can see no wider that the horizon of the limted knowledge that he has received. Any information received contrary to the limited scope of his knowledge is rejected as being false, since it is incongrous with what he has learned until now.

The great opportunity in America is that the individual can make his choice — from all the alternatives that are presented to him, and on this basis make his own value judgments. This means that no group be it religious or otherwise will suerimpose its values on the individual.

But to take the issue off the idealistic plan, there remains a good question as to why revenue from alcohol should go to Durham County rather than Orange County. By looking just at some of the roads in this county, the need ofr revenue is abundantly clear.

Moreover, why cause the many people that drink the inconvenience of going twelve miles, for not all the people that drink are ipso facto evil.

The challenge of people's commitment to democracy and their wish for county benefit is clear. Let's drink to a successful referendum on February 7, when ABC stores ought to be voted for Orange County.

THE GIFT HORSE

I know how busy you are—studying, going to class, catching night crawlers—but let me interrupt your multifarious activities—studying, going to class, helping old grads find their dentures after Homecoming—to remind you that busy as you are—studying, going to class, searching for meat in the dormitory stew—time and tide wait for no man, and the Yuletide will soon be upon us. Busy or not, we must turn our thoughts to Christmas shopping. Let us, therefore, pause for a moment in our busy schedules—studying, going to class, rolling drunks—to examine a number of interesting gift suggestions.

We will start with the hardest gift problem of all: What do you give to the person who has everything? Well sir, there follows a list of a half dozen gifts which I will flatly guarantee the person who has everything does not have:

1. A dentist's chair.
2. A low hurdle.
3. A street map of Perth.
4. Fifty pounds of chicken fat.
5. A carton of filter-tip Marlboros.
6. A carton of non-filter Philip Morris.

"What!" you exclaim, your young eyebrows rising in wild incredulity. "The person who has everything does not have cartons of filter Marlboros and non-filter Philip Morris?" you shriek, your young lips curling mockingly. "What arrant nonsense!" you rasp, making a coarse gesture.

And I reply with an emphatic no! The person who has everything does not have filter Marlboros and non-filter Philip Morris—not for long anyhow—because if he has Marlboros and Philip Morris and if he is a person who likes a mild, mellow, fresh, flavorful cigarette—and who does not? eh? who does not?—why, then he doesn't have Marlboros and Philip Morris; he smokes them. He might possibly have a large collection of Marlboro and Philip Morris butts, but whole Marlboros and Philip Morris? No. An emphatic no!

Now we take up another thorny gift problem: What do you buy your girl if you are broke? Quite a challenge, you will agree, but there is an answer—an ingenious, exciting answer! Surprise your girl with a beautiful bronze head of herself!

Oh, I know you're not a sculptor, but that doesn't matter. All you have to do is endear yourself to your girl's roommate, so she will be willing to do you a favor. Then some night when your girl is fast asleep, have the roommate butter your girl's face—quietly, so as not to wake her—and then quietly pour plaster of Paris on top of the butter and then quietly wait till it hardens and quietly lift it off—the butter will keep it from sticking—and then bring you the mold, and you will pour bronze in it and make a beautiful bust to surprise your girl with!

Remember, it is important—very important—to endear yourself to the roommate, because if anything should go wrong, you don't want to be without a girl for the holiday season.

Your gift problem is no problem if you will give Marlboros to your filter smoking friends and Philip Morris to your non-filter smoking friends. Both come in soft pack or flip-top box; both are made by the sponsor of this column.

Kepley Provides Spark For Opening Victory

Dick Kepley, Carolina's 6-8 center from Roanoke, Va., must be considered as the spark that provided the Tar Heels with an 83-67 opening game win over Clemson.

While his mates were having their troubles in the first half, Kepley was pouring in 16 points. He added 8 in the second half to finish as high scorer with a total of 24.

Kepley proved extremely effective on hook shots and lay-ups, and at the free throw line. His score breaks down into 7 field goals and 10 for 11 on foul shots.

His slowing down point-wise in the second stanza of the contest was one of the keys in Carolina's spurt to a big lead. In the first half the Tar Heels had fed consistently to Kepley, and he had complied with goal after goal. In the second half Kepley was used as a partial decoy. With the Clemson defense concentrating on him, the Tar Heels began to shoot and hit on drives and from the outside.

Part of "Right" Combination

Kepley was part of the "right" combination Frank McGuire stuck with in the second half. McGuire shuffled 8 players in and out of the game to find the right combination. When he did, it was really right.

Harvey Salz and York Larese at guards, Kepley at center, and Doug Moe and Lee Shaffer at forwards was the team McGuire settled upon with about 5 minutes gone in the second half. This crew ran all over the helpless Tigers, running their lead as high as 18 points.

It wasn't that the Tar Heels exactly looked bad in the first half, it was just that Clemson looked so good. The Tigers couldn't do anything wrong if they tried, hitting a phenomenal 66 per cent of their shots.

Carolina did have some trouble on rebounds. In the second half they had it all to themselves after the winning combination was installed.

Larese Impressive

York Larese, in his bebut as a Tar Heel, was very impressive. Although Larese didn't shoot as much as some would have liked, he still finished with 15 points to become second high man.

Larese showed especially well in setting up plays to teammates, as did soph Doug Moe. Moe collected 12 points.

Lee Shaffer seemed always to have a shot ready when the occasion demanded. Shaffer also had 12 points for the night. Harvey Salz got 10 points, but his main value came in play-making.

All in all, the Tar Heels had five men in double figures and that adds up to a ballclub. Captain Danny Lotz just missed double digits, closing with 8 markers.

It would now appear that the Tar Heels will be trouble for everybody this season, considering the performance Wednesday night. The team was just that—a team.

State College now has the inside track on the conference crown, having knocked off Maryland 55-53 at College Park Wednesday night. But the Pack can look for trouble the first time they meet McGuire's Tar Heels, sometime after Christmas.

Carolina's next game, a home affair, is Monday night with the talented Virginia Cavaliers. They then move to South Carolina for a single game, and on to Kentucky for the Blue Grass tourney. These games close out the schedule before Christmas.

Bishop Elected

Wayne Bishop, winner of last year's outdoor ACC two-mile and this year's cross country crown, has been elected captain of the 1959 UNC track team.

Succeeding Everett Whatley at the helm, the slender senior from Greenville is considered by most observers to be the top long distance runner in the ACC. Only two weeks ago he sneaked away with the conference cross country championship after missing a month with an injured knee.

This year, Bishop is expected to run both the mile and two mile, and is scheduled to participate in the Sugar Bowl mile and in several Eastern indoor meets.

Don't expect to stay ahead of your bills if you allow them to do all the running.

VOLLEYBALL AWARDS — Above are the awards that will be given to the winning volleyball teams in each division. The large plaques will be awarded to the winning teams in the fraternity and graduate divisions; the small plaque to the winner in the fraternity white division; and the individual trophies to the winners in the dormatory division.

Volleyball Tournament Nears

Twenty-eight teams have advanced to the single-elimination playoffs of the Intramural Volleyball Tournament. These 28 teams battled their ways to the top from among a total group of 68 teams. There were 25 teams in the fraternity blue division, 19 in the fraternity white, 18 in the dormitory division and 6 in the graduate.

All of last years champions are defending their championship this year. These are Victory Village in the dormitory division, Zeta Psi in the fraternity blue, Sigma Nu in the fraternity white, and Medical School 1 in the graduate division.

Along with Victory Village in the dormitory division are Joyner, Winston, Connor and Avery. Graham and Aycock are tied for second place in league 3 and will have to have a playoff between the two of them to see who will go to the tournament playoffs.

LED SCORING

Carolina's Pete Brennan led the ACC in scoring last season with a 21.3 average. Brennan is now a pro player.

Four Nations Plan Response To Reds Offer

WASHINGTON — (AP) — The State Department said today the United States, Britain, France and West Germany are trying to work out a unified response to Russia's proposal for a "Free City" of West Berlin.

On that ground it declined comment on German plans put forth by British Foreign Secretary Selwyn Lloyd.

Lloyd told Parliament yesterday that the British Government was ready for full discussion with Russia about the future of Germany and the security of Europe. He talked about creation of a buffer zone between East and West in East Germany and the establishment of Arms limitation and surprise attack controls.

Such ideas have been advanced at by the western powers for several years.

In declining to take a position on the Lloyd statement, Press Officer Joseph Reap said negotiations with Britain and other countries cover a "variety of possibilities in connection with formulation of a unified response to the Soviet note of Nov. 27."

Butler Is Not Danger To Us Says Truman

By CHUCK FLINNER

Special To The Daily Tar Heel

RALEIGH — Former President Harry S. Truman said yesterday in Raleigh that he considered Paul M. Butler was not harmful to the Democratic Party.

"He is an asset; anybody in the Democratic Party is an asset." He expressed belief there would be no break between the South and North in the party. He added that the Civil Rights plank in the 1956 platform was a strong one. He felt the Civil Rights plank in the 1960 platform would also be a strong one, but, "I am not reading anyone out of the party," he said.

Truman met about 60 members of the press, radio and television in the Senate chamber of the capitol building in Raleigh in an afternoon press conference.

The first question he was asked was about Governor Luther Hodges as a possible candidate for the vice presidency. He replied that Hodges was well qualified, then added, "it is a job where you don't have to work. I know."

He emphatically stated he would not commit himself on a choice for a presidential candidate. "There are so many qualified Democrats who would make good candidates that it would be difficult to choose." He believed a Southerner would have a good chance to appear on the ticket and that the segregation controversy would be no hinderance.

When asked who he thought would be the Republican candidate he said, "I haven't the slightest notion who it would be—but Nixon." Answering one question about his reference in Tennessee about Nixon as a "squirrel head," he said, "If you live in Tennessee and don't know what a squirrel head is you need an education."

Discussing the cold war Truman pointed out that the Russians had broken 32 agreements within one year of the Potsdam agreement. If they break the fundamental points of the agreement, they can not be depended on for an agreement concerning Berlin. He said he favored a strong hand on Berlin. He recalled the situation which came up when Tito threatened to take Trieste. As president he sent three divisions and the Mediterranean fleet to the scene and Tito backed down. He refused to say just what he would do about Berlin. :"That depends on policy set by the President and I happen to be a retired farmer from Missouri."

The smiling 72-year-old former President kept the press and galleries laughing continuously and at one point said, "Come on fellows, ask 'em."

He was asked if he would like to have a more active part in the government. He replied, "I am having more fun than I ever had in my life and I think I have an active part in the government."

Blaze In University Storeroom Does $75,000-$80,000 Damage

FIRE—Firemen and volunteers are shown as they battled yesterday's University storeroom fire which destroyed supplies unofficially estimated at between $75,000 and $80,000. The blaze was discovered at about 8 a.m. Cause of the fire has been attributed to a faulty elevator which was to be repaired next week. Photo By Buddy Spoon

Fire Is Campus' Worst Since Swain Hall Blaze

By ROSEMARY ROBERTS and PRINGLE PIPKIN

An estimated $75,000-$80,000 worth of damage was done to the University Storeroom and equipment stored there in a fire yesterday morning, according to T. H. Ray, manager of the General Storeroom and Purchasing Department.

Chief J. S. Boone of the Chapel Hill Fire Department said it was the worst on the campus since the fire in Swain Hall last winter. He termed the contents "heavily damaged."

A. H. Sheperd Jr., business officer and treasurer of the University, said the building and its contents are covered by the State Fire Insurance Fund.

A representative of the state insurance department was called while the fire was in progress.

The fire is thought to have started around the elevator shaft. Chief Boone explained the fire originated in an electrical motor used for the elevator.

The motor, which is located in the basement, had not been functioning properly. Gray said that repair men were to attend the offending machine within the next week.

When the fire broke out, men in the building made an attempt to fight the fire with extinguishers around 8 a.m. However, the fire within three minutes spread to the upper floors and the men were forced to abandon the building after discharging five or six extinguishers.

The fire department arrived just in time to prevent the explosion of paint and floor oil drums which were overheating. Burning toilet paper and paper towels made the fire difficult to fight.

As soon as the paper towel could be extinguished, they were thrown out the building into trucks and removed. The fire trucks left around noon.

The fire was confined largely to the back of the building and the center section of the building. Water damage was heavy. Around 250 cases of paper towels and toilet paper burned.

Ray said he did not know when rebuilding will start. In the meantime his office will be in Steele.

A brick wall prevented the fire from spreading to gasoline supplies. No firemen were hurt.

No interruption in the supply of paper towels or toilet paper is expected.

University Faces Problem In Supplies

The biggest problem the University faces as a result of the fire which damaged the General Storeroom yesterday morning is in obtaining supplies and, after they are obtained, finding someplace to store them, according to J. S. Bennett, director of operations.

He said that they hope to be able to store supplies in a Carrboro warehouse, but, as of yesterday afternoon, permission had not been granted.

"It's quite a problem," said Bennett. "For instance, there was a carload of paper napkins in there that they are just shoveling out and hauling away in trucks—and the University can't stop because the supply building burned."

He said that the building is divided by fire walls into three sections. While one section was destroyed, there was only 'a smattering of water" in the other two sections.

James A. Branch, business manager, said that it was impossible to estimate accurately the damage because inspectors cannot get into the building yet to make a complete investigation and an inventory must be compiled before it can be known exactly what supplies were in that particular section. The inventory will take several days.

He said that the supply building, like all state-owned buildings, is completely covered by insurance for both fire and water damage.

The University uses the building to house all supplies. Branch mentioned such things as paint, varnish, wax and coils of copper wire as being in the destroyed section.

This is the first major fire to break out on the University campus since the series that swept the campus nearly a year ago on January 9. That day three fires were started in the Carolina Inn; the second floor and attic of Swain Hall were burned; and fires broke out in Hill Hall Annex Y Miller Hall and Kenan Woods.

The major damage was to Swain, which was estimated to be approximately $30,000. The fire epidemic was later discovered to be the work of an arsonist.

World Politics Is Topic For Tito-Nasser

PORT SAID, EGYPT,— (AP) —Touring President Tito of Yugoslavia was greeted by President Nasser yesterday with embraces and kisses in oriental fashion. Then the two leaders — professed independents in world politics—began talks on the international situation.

Tito arrived aboard his yacht Galeb with a naval escort at the Suez Canal Authority headquarters that Nasser nationalized in 1956.

It was Tito's first stop on a 10-weeks series of official calls in Indonesia, Ceylon and Sudan and friendship visits in India, Burma, Ethiopia and back here to the United Arab Republic.

With Tito are his wife, Jovanka, and officials. Mrs. Tito asked to see Nasser's infant son Abdel Hakim and he was brought forth.

After the warm greeting, a 21-gun salute, anthem playing and ceremony, the two leaders went to a rest house on the canal bank. Meeting with them were U.A.R. Foreign Minister Mahmoud Fawzi and Nasser"s close adviser, Aly Sabri.

A Yugoslav government spokesman announced in Belgrade that Tito's visits "will be another affirmation of the principles of active and peaceful coexistence among countries with different social systems, strengthening of all around mutual cooperation, and strengthening of world peace."

Tito, Nasser and India's Prime Minister Nehru have met before to frame a so-called neutralist position.

Indonesia and Burma also have proclaimed similar positions between East and West.

Two Sentenced For Wire Theft

Two Carrboro Negroes were found guilty in Chapel Hill Recorder's Court Tuesday for stealing a large quantity of scrap wire from the University Water Plant and were sentenced to serve 60-day sentences on the roads.

Frank Alston and Thomas Mitchell were arrested Saturday afternoon by Officer A. L. Pendergrass and charged with stealing 277 pounds of copper wire from the University facility Friday night. They allegedly sold the material to a firm in Durham.

The wire was valued by water plant authorities at $90.

Committee Seeks Successor To Bostian

RALEIGH (AP)—A Wilmington lawyer, Rudolph I. Mintz, was elected yesterday as chairman of a committee which will recommend a successor to Dr. Carey H. Bostian as Chancellor of North Carolina State College.

All 15 members of the committee were present as it held its organizational meeting. It was appointed several weeks ago by William C. Friday, President of the Consolidated University of North Carolina.

Mintz, a member of the State College class of 1929, is a member of the Consolidated University Board of Trustees.

Friday, who will make the appointment from a list of three names submitted by the committee, met with the group. Plans were made for the committee to hold another session in mid-January.

Dr. Bostian announced several weeks ago that he plans to step down as Chancellor effective next June 30 to return to teaching.

Single Election Amendment Fails To Get Special Orders

By DEE DANIELS

The student body will not vote on a constitutional amendment to hold a single annual fall Legislative election in elections Tuesday as was planned.

Student Legislature rescinded the bill Thursday night after Norman Smith (Ind) introduced another bill changing the single election time from fall to spring.

The bill failed to get special orders so it will go into the Ways and Means committee and be reported on next Thursday.

As it now stands, students will vote Tuesday on a consitutional amendment to select the head cheerleader by student government, the sophomore class will re-vote for class president between Charlie Graham (UP) and Davis Young (SP), and women will vote in a run-off between Bunkie Jester and Sandra Trotman for the third seat on Women's Honor Council.

The Legislature also defeated by a 27-18 vote Ed Levy's (SP-UP) bill to send telegrams to the governors of Arkansas and Virginia stating the body's opposition to the governors' closing of public schools.

Levy urged the legislators to say what they believe by means of the telegram in order to help those who are fighting for their education. He illustrated by saying that in other countries students whose education is being jeopardized retaliate by voicing their disapproval, sometimes in the form of riots.

He believes that as students, the Legislature should do its part by taking a definite stand in a communication to the governors who are directly involved in the situation.

Jim Crownover (SP) advocated viewing the bill from a practical standpoint. He pointed out that the people of Virginia voted on having all private schools before Gov. Almond even came into office. Therefore, if he closes Norfolk schools, it is the will of the people and not his own prerogative.

Crownover further urged the solons to "stay in North Carolina." He said there are plenty of problems to be solved right here.

In explaining factors which concern him about the Legislature's feelings, Don Furtado, student body president, said, "The fact we need things shouldn't limit us to our own campus."

"We tend to be isolationists," he continued. Furtado stressed that as the first state (N.C.) to conscientiously meet the problem of integration, the students should be leaders in actions concerning the problem.

Calling the issue one of personal philosophy, Smith stated that the telegram probably wouldn't change Faubus' or Almond's ideas, but "our feelings will be broadcast all over the nation."

Charlie Gray (UP) expounded his stand against any action that prevents public education, but he claimed the South has had something thrust upon it which it doesn't want.

Gray alleged that the liberals at Carolina won't compromise. He compared the sending of such a telegram to "a declaration of war between our Legislature and the states of Virginia and Arkansas."

Five new bills were presented Thursday night.

Janie Walters (SP) introduced one to approve the Graduate Club Constitution and Smith innovated a bill to appropriate $100 for miscellaneous expenditures to the Comittee on State Affairs.

A bill to appropriate $125 from the Unappropriated Balance to the Carolina Women's Council was introduced by Anne Eckerson on behalf of CWC.

Another bill for an appropriation was presented by Crownover to allot $25 to Dean of Awards E. L. Mackie and Gary Greer (SP) proposed approval of the by-laws of the medical school honor council.

SPECTATORS WERE QUIET

Cheering Section Missing From Supply Room Blaze

By CHARLIE SLOAN

Nobody cheered the fire at the University's supply room yesterday.

The cheering section was in class, in bed or at breakfast. Most of the spectators were faculty members and other University employes on their way to work. A few students were standing around, but they were quiet.

Fresident William Friday stood quietly near the hottest corner of the building until it was obvious that the fire was under control. Then he returned to his office.

Firemen arriving early at the fire were not dressed for the smoky mess that developed. One casually took shelter beside a truck and changed pants.

Another fireman sent a friend back to the station for his boots and helmet.

Storeroom Manager T. H. Ray stood behind the building grimly taking inventory of his stock as it flowed mixed with ash laden water out a door. "The yellow is floor wax . . . that green is soap." Toilet paper rolls pulled out of the building by firemen splashed into the drab mess and stopped the drain.

Some of the rolls were still burning when they fell. A garden hose was used to put them out.

University dump trucks and crews arrived shortly after the debris started hitting the ground. The men were kept busy spraying water on the smoldering mess pitched into the trucks.

Four hours later a fireman estimated that six truckloads of burned supplies had been carted away.

Faced with the task of cleaning up and getting back into business, Ray turned to his student employes, "good old student labor."

One had already come up and asked if he'd been burnt out of a job. Ray didn't hesitate on his answer, he was already talking working nights to get straightened out.

INFIRMARY

FIRE SCENE—Firemen, volunteers, and spectators are shown with a tangle of fire hose as they work to extinguish the fire which gutted part of the University storeroom yesterday morning.

Special Courses

About five years ago due to the initiative of Dr. E. A. Cameron of the math department and others, a special program for freshmen was adopted to give the incoming students who had the ability an opportunity to do advanced work.

The program got to be known as the "suicide 25". Since then the program has expanded to fifty, and other advanced courses have been introduced so that in most departments there is at least one and in some cases three or four courses for students whose ability is advanced over the average of the class.

There are two very wonderful things about the special programs. The first thing important about the program is that it gives students of advanced ability a chance to work to their capacity, an opportunity to be challenged and stimulated, and the chance to have a superior quality education, commensurate with the individual's ability.

There is a second healthy facet to the special sequence of courses. This is a long term effect these programs can have. The knowledge learned can filter through the student body so that the standards for the advanced group today are the standards for the average tomorrow. Moreover, there might be brought about a certain amount of respect for intellect—the source of strength in any college—when if anything intellect is in bad repute now.

The special programs offer hope—hope to build a University of high educational standards.

SSL

There is an outside possibility at the present time which is growing more and more into an inside possibility that the State Student Legislature will not meet at the Capitol in Raleigh.

Under the Council of State's ruling, one half of the schools attending must have their delegation approved by the heads of their University.

As of now only five schools have had their delegation approved, and UNC's approval which is forthcoming would make the number six, or roughly five under the necessary requirements.

Many schools seemingly do not have the liberality that North Carolina does in regard to student freedom. Here the delegation is picked by the students with an almost automatic approval of the administration.

It is a healthy situation that exists here in that the concept of student freedom and student expression is in no way infringed upon by those in responsible University positions. It seems that the educational value of freedom is not lost at Carolina.

However, other schools in the state do not seem to be quite as fortunate in having this attitude prevail amongst its administration. Thus, delegations picked by students are having in some cases difficulty getting administrative approval.

It remains then a possibility that the SSL will not happen or that some place else must be chosen to hold the conference.

It is clear that some way must be found to hold the SSL in the face of the criticism that organization has received, and the possible infringements on freedom of expression that may be the result of the conditions placed upon it by the Council of States. And in the face of this criticism also, the SSL has the obligation to speak up on the crucial issues in the south—segregation and education.

Fire I

It seems that the University uses a lot of toilet paper. According to press reports, every conceivable type of University supply was housed in the burned out building. However, according to eye-witness observer reports the largest amount of damage came to the University store of toilet paper.

Apparently, the staff likes extra soft supplies.

Fire II

At the same time, the fire is an unfortunate happening. The damage is perhaps not irretrievable, but things like a fire are unhappy occurrences at best, and cause a good deal of work to restore order.

It might be a good idea at this time to have a thorough building inspection, so that future calamities might be avoided.

The tinder box construction of the annexes to most of the buildings on campus is a prime argument for new construction.

Moonglow

Joe John

"You'll wonder where the niggers went when Orval's elected President."

The above little jingle, purloined defiantly from that which the Repsodent people have been humming for years, will probably strike most of you as rather funny. Perhaps that's the way it was offered as a jest. I laugned too, but then I re-considered. There are some who would not be amused. They would be deeply hurt. That is understandable, and to them I apologize. Others, nowever, would consider it a statement of considerable merit. For them I have no sympathy.

Included in this latter group are the over 4,000 persons in attendance at a recent old folks picnic in Crestview, Florida. At the Arkansas governor's proclamation that he would never reopen Little Rock schools under present circumstances, shouts of "Faubus for President" rang from the gathering. A clever Faubus said nothing about rumored attempts to form a third party, however. He emphasized that he was a loyal Democrat and planned to remain one. When Faubus finished, hundreds of people ignored the rest of the program and rushed to the platform to shake hands with him. The "saviour" is among us.

Another group, the Freedoms Foundation, has nominated him as a recipient of their annual George Washington medal. The father of our country would, no doubt, be quite willing to honor the man who may well be responsible for the prospective degeneration of this land for whom the former toiled. A fitting tribute, indeed.

It is difficult to believe that these people are actually sincere in their actions. Their stupidity is unfathomable; their lack of comprehension of the situation is abominable.

The full enormity of Gov. Faubus' actions cannot be realized for time to come. Even if our nation—composed of states — were not officially united, these groups are so thoroughly, pardon the expression, integrated—economically, socially, industrially—that it would be impossible to revert them to days early in their history as Orval Faubus is attempting to do. Mass communications and transportation facilities have welded the country into a unit, of perhaps diverse habits of speech and personality, but freely united of necessity on basic principles. Rights of human beings are not so inconsequential as differences in twang or food preferences.

A state is not an independent colony a personal island, an individual entity. Each component of a whole cannot exist in defiance of the other. And to make the man who advocates this a candidate for the highest office which may be held in this country would be an insult to the political responsibility of the millions of people who, I sincerely hope, would realize the complete asininity of such an act. Perhaps the fingle will die; perhaps the conflict will be realized; "perhaps" Orval will not be President. If these are not fulfilled, however, rational people must react.

"I'm Right Behind You, General"

The Anti-Communist Menace

John Cogley

Almost a decade ago I wrote an article in these pages called "The Failure of Anti-Communism." The article, to no one's surprise, least of all mine, was strongly criticized when it appeared. One set of critics read into it a shameful indifference to the Communist danger, domestic and international. Another thought it was an unrealistic, naive appeal for "positive thinking" about a problem that has always demanded hard, negative thoughts. It was neither.

The article was written at the beginning of the Korean war. I said in it that our approach to the problem of Communism had been so badly conceived over the years that the young soldiers about to engage in battle with Communist troops—though they were "'anti-Communist" almost to a man—often had little or no idea of what the fighting was about. Later, the nation was stunned to learn how true this was. When the story of G. I. defeatism in Korea and the extent of American collaborationism in the prison camps was revealed two years ago, it provoked shock and chargrin on all sides. We heard cries that our youth was spoiled rotten, that Americans had grown soft, that morals were at a low, low ebb. This was hardly the point. The point was that "anti-Communism" as these boys conceived it did not stand up.

The public's shock over G. I. behavior in Korea passed soon enough. It was not long before we forgot about it and went on about our business—and for years now "anti-Communism" has been part of our business.

It was said in that article, written shortly after Senator McCarthy came into national prominence, that until Americans, American Catholics especially, began to take Communism seriously, opposition to Communism would continue to be identified with emotional crusades, lost partisan political causes and the melodramtic theory of history which accounts for all Communist successes by attributing them to vast betrayals, monstrous conspiracies and diabolical cunning. I said bluntly that as long as "anti-Communism" was equated with Communion-breakfast oratory, right-wing delirium and partisan appeal, it was doomed.

Almost a decade later, I still meet people who identify themselves as "anti-Communists" as if opposition to Communism were limited to a small sect and who regard every setback for their sectaries as a major defeat in the Cold War. Such people have long brandished "anti-Communism" as a weapon with which to fight their partisan battles at home and used it as a bludgeon to wreck America programs abroad. If they ever did, they have long since stopped regarding Communism as a real problem. I no longer have any hope of converting them to seriousness; they seem to me to be congenitally frivolous.

They are not the only ones, however. Most of us, I am afraid, have yet to take the Communist challenge seriously. It is a vast challenge, with spiritual, political and military aspects. Maybe because it is so vast, in our separate ways we all tend to reduce its proportions to the kind of "anti-Communism" which exacts small toll. For some it is the strengthening of pro-Western governments, whatever their intrinsic merits—an expenditure of money. For others it is the simple pronouncement of pieties and issuance of statements about our way of life and the fundaments of our Christian tradition—an expenditure of words. Most of us, I am afraid, are satisfied by the sheer piling up of deadly weapons. We are sustained by an almost boundless faith in military stalemate.

All this of course is necessary. We need strong governmental allies. We should articulate the traditions of the West. We should keep an arms balance. We should keep alert to the possibility of domestic conspiracy and sabotage, though many of us have grown a bit cynical about the logic involved in saying that domestic Communism becomes more dangerous to the extent that anti-Communism succeeds.

But, however necessary and valuable any of these programs are, they can only buy time. Time for what?

At present we seem doomed to life in a world of pseudo-infinitudes: the amount of money that can be poured into resisting Communist appeals to weak governments seems endless; the number of orations that can be given on the superiorities of the West over the Communist East seems limitless; the multiplication of horror weapons can go on and on and on. I suppose too that the pursuit of native Communists will get ever more urgent until, following the present logic, we will achieve ultimate peril—only one Communist will remain.

But the infinitudes are only apparent. Some day we are going to have to decide just what kind of world we want to leave to posterity. To a great extent it will have to be a world we never made, but we are not helpless by any means.

We are richly endowed with that most dangerous of all gifts, power. We can use that power not only to resist Communism and react to its successes, as we have done, but to "wage peace," to use a happy phrase that has lost its charm. This means daring, initiative, imagination. Such qualities are not unknown among Americans. But when will they be released? In recent years "anti-Communism" has become a kind of prison. —The Commonweal

Letters

Editor:

"The sound and the fury, signifying nothing."

Shakespeare's words seem to apply at times to this page of The Daily Tar Heel and very likely apply to this column.

Sure it is a free and independent paper and everyone is proud of it, but that does not give it the license to be worthless and irresponsible. The other day, for example, three quarters of a column was quoted from a prominent magazine everyone has already read. In the same issue there was a ten and a half inch lecture on honesty. Webster needed only ten words to say the same thing. My lessons in honesty came early and I doubt seriously if the multitude of magnificent words is much different basically than the honesty we all learned and are still learning.

Honesty is not my complaint, however. My true disgust lies in the intellectualism of the page. I have nothing against intellectuals, but I believe they are brow beating some "regular guys." I am actually nervous when I write something for this page, and the reason is really very funny. I am afraid some of the words I use aren't big enough. Now, how about that? Maybe I am stupid and have an inferior vocabulary but others on this campus can think deeply and about things worthwhile but refrain from writing for the Tar Heel's page two because they can't express themselves in flowery words or quote all of the Greek philosophers. Even the Greek philosophers said what they had to say in plain Greek. Just because the English vocabulary is tremendous doesn't mean writers have to go through the entire range. Maybe a good idea is often lost in the confusion of words.

This intellectual brow beating is for the birds. I repeat, I have nothing against intellectuals but if they have some choice thoughts which might enlighten us plain people, simplicity might go a lot further.

In conclusion, a word to these poets of the press: If you have nothing to say, don't say it.

Proclamation

James Reston

(From New York Times)

For the benefit of all turkey-logged citizens who were unable on Thursday afternoon to memorize Nikita S. Khruschev's 12,000-word Thanksgiving Day proclamation on Germany, the Society for the Exposure of Political Nonsense met here this morning and ran it through the society's big translating and decontaminating truth defector, Uniquack. What emerged was the following:

Dear Warmongers of the West:

Comrade Gromyko was over in Germany the other day and reported on his return that the Kurfuerstendamm in West Berlin was as bright and opulent as Fifth Avenue at Christmas time.

This is obviously intolerable. We agreed with the Western powers at the Potsdam Conference to treat the Germans like Siberian peasants, and here you are treating them like members of the human race.

We have kept our promises on Germany. We have occupied the East Germans with 450,000 Red Army troops. We have fed them no more than we feed our own people.

In contrast, the Western powers have given West Germany and the West Berliners nothing but capitalism and the highest standard of living east of the Iron Curtain. They are fairly wallowing in freedom and luxury, and this is not only bad for their character, but gives the East Germans funny ideas.

There is only one conclusion to be drawn from the foregoing: The Potsdam agreement has been grossly violated by the Western powers and must be abandoned. Accordingly, the U. S. S. R. suggests the following.

The most correct and natural way to solve the problem would, of course, be for the western part of Berlin, virtually detached from the German Democratic Republic (Communist), to be reunited with its eastern part and for Berlin to become a single city within the state on whose land it is situated (East Germany). In short, we want you to go away. However, since this logical solution may not comport with your desires, we suggest that you go away by stages, as follows:

1. Get out of Berlin within six months.
2. Demilitarize the city.
3. Let it be a Free City, happy and uncluttered by Western troops or economic support, a neutral island in the heart of East Germany, free to negotiate on its own, free to trade with the Soviet Union on Soviet terms, free to become the glorious capital of the German Democratic Republic.

This generous offer is in keeping with a long list of Soviet policies designed to keep peace in Europe: the Molotov-Ribbentrop pact that assured Hitler of our neutrality during his brutal assault on Poland the rejection of the United States offer of a forty-five-year treaty of alliance to perpetuate United States control of Germany; the Berlin blockade and many others.

Soviet policy is based on these principles for complete equality among all nations — respect for each other's sovereignty and noninterference in the internal affairs of other nations.

In keeping with these principles, all we ask is that East and West Germany exercise their sovereignty in such a way as to have no armed forces or alliances with other powers. This would, of course, mean that the warmongers, saboteurs, diversionists and fascist plotters in Bonn, with whom we maintain diplomatic relations and for whom we have the greatest affection, get out of the North Atlantic treaty, expel the Western forces and agree to a policy of permanent neutrality.

It must be clear to every sound minded person that this is an entirely reasonable proposal. It would be ridiculous to suppose that the Soviet Union could allow the Western powers to violate the Potsdam agreements just because we have violated them. As Lenin said, two wrongs do not make a right unless committed in the name of socialism.

A patently absurd situation has arisen in Berlin, where the Soviet Union is supporting and maintaining conditions detrimental to its own interests. Is it reasonable to suppose that the U. S. S. R. can allow the Western powers to fasten on the West German people a capitalist standard of living, which we are determined to achieve by 1970?

With well wishes for your continued health, Mr. President,

NIKITA S. KHRUSHCHEV

Dark

Thursday night was a dark night in the annals of student government, and will probably remain on the books as being one of the darkest student government has ever had.

The issue was the bill introduced by Ed Levy calling for telegrams to be sent to Governors Faubus and Almond of Arkansas and Virginia respectively disapproving of their stand in closing the free public school systems. The fatal action was its defeat.

In defeating the bill, the Student Legislature, in effect, abdicated its right to speak out if the situation occurred in North Carolina, for what the legislators forgot when they complained about the adverse publicity the telegram might give the University was the bill had already been published, people in the state were acquainted with it, and that the action in defeating the bill after it was introduced and published was giving sanction to the actions of Governors Faubus and Almond.

For students in an educational institution to give such sanction is a denial of their purpose in an educational institution, for these people would let other students' rights to education go by the boards while complacently enjoying their own.

There may have been some legitimate objection to the wording or to sending a telegram instead of a letter, although there was none of these objections from this corner; however, it is significant to note that no amendment was attempted to the bill to keep the students standing on the principle of free public education for all while removing the offensive parts of the bill. Instead there seemed a determination to vote against the bill in whatever form it was presnted.

The student legislature of the University of North Carolina has a unique role it can play in the school closing dispute by virtue of its being a southern school. Criticism from northerners may be expected, but criticism for southern studentry has the possibility of swinging a great deal of additional weight.

There were some who expressed the view that they were in favor of the bill in principle but not in practice, but failed to realize that the bill was nothing more than a statement of principle. Those who raised this objection lacked one thing — the moral fibre sometimes commonly known as guts.

There was not all bad at the meeting. Ed Levy gave two fine speeches in which he crystalized the issue of education and pointed out the needed student legislature leadership. Student Body President Don Furtado made an excellent speech. He spoke with clarity and candor. He was on a losing side, but the side lost only the battle not the war, and Furtado gained in stature for being on the losing side and speaking out so openly. A person can be right and lose. Don Furtado proved that Thursday night.

One also has to give credit to opposition when the opposition is honest, forthright, and sticks to his principles. The opposition in this case is Peyton Hawes, who may not have voted on the right side, but at least did not hinge his opposition on a side issue.

Joe Oppenheimer should be congratulated too for being the sole University Party man to crack the block and vote for the bill.

But on the whole, the evening was dismal, and when somebody tries to close schools in North Carolina, the legislative body will only be able to remember what they might have done.

Forty-Six Freshmen Enrolled In UNC's Advanced Courses

Names of 46 freshman scholars of special academic talents have been announced here.

Enrolled in special classes of "advanced standing," the 46 were chosen largely on a basis of their high school scholastic records. They are now taking advanced work in the University.

Chancellor William B. Aycock's "Committee on Superior Students" made known the names of 35 graduates of North Carolina high schools and the graduates of 11 out-of-state high schools or preparatory schools.

These "superior freshmen" are being advised, by selected faculty members in the University and attend classes together in basic courses. They are permitted to "go as far and as fast" as their extra abilities enable them to do.

The program was begun in 1954 and has been repeated and improved each year since. At present the program is being supplemented and expanded by similar honors work for sophomores, juniors and seniors.

The committee on Superior Students is led by Prof. E. A. Cameron. Prof. George V. Taylor is secretary.

The Carnegie Foundation became so impressed with the UNC plan that $100,000 was granted for a five-year's experiment in such advanced instruction.

"Grades in the special sections (since 1954) have been high," according to a report, "and members of the group out-perform comparable students enrolled in regular classes." They also receive higher grades.

According to the faculty members in charge of the program: "This means to us that superior students do their best work when confronted with programs adjusted to their abilities."

The "superior freshmen" enrolled in the 1958-59 program are:

Junius Grimes III, Ian M. Happer, Bobby R. Hartsell, Charles G. Henderson, Jeffrey T. Hicks, Stephen W. Hinshaw, Stephen E. Kesler, Guy L. Snow, Philip E. Sowers, James C. Stalker, Norton F. Tennile Jr., William R. Whittenton;

Tuesday Set For Initiation

One of the smallest groups elected to Phi Beta Kappa at Carolina in recent years will be initiated into the honorary fraternity Tuesday. Fifteen students will be tapped at 5:15 p.m. ceremonies in the Dialectic Senate Chamber on the third floor of New West Hall.

Initiates have not been notified of their selection, according to Dr. E. L. Mackie, dean of awards. However, they will be informed shortly.

The smallness of the group is due, Dr. Mackie said, to the September, 1957 change in requirements for election to the organization. At this time, standards were raised from a B average for second semester juniors and seniors to a 2.6 average for second semester juniors and a 2.3 average for seniors.

Ordinarily, in the fall, he said, about 30 or 40 persons are tapped. In the spring, from 80 to 100 are usually elected.

The change in requirements was also reflected in the selection of but 31 students last spring.

'Billy Budd' Plays At Duke

Billy Budd, a play based on Herman Melville's last novel, will be presented by the Wesley Players of Duke University on Sunday and Monday evenings, December 7 and 8 at the Methodist Student Center on the Duke campus.

The Sunday performance will begin at 6:30 and the Monday performance at 8:15. Admission is free, and Carolina students are cordially invited.

The play, which scored an outstanding critical success on Broadway in 1951, is adapted by Louis O. Coxe and Robert Chapman from Melville's allegorical tale of essential good and evil in the modern world.

Brooks Atkinson, New York Times drama critic, said of the play that it was "translucent . . . written with taste, firmness and intelligence . . . trenchant."

Swimmers Meet Clemson Today

By JACK RUDY

This afternoon at 3 o'clock Carolina's varsity swimming team defends its Atlantic Coast Conference swimming championship when it meets Clemson here in Bowman Gray Pool.

Last year the meet was held at Clemson where three pool records fell as the Carolina mermen downed Clemson 63-21. The Carolina freshman made it a clean sweep by beating the Tiger yearlings 47-24. Clemson College was the first to fall as Carolina rolled on to undefeated season and the ACC crown.

Last year's graduation greatly depleted the depth of the team. Thus, Coach Pat Earey is placing his hopes for another undefeated season on the abilities of his Sophomores and returning lettermen. He feels that the boys have the potential and the competitive spirit, all that is lacking is experience. "Clemson is not expected to provide a real test of the teams potential," Coach Earey feels, as Clemson was hit hard by graduation last year. But, Clemson is not to be overlooked in face of their apparent weaknesses. They will be trying their best to defeat last year's ACC champions.

The returning seniors will be the anchormen with Brent Nash and Randy Dodson leading the sprinters, Bob Hunter and in the backstroke dept., Shiffman and Bloom in the 220 freestyle, Reynolds and Cashwell controlling the diving boards.

Other swimmers who will be out to prove what they are capable of doing in their various events, who have the potential but as yet are untested in ACC competition are: Joe Kalkhurst and the Barrett in the freestyle; ;Harvey Hamrick and Chuck Wrye in the breaststroke; Bill Hamill and Tom Guerrant in the medley events; Jack Rudy and Butch Burgin on the diving boards.

Bloom Man To Watch

A man to watch when he hits the water is Harry Bloom who last year as a freshman broke records right and left. He is expected to gain national recognition this year when he swims the 220 freestyle.

Randy Dodson a boy who can really get up and go when called upon is rated by Coach Earey is another boy to watch when it comes to breaking records. Last year as a freshman he was a leader in various freestyle events, but this year has found his ability to be in the Butterfly event.

Kit Mercer, a letterman, will anchor the backstroke event along with Bob Hunter, who last year as a freshman showed that he had the potential to come through with the goods when needed.

Butch Burgin and Jack Rudy, who will replace the two senior divers, Pete Reynolds and Dick Cashwell next year, have shown much improvement over last year and are expected to help share the load in the diving event.

Frosh Swim Also

The freshman Tar Babies meet the Clemson freshman before the varsity meet, and are expected to come through with a repeat of last year. Packed with All-state, All-prep, All-High, and All-American swimming team candidates, the freshman team lists a host of outstanding swimmers and divers. Ben Crutchfield, Bob Briggs, Tom Rogers and Bob Berkenstock are just a few named in the afore mentioned category. Thus it is relatively safe to predict another unbeaten season for the Tar Babies.

A reputation cannot be built on the things you intend to do.

Matmen Open Here Today In Twin Bill

By PERRIN HENDERSON

What will happen this year?

Both the varsity and freshman wrestling teams will open their seasons with a double-header here today. Each squad takes on both Virginia and Washington and Lee beginning at 3 this afternoon on the main floor of Woollen Gym.

Last year the Tar Heel matmen lost to a strong Virginia team 25-11 but beat W&L 23-11. Both opponent teams are expected to be strong.

Eight retursing lettermen will be fighting for Carolina. A few of the varsity stars are rough and tough Ray Russell (157), bantom Bill Suttle (130), and slim Jim Welborn (147).

Freshman standouts so far have been Pope Shuford (147), Phil Whitley (177), and Roger English (137).

Coach Sam Barnes says, "This is the beginning of Carolina's biggest and most ambitious wrestling schedule. We're using two different but well balanced squads tonight. A little student support ought to give our boys enough drive to pull us through."

Carolina will have to do without its biggest "horse," last year's undefeated 177 pound freshman, John Matney. Over the holidays a horse fell on him.

A tremendous freshman turnout this year and a competition ridden varsity team has produced two well balanced squads. Today's schedule:

3 p.m. — UNC frosh vs. W&L frosh

4 p.m. — UNC varsity vs. W&L varsity

7 p.m. — UNC frosh vs. Virginia frosh

8 p.m. — UNC varsity vs. Virginia varsity

Scurlock To Run

Dave Scurlock, Carolina middle distance running star, will defend his title in the 440 yard run of the Sugar Bowl invitational track meet Dec. 28.

Scurlock received his invitatoin a few days ago and has been working out regularly in conditioning for the event. Scurlock competed on North Carolina's cross country team this fall.

Last year Scurlock, who is the Atlantic Coast Conference 660 and 880 indoor champion and 440 and 880 outdoor titleholder, won the Sugar Bowl 440 with a 0:48.5 time.

The 1958 all-campus Tag Football team has been released by the intramurals department. The team of nine players was selected from 70 names nominated by intramural managers. Selections were made by the intramurals officials.

The all-campus tag football team:
Jippy Carter (Law School)
Wayne Young (Winston)
Al Baldwin (Joyner)
Wally Graham (Phi Delta Theta)
Art Kilpatrick (Sigma Nu)
Ed Brunson (Sigma Alpha Epsilon)
Sandy Ainsley (SAE)
Jim Kelly (SAE)
John Jester (DKE)

Many of these outstanding players participate or have taken part in varsity sports. Wayne Young, Al Baldwin, and Art Kilpatrick are all on the baseball team. Wally Graham and Jim Kelly are former basketball players and Sandy Ainsley played freshman basketball. Ed Brunson was an all-state football player at Albermarle, on the same team with Wade Smith.

SAE, the all-campus tag football champions led the selections with three players.

The actuality of the present seldom looks as good as the theory of the past.

Many a good argument is knocked down and run over by progress.

UNC Gets $146,620 For Education

The National Science Foundation has awarded grants totaling $146,620 to UNC to conduct 1959 summer institutes for high school teachers of mathematics and science and for college chemistry teachers.

Chancellor William B. Aycock announced the grants for the programs, which are conducted by the University's Institute of Natural Science.

Eighty teachers will be selected for the third annual math-science institute, scheduled for June 8 through July 17, and made possible by an $83,050 grant. Co-directors will be Prof. V. A. Greulach of the Botany Department and Prof. E. A. Cameron of the Mathematics Department.

A grant of $52,800 has been given to conduct for the second time at UNC the Summer Institute for Junior College and College Teachers of Chemistry, also on June 8-July 17. Directing it will be Prof. H. D. Crockford and Kenan Prof. Arthur Roe, chairman of the Chemistry Department.

Another special grant of $10,770 has been given by the National Science Foundation to enable 40 participants in the 1959 or the two previous math-science summer institutes to take additional academic work during the second half of the UNC summer session.

These three grants bring to a total of $899,820 the funds which the National Science Foundation has awarded to the University during the past to years for summer and academic-year institutes.

Dr. Crockford and Dr. Greulach were in Washington, D. C. this week for a planning conference attended by representatives of the various NSF-sponsored summer institutes.

Approximately 50 chemistry teachers from junior and senior colleges will be selected to attend the college teachers institute. A similar program was held at UNC in 1957, directed by Dr. S. Young Tyree Jr., professor in the Chemistry Department.

PETER FORD

Long-Haired Spike Jones, Plays In Petite Musicale

What Henry Ford did for the automobile business Peter Ford is trying to do for music.

A graduate of Yale and a practioner on percussion instruments—as well as a poet—he is working on his master's degree in music at UNC.

Ford has assembled one of the world's wierdest assortments of sound effects. He's got them all in formation and in rhythm.

Here are some of the sounds: glass breaking, a bottle being thrown into a garbage can, grease fryin in fat, alarm clock, the twang of an arrow into a bucket, an electric razor, diabolical laughs, women's screams, cofbell, snare drums, duck calls, timpani, whistles, cap pistol, castenets, maracas, piano, triangles, gong, glockenspiel.

Some of Ford's music accompanies poetry by e. e. cummings. Other is Shakespearean. Some of it is written by Ford himself.

At a Petite Musical concert at Graham Memorial at 8 p.m. today, Ford will present his version of Fugue in D by Johann Sebastian Bach, "transmuted for percussion." Fashioned after the New York Percussion Ensemble which plays Bach, Ford will use the cowbell, cymbals, snare drums, timpani and both bird and police whistles.

"Four Poems from '(!)' " is the title of the next series of presentations, with the audience furnishing poems to read while the music is being played.

Ford and his group also will play "Fusion Number Four" which will be followed by a curtain talk, "The New Esthetic" by the composer and conductor.

Ford is a native of Meriden, Connecticut, received his bachelor of music degree at Yale University in 1954, and his master of music degree at Converse College in Spartanburg, S. C. He has taught at Brevard College and is presently studying in the University toward his M. A. degree in music.

Ford believes he has achieved something here which may be simillar to but is by no means identical with anything that has ever been done before in the art of music.

School Integration Crisis Costing U. S. Dearly Abroad

By ED GOODMAN

The southern school integration crisis has cost America dearly in its propaganda battle with the Reds.

This was the opinion expressed by Alan Costa, of Recife, Brazil, a graduate student at Carolina.

"Orval Faubus has done more for Communism outside this country," he said, "than Lenin and Stalin."

All over the world, he said, the Communists are displaying a picture of a negro girl being guarded by troops as she passes jeering whites on her way to school. Along with the picture goes the caption, "If Americans do this to Americans, what will they do to us?"

Everyone in foreign countries has his eyes on the American integration problem, Costa said. They still realize the United States is a democracy, he maintained, but they regard this situation as undemocratic. "They understand America's problem, but don't agree with the way it was handled."

In Brazil, Costa said, there is no such problem. White and negroes intermarry there frequently. "Brazilians think marriage is a consequence of love," he said, "not a consequence of the skin."

But despite its recent loss of prestige, the United States is still "appreciated" by Brazilians, he said. Much of this, he maintained, is due to the two nations' common opposition to Russia. In Brazil, the Communist party is also outlawed.

ALAN COSTA
. . . Faubus Aids Communism

Costa said Brazil also feels close to the United States because of its location in the Western Hemisphere. "Citizens of the United States call themselves 'Americans,' " he said, "but all of us call ourselves 'Americans.' We feel a conciousness of being together as Americans."

Among important factors causing this conciousness, Costa said, was the Monroe Doctrine. Brazil considers this document so great, he said, that its Senate building is called "Monroe Palace."

Asked if America's assertion of leadership in Western affairs had caused resentment in Brazil, Costa replied that "we agree America is the leader of the Western Hemisphere, but the leader doesn't have to do all the work."

Questioned concerning which way this country might best improve its prestige, he said that "a better way of achieving understanding would be the use of more student exchange and similar programs, rather than by foreign aid."

IN ATLANTA BOMBING TRIAL

Bright Takes Stand In Acquittal Attempt

ATLANTA — (AP) — George Allen Bright began talking for his freedom yesterday to a Fulton superior court jury trying him for the Oct. 12 dynamiting of the tlanta Jewish temple, and he was prepared to go on for three days if his attorneys so advise.

The charge against him is a capital offense, and he was talking to an all-male jury qualified to return a death penalty verdict as he made an unsworn statement as authorized by Georgia law.

He declared the charge against him is completely false and that he is being persecuted for "my political and segregation beliefs, my undivided loyalty to my country and for my Christian beliefs."

Bright is the first of five persons accused in the temple dynamiting to be placed on trial, and he took the stand shortly after the sixth day of the trial got under way.

Georgia law permits a defendant to make an unsworn statement to the jury and he cannot be cross-examined. Wide latitude is permitted, particularly in capital cases, and so long as the defendant speaks to his own defense and does not go off on too much of a tangent, there is no limit on the time he may speak.

No records were available as to the longest such statement made, but Solicitor General Paul Webb said that in a case here some years ago a defendant used eight hours in making his unsworn statement.

Defense attorneys James Venable and Essley Burdine said Bright is prepared to talk as long as they advise—maybe three days — and would confine his remarks to the evidence and documents and logical deductions to be made from them.

The balding, bespectacled 31-year-old bachelor, a mechanical engineer, launched his statement by outlining his family background. He said he is descended "from the Brights of Pennsylvania who settled there under William Penn" and is a native of Kingsport, Tenn. He said he has many southern connections that his mother came from South Carolina and that his great grandfather was hanged by the union army in the Civil War.

He attended Virginia Polytechnic Institute, University of Georgia and North Carolina State college and has an engineering degree.

UNC Cagers Get Real Test Here Monday

By RUSTY HAMMOND

Carolina's basketball Tar Heels, with one victory safely tucked away, meet their first real test of the season here Monday night when they take on the Virginia Cavaliers at 8 o'clock in Woollen Gym.

Carolina's record now stands at 1-0, having beaten Clemson 83-67 in the season opener last week. The Tar Heels were impressive in the second half against a fine Tiger five which beat Duke Friday night.

Virginia sorts a 1-1 season slate. The Cavaliers opened with an 86-74 win over William & Mary, but were turned back 85-73 by Virginia Tech.

HAVE HOT SOPH

One of the brighter spots in this year's Virginia lineup has been hotshot sophomore forward Jay McKenzie. McKenzie tallied 26 against the Indians and 17 against the Gooblers, earning him high scoring honors both nights.

ATTACK WELL-BALANCED

KEPLEY WAS SURPRISE

Carolina, after cooling off Clemson's red-hot first half shooting average, put on their own show in totally outclassing the game Tigers. Dick Kepley proved the biggest surprise of the young season by pouring in 24 points and leading in rebounds.

The Carolina starting lineup will probably feature the same five who rolled up the big margin over Clemson. Harvey Salz and York Larese at guards, Kepley at center, and Doug Moe and Lee Shaffer at forwards will probably get the starting call from coach Frank McGuire.

Home Church, Campus Tied By Baptist Student Union

By LARRY ENLEY

"The role of the Baptist Student Union is that of a tie between the home church and the campus," said James O. Cansler, BSU director for Carolina students.

The BSU, as similar organizations for other denominations, has a well organized program of weekly activities to encourage students to participate in some phase of BSU and, of course, to become a member of one of the local Baptist churches.

In commenting on the broad purpose of the BSU, Cansler said recently that the Baptist Student Union's two-fold function is to confront students with Jesus Christ as Saviour and Lord and to encourage and facilitate their growth in an emotional and intellecual committment to Christ.

Cansler said the BSU is a student Christian organization with a Baptist orientation and sponsorship. It is a mission work of the Baptist denomination among college students in the South, but he believes it should be classified as an educational work. The student, with whom the BSU works, is already committed to the Baptist faith when he arrives on the campus, Cansler said.

The BSU's regular weekly program consists of worship, study, service and recreation.

The BSU sponsors noon-day meditation at Gerrard Hall five days a week. On Tuesday afternoon at 5:30 there is a vesper service at the Student Center. The Sunday evening service at the University Baptist Church is conducted by the BSU students. This service was started about three years ago, Cansler said, to fill the need of an evening worship service.

A study program is manifested through the Sunday school of the University Baptist Church and the Olin Binkley Memorial Church. The Supper Forum, which takes the place of Training Union, is the activity that draws the largest number of students.

During the week small groups meet regularly to study specific subjects of Bible, theology, Baptist doctrine, social problems and courtship and marriage. Cansler said the weekly study groups meet for one hour a week. Some of the studies may last the whole year, but the average is about four weeks.

Cansler described the BSU also as a service organization through which the student attempts to put into practice what he learns in a "laboratory of experience.

He emphasized the work that the BSU is doing with youthful first offenders from county prisons at the Umstead Youth Center. These prisoners are brought to the center for rehabilitative work, and given the opportunity of learning a trade. A Sunday afternoon worship service is held at the center and once a month "youthful offenders" are invited to the Supper Forum. The BSU often plays a basketball game with them.

Other students, he said, teach Sunday school at McDuffy Baptist Church and at Gravely Sanitorium. Some students serve as choir director and pianists at other churches.

Cansler remarked that each year the students plan several projects. The projects may be to give a Bible to each one of the boys at the Umstead Youth Center, or it may be a work activity. The work activity for a needy family in the community may consist of painting the house, house cleaning or cleaning up the yard.

"Recreation is a problem on a campus like Carolina. You can not plan a social without it conflicting with something else. You can get more people for a work activity than you can for a social," Cansler said, emphasizing such projects.

Student Party To Elect Chairman, Other Officers

A new chairman for Student Party will be elected, along with other party officers, at a meeting Monday at 7 p.m. in Roland Parker I and II.

The meeing is being held at 7 p.m., Party Chairman Leon Holt said, so that members may attend the basketball game at 8 p.m.

In addition to a new chairman, these officers will be elected: vice chairman, secretary, file clerk, sergeant at arms and three members to the advisory board.

The new officers will hold their positions until after the spring elections.

Zeta Beta Tau Fire Causes No Damage

No damage occurred in yesterday's fire at the Zeta Beta Tau house, according to Ed Levy, house president.

Chapel Hill firemen extinguished the blaze which occurred in the garbage disposal area about 7:50 p.m.

Mike Fleischer reportedly suffered minor hand burns when he attempted to put out the blaze with a fire extinguisher.

According to the fire department the blaze might have originated from either ashes or a cigarette left in a trash can.

Carolina's 'Golden Girl' Started Career With Borrowed Baton

By RON SHUMATE

Carolina's own version of Purrue's "Golden Girl" started her baton-twirling carer holding a borrowed baton upside down.

Faye Gooch, who has been Miss Just-About-Everything, entered her school's first majorette contest "as a joke" when she was in the ninth grade. Some friends dared her to enter the contest because she was, at that time, head cheerleader.

She took the dare, fortunately, and was the first majorette selected.

Since then she has won 28 trophies, 30 medals, and numerous titles. She was Miss Majorette of N. C. ('57-'58), Miss Majorette of Dixie ('58), first runner-up to Miss Majorette of America ('58), Miss Majorette of America (September 1957), Majorette Queen of America (May 1958) and N. C. State Twirling and Strutting Champion ('57-'58).

Presently she is a candidate for America's most beautiful majorette and for Miss Majorette of 1959.

Miss Gooch said her biggest thrill in her baton-twirling was being first runner-up to Miss Majorette of America. "There were so many girls to compete with," she said. The girls were first screened through their pictures by a Hollywood producer. Later they had to perform with their batons. "The biggest surprise," she said, "was having to do show routines."

Her talents aren't confined to strutting and twirling, however. She has won numerous beauty contests, including Miss Press Photographer, Miss Durham in the Azalea Festival and Miss Dollar Day. She was also Miss Personality, USA in 1957.

Miss Gooch began her majorette carrer as co-head majorette in the ninth grade. When she was a junior she was the co-head majorette of the senior group, and was head majorette when she was a senior.

FAYE GOOCH
. . . 'golden girl'

Miss Gooch's "hottest" number, and the most embarrassing, was in the finals of the Miss Majorette of Dixie contest. She was twirling two flaming batons and jumping a fire rope all at the same time, and as she came out from under the rope here hair caught fire. A friendly South Carolina policeman played Sir Galahad and put the fire out.

In addition to her own twirling she teaches others. One of her pupils, a 12-year-old girl, has won nine trophies and eight medals since last Christmas.

Miss Gooch's only formal twirling schooling was two weeks at a West Virginia summer camp in 1954, and about two years in a school in Roanoke Rapids, N. C. She also had special instructions from the head majorette in Coral Gables, Florida, prior to the national majorette contest.

Currently she is majoring in physical therapy but is thinking of changing to an art major.

Those lovers of blonde beauties may be interested to know she may appear in a TV series in Greensboro this summer. She also plans to start teaching again this summer.

Maybe her "struttin' " hasn't spread across the country, but she's still Carolina's "Golden Girl."

INFIRMARY

Students in the Infirmary yesterday included:

Truman

Harry S. Truman perhaps was a courageous and outspoken president, but his trip to North Carolina this week gave no indication of this.

He described the trip as one to bring votes for the Democratic Party, but if the party takes as many equivocal stands as Mr. Truman, the party will surely lose votes.

His non-committal policy shown out strong when talking about civil rights and Paul Butler, and the fairly obvious political pandering for votes in saying that the Democratic Party welcomes all people, which is indicative that Mr. Truman welcomes people such as Orval Faubus which Chairman Butler was not so willing to admit. If the current Truman philosophy were to hold true, the Democratic Party would turn into a thing that would mean all things to all people.

The two-party system depends eventually non divergence of point of view, and if this divergence is not achieved, the United States may as well have a one-party system devoted to the platitude of better government. They have something like that in the Soviet Union and the thought of this should not appeal to too many Americans.

The Democratic Party will have to decide before long on how it stands on civil rights. It had better adopt a strong civil rights platform, stronger that that of 1956. It should be a platform that should challenge the reactionary Southerners to stick to its provisions or get out. If they get out, then and only then does the Democratic Party have a chance to consider itself the party of the people — all people whether black, white, gentile, or Jew.

Finland

The fall of the 19th post World War II government in Finland is again indicative of the role that economics has to play in world politics.

Finland's governmental fall was a direct result of the Russian witholding of needed trade from this country due to the viewpoint of its prime minister.

The economic issues in the world today are taking a more important role than ever before.

The United States, for instance, is finding that the idea of freedom is not as appealing to the people of Southeast Asia as the idea of being assured of a meal the next day. And it is on this that the Communists are capitalizing.

The time for the United States to realize that military defense and pious statements are not enough to insure freedom for America and other peoples of the world is now. There must be a concrete aid program to meet the economic offensive that Russia is waging. Without this, the United States stands only to lose.

Christmas Decorations

Graham Memorial has gone whole hog on Christmas decorations and the end product looks very nice.

The production of the gigantic wreath on the front of the building took quite a bit of effort, and those putting in the effort are to be congratulated.

Best Dressed

Why is it that the winners of "best dressed" contests usually receive as their reward, a wardrobe of clothes?

The World News In Review

Ed Rowland

The top news this week, and also the grimmest, was the Monday fire in Chicago which killed 90 students and 3 nuns teaching them in a parochial school. It started in the basement of the school (exactly how is not known.) and raced up a stairwell to the second floor where most of the pupils were waiting for the dismissal bell to ring.

The fire's suddenness caused fire officials to look for possible arson clues, but none have been turned up. The fire chief theorized that a sneak smoker carelessly tossed a cigarette butt into a pile of waste paper which caught fire.

The fire was the third worst school blaze in the United States in the last 100 years. It brought on a flood of school inspections across the country as officials sought to prevent a recurrence of the fire. Three schools in New York City were closed as having fire hazards.

Another fire, this one a forest fire racing across the mountains of Southern California near Malibu Beach, was almost completely under control late this week after burning more than 20,000 acres of the most picturesque scenery in the state.

Officials here also suspect arson, although concrete evidence to that effect has not been found. Thirty or more homes, a few of them mansions owned by movie and television personalities, were destroyed. No lives were lost, however.

At Cape Canaveral, the Army was making plans late in the week to try a shot at the moon with its rocket Juno II carrying a 30-pound satellite in its nose. The Air Force probes earlier in the fall, which failed, were aimed at putting a man-made object in orbit around the moon, while this one may send the baby moon into an orbit around the sun millions of miles from earth.

The launching missile itself is a Jupiter-C missile topped by three stages of small sergeant rockets. Dr. Werhner Von Braun said the rocket will be aimed at the moon but that chances of hitting it are extremely slim. He said it was hoped it would soar farther into space.

In the civil rights field, Arthur Flemming, Secretary of Health Education and Welfare, made a call for reopening the 13 southern school shut down to avoid integration. He figured that more than 16,000 pupils were missing their regular classes due to the locked schools.

He said reports submitted to him show that pupils in the substitute private schools are not getting anywhere near the same quality education they should have. He added that local groups are coming to realize that integrated schools are better than no schools, and that they would exert pressure for their reopening.

Flemming was immediately called a tool of the NAACP and the Communist Party by Virginia's Gov. Lindsey Almond.

And in Alabama, the Civil Rights Commission began its long-awaited investigation of voting discriminations in six counties during the week, and voter registration files have been subpoenaed.

State Atty. General (and Governor-elect) John Patterson has said the files are confidential information and not subject even to court-ordered inspection. An appeal to the federal courts would probably take years to resolve.

At least one county official declared the commission would get none of his county's records unless Patterson said okay. And one more county had its records impounded by a state judge to prevent the commission from getting them.

In the somewhat chaotic world of foreign affairs, Iraq is on the borderline of renouncing its alliances with the West and joining with the Nasser Arab bloc or the Soviet sphere. Since the July revolution that overthrew the pro western government, the nation has almost officially abandoned the Baghdad pact.

State department officials have said they do not know yet whether the shift in sides had occurred or not. They have been unable to get clear-cut answers about the foreign policy of Iraq.

The Iraqi foreign minister declared in Cairo this week that the new trade agreement between Iran and the U. S. constitutes a direct threat to Iraq.

Also in the middle east Israel and Syria have had border trouble again and the UN will be asked to settle the matter. Both the United Arab Republic and Israel have accused the other of precipitating the artillery exchange early in the week.

In Finland the government fell late in the week as a result of Russian economic pressure on the nation. The government had been formed of a coalition of five parties excluding the Communist party, which controls 20 per cent of the legislative seats.

Russia refused to buy Finnish products and the pressure exerted on the merchants and manufacterers of the nation caused the government to fall. No word is yet available as to what will be done.

And as to the Berlin crisis, whtich has cooled somewhat from the threatened war two weeks ago, the Allies were seen to be pursuing a "go-slow" course of action. The Russians have announced that they have turned over all control of the city and its corridors to the west to the East Germans. The Allies came back with orders to its troops still in the city to protect the vital arteries to the outside.

The Allies are expected to confer more about a policy, and no decisions have been made yet except that they will remain at all costs.

When the State Student Legislature meets next week and begins its business, undoubtedly the question of whether the N. C. Delegation of the SSL represents what the students think will come up.

Controversial issues will be discussed and the stands taken probably won't please everyone. However, it must be allowed that the delegation be accepted as representative of the group who had the most interest in applying for positions.

All students had a chance to apply for the committee. If you assume that the delegates were chosen fairly (I think they were), then it follows that delegates represent the different viewpoints roughly (radical, liberal, moderate, conservative and reactionary) proportionally to the number of students who applied.

To be truly representative the UNC delegates could be elected, but since there are 39 members of the delegation, this system does not seem too practical.

Consequently, if you feel that your ideas and opinions were not voiced by the delegates, then, when the SSL delegates are chosen next year, you should apply and make an effort to have those who feel the same way you do to apply also.

There is some question as to what the proper attitude of UNC delegation be. Should the delegates attempt to represent what they feel is the general opinion of the students or should the delegates attempt to lead and shape student opinion?

I think that the majority of the delegates feel the latter attitude and that their action will generally be "liberal." The "moderates" and "conservatives," who tend to think of themselves as composing the majority of the student body will be unhappy, will complain. (I feel this contention is correct though the majority is not by a large margin).

Their unhappiness really won't be justified. This group of students too often takes a negative attitude and too often is content to let the "liberals" control policy making committees without making a determined effort to see that their own viewpoint is represented.

Mere complaints are not enough; some action is needed.

This article is not intended to be a defense of any action which the SSL delegates may take, but rather it is meant to show that those persons may not be pleased with the results of this year's delegation might take efforts next year to see that their ideas are represented.

On Intellectualism In DTH

Ron Shumate

The author of a letter in yesterday's paper stated that he was disgusted with the intellectualism of this editorial page.

Granted many articles appear on this page which are filled with large words, flowerly phrases and the like. Granted also that many of these are "too deep" for the average person.

BUT, if people were the least interested in improving their vocabularies, these articles could be very useful, as well as interesting to them.

I will readily admit that many of these "intellectual" articles are above me. And I will also admit that I do not attempt to learn the meanings of many of these words. But the fact remains that I do make SOME attempt to learn SOME of them. My roommate and I spend from 15 to 30 minutes almost every night going over the words each of us has learned during the day. This is helpful to both of us. We simply write down words we do not know as we see them during each day, and, when we have a few spare minutes, look them up in a dictionary. But I do not wish to set my roommate and myself up as examples. I am digressing.

It would seem, to some, that those "high-brow" editorials are written with the intention, of the writers, of impressing friends and foes with their wonderful vocabularies. But this is not necessarily true.

Those who have such vocabularies use big words almost automatically. They use such words as easily as us "ordinary folks" use smaller, more-easily-understood-to-the-non-intellectual words.

But there is still the fact that many articles are written by "ordinary folks" for "ordinary folks." They may be easily read, more interesting (sometimes) and all that. But They Don't Make People Think. And if people don't think when they read the articles, what good are they?

The letter writer, who happens to be a good friend of mine, also stated that he is "nervous" when he writes something for this page because he is "afraid some of the words" he uses "aren't big enough." This is a negative attitude. Why should someone be afraid to write something for this reason, when he communicates verbally ith others everyday? He doesn't seem to be afraid to talk to people, so why should he be afraid to write to them?

If he desires less intellectual editorials, why doesn't he write some himself? If he thinks editorials should be more simply written, why doesn't he write some simple ones?

I do not mean this to be derogatory in any way to my friendship with the letter writer. He stated his views, and I am stating mine. His letter was simply written. My article is also simply written. Just note the absence of intellectual words. This is because I do not have an intellectual vocabulary. But that does not defer me from expressing my opinions in print. I am not afraid to express my opinion verbally, so why should I be afraid to express it through my writing? But again I am digressing.

Editorial writers should not have to conform to any set method or style in which to write their articles. They should state their opinions as best they know how. If they wish to express them in simple fashion, fine. If not, fine. Things seem to have gotten along so far, so why not leave them to make it the rest of the way?

Forty-eight years ago, William Sidney Porter, who had become famous as O. Henry—writer, suffered the inevitable fate of all human beings. He died. Now some group in Texas, pleasantly named the Texas Heritage Foundation, has petitioned President Eisenhower to posthumously pardon the world-famous author of bank embezzlement charges. He had been convicted in 1898 by a Texas court.

The Foundation, headed by a retired general, claims that "there exists today abundant evidence of his innocence, and his conviction was surely on circumstantial evidence." Carl Van Doren, in the 1943 edition of the Dictionary of American Biography, stated that the bank of which O. Henry was the teller "had been managed very loosely, and the loss of not much over a thousand dollars seems to have been due to him only in a technical sense." Thus it is quite possible that O. Henry was probably not in actuality an embezzler, but more an impractical man who lacked considerable knowledge of financial affairs. So what?

The fact that he was convicted did not hinder in any way the fulfillment of his lasting achievements; in fact, the incident was quite likely the most significant factor in their inception. His questionable flight to Honduras and his subsequent experiences there became the foundation of many of his most celebrated literary offerings, including the excellent Cabbages and Kings. Confinement for O. Henry was no intolerable hardship, for he was accorded all sorts of privileges. Then too, it was in prison that the famous knack for expression was nutured, developed and employed. And the man was an obvious failure as a bank clerk.

It is doubtful, moreover, that one of a thousand people who have at one time or another become acquainted with the short stories of O. Henry was aware that the man was a "jailbird." Even less of these would have been seriously disturbed. Is not art, art and talent talent no matter its origin?

The list of great men of letters who have had their difficulties with established law is not short. It reaches back to Francois Villon, the extraordinary medieval French lyrist, and advances steadily to Ezra Pound in our own time. Even the more questionable ability of Caryl Chessman has staved off his imminent death sentence for several years. O. Henry, therefore, although perhaps not a powerful a genius as some, is in no mean company. If he was innocent, it matters not now; the man has been dead for a half-century; it is his work that lives; it speaks for him; his life is inconsequential in comparison.

Why, then, dig into a man's grave and, by exposing to ridicule once again his human failings, do him more dishonor than any honor that might be achieved with clearing him of an antiquated charge? I am certain that the magnanity of the Texas Heritage Foundation may be turned with much greater usefulness to other pursuits. Let the sleeping dog rest in peace. It is the prowling wolves that must be dealt with.

Alone

. . . a stone, a leaf, an unfound door; of a stone, a leaf, a door. And of all the forgotten faces.

Naked and alone we came into exile. In her dark womb we did not know our mother's face; from the prison of her flesh have we come into the unspeakable and incommunicable prison of this earth.

Which of us has known his brother? Which of us has looked into his father's heart? Which of us has not remained forever prisonpent? Which of us is not forever a stranger and alone?

O waste of loss, in the hot mazes, lost, among bright stars on this most weary unbright cinder, lost! Remembering speechlessly we seek the great forgotten language, the lost lane-end into heaven, a stone, a leaf, an unfound door. Where? When?

O lost, and by the wind grieved, ghost, come back again.

To Mr. Patrick Marnane:

From your letter I wasn't sure exactly what you were criticizing (besides the YMCA, the Quarterly, "beat" magazines, and everything except letter writing but in case you are criticizing the Spectrum, as a member of its editorial board, I am inclined to write you a few opinions of my own.

Your criticism of the YMCA implies that the people there can't manage the Student Directory either, and this may provoke them from their silence on the subject of Spectrum and CURRENT BUDGET PROBLEMS. This is good—I'd like to hear them talk.

The Quarterly, to be sure, is a nice conservative safe journal, (copies by subscription), and we need this along with the Davy Poplar Tree. Naturally, they must restrict themselves to poems and essays written by miss PHOENIX, who has been published in eleventy seventy DIFFERENT literary magazines throughout the ENGLISH speaking world and who has recently published in ENGLAND where she now lives. This is why we need a student magazine called Spectrum. You must know that people who write things who will be published according to the standards of the Quarterly live in ENGLAND. Or was it Australia?

Spectrum should be an exciting magazine, and it will be "beat" if you think so, "good" if you like it, reasonably priced if you buy it, (no duty on naturalized student manuscripts), and published whether you like it or not, thanks very much to Jim Hausmann.

No opportunity to establish an outlet for creative ability should be ignored. Especially when there is a place for a Spectrum or any other magazine of this type. It is my hope that Spectrum will remain independent, and thereby retain the freedom to express itself. Only in this way can an art form mean anything at all. Creative art, these days, has to be slightly "radical," and it progresses because of the freedom that allows it to be so.

I hope, Patrick, that you like the magazine—I may even send you a copy. According to Tom Sawyer, (good old everything-by-the-book-Sawyer) we ought to have a duel—let's make it ink bottles at five paces under the YMCA budget.

Today was a black day in the history of our University.

Today was a black day in the history of the world.

Today was a black day.

Today Dr. Erkenbraaker hurled an eraser at one of two dogs who were barking during his lecture on Egyptian hieroglyphics.

This was an act of gross inhumanity.

Dr. Erkenbraaker threw the eraser at the strawberry colored dog. He did not throw the eraser at the more common variety of Black and white dog.

This was an act of gross color discrimination.

All liberal minded students of the University must rise up in one shout of protest against such heinous inhumanity and discrimination.

Or liberalism will surely die forever on our campus.

Something must be done about this.

We must send a telegram.

Editor:

Just what is the lowdown on the proposed constitutional amendment which would give the student government the power to select our head cheerleader? The student legislature has approved this amendment, but in no way has it supported its action with basis or reason. Does the proposal possess any merit whatever? Evidently it does not since we lack information about it. This may be an attempt to hoodwink the student body. Our right to vote and elect our own head cheerleader is at stake. The legislature is hastily willing to take this right away from us and is just as hasty in leaving us uninformed on the reason why. The legislature is there to do some things for us students, but not everything. We can choose our own head cheerleader. We have done it before and we can again. Are we capable to elect our student government leaders, but incapable to elect our own cheering leader? Our abilities are not that inconsistent!

This scheme does an injustice to our intelligence. I hope the students will think about, then vote according on this proposal.

Editor:

I would like to compliment Mr. Roy B. Goodman on his letter to the Editor, of November 26, 1958.

I am sure that everyone was very pleased by Mr. Gans' editorial on the subject of independents in the last election, and it is my opinion that unless the two parties on this campus put forth some hard-working candidates in the Spring election, that this campus will have a large number of independent candidates elected.

I was very impressed by the election of Dewey Sheffield. I think that he will be heard from more on this campus and that the parties on this campus would be wise to try to get him join, as he will prove a great asset to the party to which he belongs.

I had never met Dewey until the campaign, but he made a lasting impression on me, as I am sure that he did on many, many students on this campus, as was clearly shown by the large vote which he received, in the past election.

I feel sure that I can say that the two political parties on this campus clearly have their job cut out for them in the Spring election, if they expect to capture many positions.

'Empty Stocking' Fund Plans Completed Here

Nine years ago the Junior Service League of Chapel Hill, in cooperation with the Orange county Welfare Department, began their Empty Stocking Fund drive to provide Christmas for the needy families of Orange County.

Each year the project has grown and improved. "Family adoptions" by groups, individuals, and organizations are already being arranged through Mrs. Charles Stevens, who will help you select the size family you can help the best.

Many people have asked for suggestions as to what should be put in the Christmas boxes. Foods such as flour, sugar, dried beans or peas, canned fruit, jello, evaporated milk, cereal, coffee, soups, or canned meats are just a few of the items that would mean so much to these families. Do not include anything of a perishable nature, as the boxes can not be delivered promptly. The League furnishes fresh fruit to the families at the time that they pick up their boxes.

New toys or used ones in good condition, gift wrapped if possible, would help brighten some child's day more than you might imagine.

Cash donations are equally important in helping to provide the needs of some families, and are absolutely necessary in order for the Empty Stocking Fund to reach its goal.

Won't you phone Mrs. Stevens at Chapel Hill 9-9112 for the family of your choice, or mail your contribution to Empty Stocking Fund, Box 374, Chapel Hill.

The problem was not that Marty had fallen in love with a shirt. After all, he was a Philosophy major.

The trouble was . . . Marty was in love with two shirts.

With Shirt No. 1, the Van Heusen Century, the serious Marty spent hours in heavenly bliss. He worshipped the revolutionary soft collar that won't wrinkle ever. It was Century's one-piece construction that drove him wild. (Other collars never did anything for our boy Marty, except wrinkle madly. You see, other collars are three pieces, fused or sewn together.)

With Shirt No. 2, the amazing Van Heusen "Vantage," the gay, frivolous Marty lived the life of carefree abandon. He could wear it and wear it—wash it—drip-dry it, or have it tumble-dried automatically—and wear it again in a matter of hours. It was the most money-saving love he ever had.

But when Marty was with one shirt, he missed the other. It was terrible. Like so many others with the same problem, Marty wrote to us. And so it came to pass that the Van Heusen "Century-Vantage" was born. This shirt combined the advantages of each into one great shirt—a wash and wear, no-iron, all cotton broadcloth shirt with the soft collar that won't wrinkle ever! And just $5! Have you a problem? Past, present, future—Gen Tel has an exciting story to relate!

The past? In just 24 years, Gen Tel has grown from a new company into the nation's second largest telephone system—a corporation that ranks among America's top 35 in gross income.

The present? Gen Tel operates over 3½ million telephones in 30 states—and is installing 3,750 new phones each week.

The future? Gen Tel is "at home" in those suburban and rural areas where America is expanding at a record clip. To meet this ever-increasing need for more and better telephone communication, Gen Tel is investing in new facilities at the rate of almost $200 million a year.

It took a lot of hard work and imaginative planning to put Gen Tel where it is today. And there is no stopping now!

From here on out, as America grows and prospers, so will Gen Tel.

Swimmers Rout Clemson; Sophomores Star In Opener

The Tar Heels, who went through last year's season with 11 wins without a loss and the ACC championship, appear to be well on their way again.

Many had feared that graduation of five All-Americans had depleted the Carolina ranks beyond repair, but this theory was rebuked strongly yesterday.

The predominately inexperienced Tar Heels swept through every single event, taking first in all and the first two in many.

The sophomores came through with flying colors, leading their more experienced mates to this opening win.

Harry Bloom, the latest in a series of great Tar Heels, won both of the events he was entered in by good margins. Bloom is a first year varsity man.

Bob Hunter and Randy Dodson, also sophomores, were impressive in opening victories.

Dodson almost single-handedly pulled the 400-meter relay out of the fire for Carolina as the anchor man. He made up much needed yardage and finished first to assure the Heels of a first place in every single event.

The old veterans also came through as expected. Kit Mercer and Brent Nash won their events in the swimming competition and Dick Cashwell and Pete Reynolds placed 1-2 in the one-meter diving.

The Tar Heels face ECC this Wednesday night away and return home next Saturday to do battle with South Carolina.

The Tar Heel freshmen got a brief workout against some Clemson frosh in an unscored event. They came through as expected. The first legal meet for the frosh is next week against Staunton Military Academy.

The Summary:

400 medley relay: Mercer (UNC), Nash (UNC) — 4:26

50-freestyle: Gurrant (C), Douglas (C), O'Donald (Cl.) — 24.9

1-meter diving: Cashewll (C), Reynolds (C), Petty (Cl)

Frosh Cagers Seek Second Win Monday

By ELLIOTT COOPER

Carolina's freshman basketballers go after their second victory of the season Monday night at 6 o'clock when they take on the High Point J. V. prior to the varsity contest against Virginia.

In their opening game last Wednesday night the frosh looked impressive as they handily beat Hargrave Military Academy 100-78. The Tar Babies led the visitors by 20 points at the half, but during the final twenty minutes they were unable to increase the margin by more than two points.

Guard Donnie Walsh from New York led the freshman scoring parade by picking up 21 points for the evening. Others in double figures included Jim Hudock, Bill Hubbard, and Yogi Poteat.

Second String Does Well

For coach Dean Smith one of the pleasant features of the game was the performance of his second unit. Due to dangerous personal foul situation of certain members of the first string Smith's second five got plenty of chance to play.

Pep Callahan led the second team scoring with 8 points. He was closely followed by Lew Phillips with 7, Denny Clark with 6, and John O'Bannon who had 5.

B Averages For Players

Eight Carolina football players, including three members of the first team, averaged B in their studies the last semester grades indicate.

This was learned here when grades were checked for possible Atlantic Coast Conference Candidates for the scholastic All-America team sponsored by the American Peoples Encyclopedia.

Center Ronnie Koes, a senior physical education major, tackle Don Redding, senior in business administration, and halfback Wade Smith, Morehead Scholar and a junior premed student, are the first string Dean's List men. Redding has a B average for his entire collegiate career.

Tar Heels Crush Va. 83-61 Here

Salz Gets 19; Leads Fast Break

By RUSTY HAMMOND

Carolina's Tar Heels pulled off the same stunt for the second game in a row here last night as they emerged from a so-so first half into a red-hot second half to run Virginia almost off the floor to the tune of 83-61.

Stone-faced Harvey Salz led the attack with 19 points, most of which came when he was on the receiving end of a devastating fast break. Soph York Yarese followed with 14, most of his coming along the same route.

Lee Shaffer poured 13 markers through the hoop for third place honors. Dick Kepley slacked off in his scoring compared to last week, with 10, but did yeoman work under the boards in hauling down 16 rebounds.

The Tar Heels moved the ball well under the basket all through the second half, using the pass and shoot and the fast break to equal advantage.

Virginia's high man was soph flash Jay McKenzie who collected 16. Big Herb Busch was really kept under wraps by the defensively alert Tar Heels; Busch didn't score a point.

Carolina out rebounded the Cavaliers 57-43, and that was one of the telling points of the game.

Carolina jumped off to a quick 6-0 lead in the opening minutes, but left the floor at intermission ahead by only 1 at 29-28.

Virginia quickly went ahead after halftime, but Lee Shaffer scored 2 3-pointers in a row which put the

Interracial Yule Party Set Friday

Christmas songs and dances will feature a community party at the "old" Parish House of the Episcopal Chapel of the Cross on E. Franklin St. this Friday at 8 p.m.

All residents of Chapel Hill and Carrboro are invited to attend the holiday gathering which is sponsored by the Chapel Hill Fellowship for School Integration and marks the third anniversary of this interracial affair.

Among those who will provide entertainment are a choir, led by Mrs. Vivian Foushee in "When the Lord of Love Was Born" and "There's a Song in the Air"; the Reverend Lauren Mead, who will read a Christmas story; a group of fifth grade children, led by Mrs. Charlotte Huse, who will sing "Frere Jacques" and "Il Est Ne, le Divin Enfant"; Joseph Lightsey, giving " 'Twas the Night Before Christmas"; a group of dancers directed by Miss Lucille Caldwell; another dance recital given by children trained by Mrs. Joseph Straley; a choir from the Episcopal Church, which will sing a French Noel and "Good Christian Men Rejoice"; and a choir directed by Mrs. James Roberson.

N. C. Schools Need 2,181 New Classrooms

RALEIGH — (AP) — North Carolina's public schools, bulging with rising enrollment, have an immediate need for 2,181 new classrooms.

Totaling up figures on enrollment and school facilities, a report released Thursday by the State Department of Public Instruction said the new classrooms are needed despite the fact that 3,709 new room have been built in the past two years.

It pointed out that school enrollment after the first month of the curent school year showed a gain of 23,809 over last year. Total enrollment was placed at 1,061,171.

Voting Today Will Settle Three Issues

Three issues are involved in today's student election, the second balloting of the semester.

A proposed constitutional amendment, to be voted on by the entire student body, provides for the head cheerleader to be chosen by a committee instead of the student body.

The re-election of sophomore class president will be held between Charlie Graham (UP) and Davis Young (SP). Young contested the Nov. 18 election which Graham won by two votes.

A run-off election will be held for the third seat on the Women's Honor Council between Sandy Trotman and Bunky Jester.

Another proposed constitutional amendment scheduled to be voted on today was rescinded by Student Legislature Thursday night. It called for one election in the fall for the Student Legislature.

Ballot boxes will be located in dorms and at other usual polling sites. The polls will be open between 9 a.m. and 5 p.m. Bob Furtado, chairman of the Elections Board, has urged students to vote.

Militia Bill Is Phi Topic This Evening

The Philanthropic Literary Society will debate a resolution favoring a national militia to replace America's current armed forces in its meeting tonight at 8 in Phi Hall.

The bill asks for a combination of the UMT idea and the present national militia of Switerland. Every able-bodied man and woman of military age would be required to take basic training and two weeks of training each summer thereafter.

Everyone of military age would be subject to a twenty-four notification in case of emergency. The main argument for the adoption of the bill seems to be the overwhelming burden of the present system

Anyone interested in the debate of armed forces on U. S. economy, has been invited to attend.

Jury Interviews Being Conducted

The Honor System Commission will be conducting jury interviews today and Wednesday from 3 to 5 p.m. in the Honor Council Room in Graham Memorial.

Application forms for prospective jurors will be available in the Student Government office, where appointment sheets may also be signed.

Spurs Annual Mock Trail Memorial Hall 'Tragedy'

(Phi Alpha Delta law fraternity each year sponsors a mock trial featuring prominent campus personalities as principals. The following story is connected with the trial scheduled for Friday.)

A violent behind-the-scenes death late in the third act of the Carolina Playmakers production of "Look Homeward Angel" Sunday night ended the otherwise successful performance on a note of tragedy.

Beauteous Diana Johnson who played the part of Florry Mangle, died shortly after being struck in the head with a heavy flower pot thrown during the play in pursuance of the script by Mrs. Marian Fitz-Simons who had the role of Eliza Gant.

Miss Johnson's body was discovered in the wings even as an enthusiastic audience was calling for the cast.

The police were immediately called to the scene by the director, Harry E. Davis, and Miss Johnson was placed in an ambulance and rushed to Memorial Hospital where she was pronounced dead on arrival.

The 1958 Yackety Yack beauty queen's absence from the curtain calls was noticed by only a few members of the audience who for the most part were totally unaware of the backstage drama.

As the applause died down, stage-hands were frantically trying to call a doctor but the attempts were soon recognized as futile since the deep cut over Miss Johnson's temple apparently caused death instantaneously.

Unaware of the accident, Mrs. Fitz-Simons and other members of the cast carried on their performances flawlessly. When informed of Miss Johnson's death, however, Mrs. Fitz-Simons was hysterical with grief.

According to the script, during the third act while acting the part of Eliza, Mrs. Fitz-Simons was called upon to pick up a flower pot and hurl it at boarders retreating from the stage. Miss Johnson, one of the last to flee, was struck just as she left the wings and crumpled to the floor almost immtdiately.

Sheriff Jim Fasul said late last night that his office would conduct a routine investigation as to the possibility of foul play, but added on the surface of things "This looks to me like no more or less than a terrible accident."

Falling Lights Nearly Cause Real Tragedy

Several Playmakers had a close call that wasn't connected with the mock trial preliminaries Sunday night after the final performance of "Look Homeward, Angel."

Heavy overhead lightening equipment was being lowered when the rope slid through the hands of Pete Flayhive. Flayhive received rope burns on his hands while he tried to hold the lighting apparatus.

About ten Playmakers were on the stage and several had to jump clear of the falling lights. No other injuries were reported.

State System Abolishment Is Di Subject

The Dialectic Senate will debate a bill tonight concerning "The Abolition of States in Deference to a System of Administrative Districts."

According to Rick Wolfer, senate member and chairmen of the Ways and Means Committee, the proposal is one which will increase governmental efficiency and will decrease the antiquated federal system and the friction inherent within the U.S. federation.

Wolfer added the need for this change has become much greater due to overt actions of several states in resistence to federal law as outlined by the Constitution and interpreted by the Supreme Court.

Wolfer also pointed to such instances as closing of schools in Arkansas and Virginia as examples of state defiances of federal law and illustrated the increased efficiency that would be achieved through the proposed change by naming such items as inconsistand divorce and marriage laws, driving regulations and questions of extradiction as examples of inefficient state government.

The meeting will be held tonight at 8 o'clock in the Senate Hall of 3rd floor New West. All interested persons have been urged to attend.

New Carolina Quarterly Due On Stands This Week

The Fall-Winter issue of the Carolina Quarterly is due to appear this week on the newsstands.

The Quarterly appeared recently in Writer's Digest's list of highest rating literary magazines of the nation. It was ranked with the Chicago Review, Atlantic Monthly, Harpers and the Yale Review as a prestige publication for the works of young writers.

The Quarterly was characterized as having a "lively experimental quality" by an issue of Trace, the directory of literary magazines in the English speaking world.

Quarterly writers have high ranking in many fields throughout the nation. An editorial by Christian Lefebure, editor of the Quarterly last year, was reprinted in the Intro-Bulletin, a monthly newspaper of the arts published in New York City.

As a result of a Quarterly article last year called "Reds, Profs, and Cadillacs" Dr. Walter Arndt of UNC, was asked by The Nation to write a similar article for their use.

Recently the North Carolina State Department of Public Instruction approved the Quarterly for purchase by high school libraries in the state.

The Quarterly provides a place for writing of merit from students of UNC as well as contributions from authors from all parts of the country. According to a policy statement made last year the wide scope, as opposed to drawing material from local sources only, has two purposes:

1) "The wider and stiffer competition insures that the material finally printed by the Quarterly will carry a greater credit to the young writer for having weathered this great competition. Moreover the chance of a young writer's being printed in the same issue along with an established name is increased.

2) As a stimulus to this campus,

Ancient Roman Is Talk Topic Tonight At 8

The Bernard Baruch of Julius Caesar's days — Marcus Cicero — will be topic of the Humanities Lecture tonight by Latin Prof. Walter Allen of UNC.

The speech will be given in Room 106, Carroll Hall, at 8 p.m.

In "Private and Confidential: Cicero's Correspondence" Dr. Allen will bring up such topics as the famed Roman's orator's position on the Caesar-Pompey controversy and his later stand against the tyranny of Mark Anthony.

The lecture is open to the public.

TONIGHT IN MEMORIAL HALL

Melachrino Plans Varied Program

George Melachrino will conduct the Melachrino strings tonight at 8 p.m. in a varied concert of classical and light concert compositions.

Presented will be the Warsaw Concerto, Santa Lucia, Catari! Catari! Autumn Leaves, a Strauss waltz, Lisbon at Twilight, selections from South Pacific and My Fair Lady, Oranges and Lemons, London Bridge (written by George Melachrino), Colorado River, San Francisco, Greensleeves and a fantasy of Tchaikowsky melodies.

Admission is free to all students upon presentation of ID cards. After 7:45 p.m. ticktts will be available to student's wives at $1 and to townspeople at $2.

The concert is sponsored by the Student Entertainment Committee of Graham Memorial Activities board.

The orchestra was formed at the end of World War II. It is on its first American concert tour. The Melachrino group is widely known for its albums of mood music which have sold over three million copies in the United States.

Melachrino said recently "Rock and Roll is just fine. One of the reasons I appreciate it is that it's so very opposed to the type of music I specialize in. I see it from the opposite viewpoint."

He went on to say "I don't think there's anything bad about it. It's lively, rythmic and gives young people a chance to let off steam. It's a darn sight better than hugging close together dancing, clasping each other while listening to wailing and moaning songs about here - I-am-all-alone-with-the-moon. Rock and Roll is a far healthier thing for kids on the dance floor."

Speaking of his own attempts at rock and roll, Melachrino said, "Yes, I've danced to rock and roll and so has my wife. We danced to Elvis Presley records in our home. She hurt her leg and I strained my back."

Human Rights

Tomorrow marks the beginning of human rights week. It is a week that should not be celebrated.

It should not be celebrated because there should be no need to acquaint people with the concept of human rights, nor should there be a need to make them aware of the rights of other individuals and how these rights are being violated in the United States and throughout the world.

Yet, there is a reason for having a human rights week and its reason is that the people of America and the world have largely no conception of the rights they should have, and, in some cases, do have. There is less of a realization of rights of other people and how others should be treated.

There is no empirical justification for human rights. One cannot look at the specimen man and deduce from the specimen man that he should be accorded such and such rights. Indeed there are no absolutes operating in the human rights situation. One cannot concretely ascertain what rights man possesses by any absolute criterion.

One must derive his concept of individual rights from the individual's view on man, and one of the most unfortunate conceptions in the world is the all too prevalent one of man as an almost worthless commodity.

Until people begin to realize the potentiality for greatness that man possesses, and until they are aware that the climate to best cultivate this greatness is freedom, human rights can only be a live concept in a small segment of the world.

The pill that man has a great potentiality for good is a bitter one for many to swallow. It destroys their illusions, turns over lives built on the depravity of others, and makes people who are secrue in their own goodness and the evilness of others feel insecure in their own value system, if they have one.

They do not seem to realize that the human rights upon themselves in order to be safe do not apply to others until the heretofore safe actions are no longer safe. And then it is too late.

There seems to be no responsibility on the part of the people, no concern, and the responsibility and concern needed extends beyond the home to all the people in the world, until this type of concern is accomplished hope of individual rights for all the people of the world is an impossibility.

Thus, a human rights week is necessary to acquaint man with man, and to make man realize his responsibility to man.

There must be an acquaintance with the idea that freedom offers more to individual development than slavery or servitude. There must be an acceptance of the basic equality of potential of all men and a construction of society with the realization of this manifested in its legal structure.. There must above all be a tacit acceptance of the individual as good, so that in the tribunals whether congressional or judicial, the individual is granted resepct and credence.

The concept of human dignity has been lost for too long in the pious, paternalistic outpourings from the mouths of those who profit by being father. It is time for the concept to be a reality.

Why

Why is it that in some fraternities and sororities it costs much more not to go to a party than it does to go to one?

Could there be an element of financial compulsion?

Election

The fact that there will be only three items on the ballot today should not completely prohibit students from voting. One important office — Woman's Honor Council — is to be voted upon. One lesser office—sophomore class president — and an amendent to the constitution taking head cheerleaders from the ranks of elected officials are also on the ballot.

The amendment is an unimportant one, it is still one that should be approved. Unless the cheerleader gives a cheer in each door, it is impossible to tell his competence. This is one office that would be better selected by a board of his peers.

The turnout is not expected to be large, but maybe, for once, the student body will surprise the predictors.

Managing Editors ____ CHARLIE SLOAN,

'Look Homeward, Angel'

Anthony Wolff

"In the original 'Caesar and Cleopatra' I hadn't been able to change Shaw, but I certainly altered his intention by making the words fit what felt most comfortable to me. The second time, despite the agony, I dug inside of myself and rid myself of every personal reaction until I found exactly what that character felt. I discarded my intention for that of Shaw and worked to create his Cleopatera, not mine." In these words, from an article in the December 7, 1958 NEW YORK TIMES MAGAZINE) Helen Hayes expresses her conception of the performing artist's responsibility to the work being performed; and this is a great actress writing honestly from fifty years of experience.

Miss Hayes' description of the primary requirement for artistic honestly is doubly applicable to the recent LOOK HOMEWARD, ANGEL: it applies to both play and production. Ketti Frings, the playwright, can be held to this honesty because her play makes no pretense to original vision. The play takes not only its inspiration, basic plot, setting and names from Thomas Wolfe's novel, but also most of its very language. Every major speech (with one or two exceptions problematically admitted due to hazy recollection and lack of research) is taken word-for-word from the original text, as is most of the relatively incidental dialogue.

By anchoring her play so deeply in the novel, Miss Frings commits herself to its vision. Her play must stand not simply by itself—although it must be able to do that, too—but it should also stand comparison with the novel. If, having taken so much from Wolfe, she refuses to accept the essence, Miss Frings is something of a plagiarist and worse, despite the approval of the Wolfe estate. And, if this be the case, then the Carolina Playmakers underwrote a moral hazard in producing the play, especially as a tribute to Thomas Wolfe on the anniversary of his death. If it should turn out, quite apart from this first consideration, that Miss Frings' play is inconsistent within itself, that its vision is unclear and/or untrue, then the hazard is compounded: the Playmakers then had the difficult task of making sense out of nonsense. And if, finally, the recent production fell short of the play, failed to realize whatever depth the script admits, then there is a third charge.

This is an inquiry, then, on three counts.

The first question, although perhaps not the most important, is that of Miss Frings' felicity to the novel from which she so heavily borrows. Here, again, the question splits, and there are two consideration. First: in those instances in which she has used Thomas Wolfe's dialogue in the play, has she violated the sense or spirit of the original words in lifting them out of the source and placing them in new contexts and original juxtapositions? Second: does Miss Frings' wholly original contribution to the play complement the rest.

The answer to the first question is a qualified "yes." to the second "no." Certainly Miss Frings has been judicious in her selections from the novel, and in bending her carefully culled fragments to the uses of the play she has done most of them no noticable harm. In most cases the replaced fragment retains its original force and meaning, sometimes gaining potential in the new context. (At least one notable exception to this is Miss Frigs' use of the final benediction after Ben's death, in the novel a part of Wolfe's interior monologue which is woven through the narration, and given in the play to the doctor, whom it ill befits.)

The playwright makes few significant additions to the play aside from the uninspired but structurally adequate variations on Wolfe's depiction of 'Gene and Laura. Miss Frings' creation of Ben's quasi-reconciliation with his mother in the moment before his death is, on the other hand, unjustified violation of the novel; likewise, the complete invention of 'Gene's reactions to Miss Brown's attempt at seduction and to his first meeting with Laura are seriously out of character with the 'Gene of the novel and the rest of the play.

The play as a work of art in its own right, is strongest when it sticks closest to the novel and disintegrates rapidly as its independence increases. That is, where Wolfe's words are used in their original sense and force, and in contexts which approximate the original, the play is most powerful; where Wolfe is adapted to uses which are more or less not his own, the play is weaker; and in the few instances where Miss Frings' is completely on her own the play is flimsy and shallow.

So much of the play falls in the first category and retains the quality of Thomas Wolfe's conception that the rest must follow Wolfe's intention or run the risk of mocking its own depth. As the characters identify themselves and their situation through Wolfe's words the play becomes Oneillian in its stature and implications. Her original contributions seem to indicate that Miss Frings is unwilling to allow the words which she so skillfully borrows to achieve such full signifiantion through the play. Thus she requires 'Gene to be something of a buffoon in the two instances mentioned above, "Goodyado" — good God! and Ben to die with a certain satisfaction after making a couple of wry jokes; and in the heavy moment of 'Gene's grief after he has lost Laura Miss Frings tosses in a standard television joke from Hugh, who has been sitting unobtrusively on stage for the whole scene just to deliver that unfortunate bit of comic relief.

The playwright also creates a number of structural difficulties by including too much of Thomas Wolfe. The epilogue, whatever its value in the novel, certainly has no purpose in the play and it is a dramatic failure. Mr. Gant's two veiled references to the malignant cancer which is killing him are rather meaningless when his only disease in the play is alcoholism. More serious in terms of the play's meaning is the liberal sprinkling of existential problems ("a Natanson's dozen" is an irresistable temptation) which Miss Frings leaves posed and unexplored.

Certainly if she had remained true to Wolfe's vision instead of violating it, Miss Frings could have produced a play with something of the stature of LONG DAY'S JOURNEY INTO NIGHT. As it is, it is considerably less, but the essential depth and power are still there, no matter how violated and dissipated they may be.

The end result is that no matter how LOOK HOMEWARD, ANGEL is played it will not be completely successful. There are, it would seem, two possibilities: to play it as lightly as possibly in which case the depth of the play is skimmed over and subordinated to its superficial aspects with resulting meaninglessness or the play is done with all the passion and intensity and transparent depth with which it has been endowed. in which case a few elements will be jarringly inconsistent with the bulk of the play but the rest of it may reach full significance.

Unfortunately, the Playmakers chose the former alternative. The whole first act was played as though the real play underlying the words was an embarrassing scandal which had to be hidden by a light touch and some broad slapstick comedy. Ben's violent outbursts seemed more melodramatic than true, and W. O. Gant was just a paranoid drunkard who makes his wife suffer terribly. It was almost that bad.

But almost from the beginning of the second act the truth became impossible to hide. The open emnity between Mr. and Mrs. Gant, Ben's death, and Laura's defection could not be treated lightly although they were never given their due weight. The Madame Elizabeth scene was the final abortive attempt at comedy.

By that time, however, it was too late to undo the damage; instead of unfolding as a coherent structure, the play was one of moments. If the play has any central theme, it is the unfolding of 'Gene's consciousness to the point where he realizes that he is alone in the world and that he must in some sense create himself and his world if there is to be any order in chaos. This is at least one coherent structure in the play, and certainly the most obvious one; but it was not expressed in the Playmaker production. The moments were there, but they existed as distinct moments rather than as crucial points in a continuous line.

Ironically enough, on this rather weak conception of the play were lavished three magnificent performances; in them at least it was obvious that the play could have been done in full strength. The reference is to Foster and Marion Fitz-Simons (Mr. and Mrs. Gant) and Tommy Rezzuto (Ben). These three provided the moments of full and transparent depth which gave the play what little grandeur it achieved. All three had the means of communication, the skill, in such seemingly unlimited abundance (particularly Mr. and Mrs. Fitz-Simons) that almost anything seemed possible, and the inadequacy of the interpretation (or lack of interpretation) becomes all the more lamentable.

It is doubtful that Bob Ketler was capable of playing Eugene with equal fullness his skill, although considerable, seemed less than that of the other three leading players; but he proved without a doubt in the last scenes that he was capable of better, more honest sutff than the idiotic clowning with which he was occupied for much of the play and the dull, halting speech which rendered him unable to read his own poetry with more than fourth-grade fluency.

Unfortunately, there was not a single performance of similar excellence in a minor role. Betty Green's characterization of Laura was perfectly adequate until she sobbed her way through her big scene in which she was supposed to achieve honesty and strength. Miss Green in no sense, however, deserved such an exit line as "Goodbye, little room. I've been happy here."

Patricia Liston, as "Fatty," and Ellen Dennis, as Helen, were quite adequate; particularly Miss Dennis, who at moments gave promise of a richness of characterization which was never realized.

Carolyn Marsh was capable, if uninspired, as Madame Elizabeth. From all appearances, she was unsure of her function—whether she was comic relief or genuine grief. She may well have been up against an irresolvable dilemma.

Douglas McDemott's unbearably lacadasical Dr. Maguire was quite unbelievable; even when there was genuine concern as to whether the drunken Gant was ill or just unconscious, the good doctor was impossibly slow in attending to him; likewise when Ben died. Whatever tension there was could not but collapse with this attitude.

Tarkington, played by Gene Parsons, provided good comic relief where it belonged. If Herbert Drinnon's Will had been more alive than dead, and the odd assortment of boarders has been somewhat more active, the comic relief might have been provided by them instead of the main characters.

Arthur McDonald was perfectly undistinguished but adequate as the undistinguished but adequate Hugh; Mr. McDonald cannot be held responsible for Miss Frings' misplaced joke.

Charles Nisbet's portrayal of Luke was wide of the mark. Luke may well be good-natured and lovable, but he is also a Gant, and something more than one-dimensional exhuberance.

Tommy Rezzuto's sets were excellent, particularly the "Dixieland" set. (Perhaps the backdrop in the mable yard scene could have had a touch of realism to be more in keeping with the rest of the play.) The angel looked like genuine Carrara marble, weighing at least a ton. The costumes by Irene Smart Rains and Jim Armacost's lighting were both fine.

All in all, the Playmaker performance was at best one of infinite but unrealized promise, and at worst a sharp disappointment. Director Harry Davis might have better used his four leading performers and moulded the rest into a good supporting cast. The talent was there; direction would have helped immensly.

That was a pretty sad "memorial to our famous alumnus, Thomas Wolfe, on this the twentieth anniversary of his death."

Counter Point

William Cheney

Let upstanding students unite! The scourge of the trees must be put down.

The trees which litter Carolina's otherwise beautiful campus are a menace to the health and safety of the students and faculty. The trees are a bad moral influence and are expensive to keep. Furthur, they are damaging to the aesthetic values of the student and could be put to much better use.

Trees are the embodiment of filth and disease. Innumerable micro-organisms of a malevolent nature make their homes in trees and squirrels, which are closely related to rats, abound in them. There is no telling what pestilence may attack the innocent wanderer who ventures into the proximity of these foul, leaved objects. The fact that squirrels can become rabid and render death dealing bites should be given especial consideration. The sun's light which not only kills germs but provides us with necessary vitamin D is obscured by these umbrella-like behemoths. Thus it can be seen that trees not only foster disease but are actually detrimental to proper nutrition.

The eternal twilight into which the campus is thrown by the ungodly monsters must, of its very nature, be a bad influence upon the morals of the student. Everyone knows that light is the symbol of beauty and truth and that darkness or degrees thereof are symbols of evil and deception. Consider, too, the effect of the trees at night. They transform the campus into a veritable Sodom. If the Arboretum, alone, were to be cleared, the moral atmosphere of U.N.C. would be raised far above its present lamentable level.

Throughout the United States the water table is falling at an alarming rate. Trees use more water than any other living thing. It would be patriotic to cut them down. Furthermore, the expense of leaf-clearance is quite large. Surely, the University has better uses for its funds.

It is generally believed that the buildings at U.N.C. are among the most beautiful in the South. This would be hard to prove simply because we cannot see the buildings. If, as has been asserted, the buildings are beautiful, the student would benefit from contemplating them. This is nearly impossible as things stand at present.

Finally, an valuable properties that trees may have are wasted when they are left standing. The trees could be made into lumber for buildings and furniture. They could be used for firewood, thus cutting fuel bills at the University. Also, they could be used for truly spectacular bonfires at pep rallies. In this way school spirit could be improved.

On the basis of the evidence put forward, I fail to see how any but the most backward and irresponsible of people could defend the scourge of the trees. .It may be said that the trees have a potential for good but are, at the moment, the foremost evil to be combatted on our campus..

Notes In Review

Arthur Lessing

A frequently interesting and frequently boring evening of modern compositions featured the work of Thomas N. Rice and Peter Ford, both students in the department of music, and provided the audience with a mixture of emotions, ideas, sounds, simple noises, laughs that made for confused opinions, impressions, and conclusions.

The concert began fifteen minutes late, with all the lights turned out in the hall forcing members of the audience to light matches in order to read their programs. The visual effect was interesting, and the whole thing perhaps symbolic of the musical content of the concert.

Mr. Rice's accomplishment in composition was immediately evident in the first work of the evening, the 'Bachanaal and scene at the Medusa Rock; from the opera "Whatever Passes Along The Paths of The Sea".' He has a solid sense of development which makes the composition distinctly controlled and musically justified in its progress. Both its beginning and end were certain, holding between them music of defined intent and shape. If this composition is his latest work (the entire opera is promised to be performed in April, 1959). it indicates a developing talent, for the rest of his work seemed to me inferior. The song cycle of "Love Lyrics" that followed lacked musical substance in general and, although again Mr. Rice's talent for development showed itself, there did not seemed to be enough musical material to work with. The performance, incidentally, was excellent by Raymond McGuire, tenor, and Michael Cordovana, piano.

I personally was bored throughout the "Suite Antique pour la guitarre". Again there seemed to be little real musical material to work with. The performance, furthermore, was so lackadaisical that if the music contained any spirit at all it was lost. The Pavane movement has some moving music in the outer parts, but the middle section seemed muddled and out of place within the movement.

The "Nocturne" and 'Petit Suite for Flute and Strings" were, from a point of view of musical craft, most accomplished. Mr. Rice has a nice sense of orchestration, seems inventive in the art of counterpoint, and is frequently able to work with his instrumental voices so that they take on freshness and delight. In the Nocturne movement of the Suite, for example, I was struck with the beautiful setting of mood that opens the movement, but disappointed again with a lack of musical ideas in the solo flute to fulfill the promise of the setting. The March has an interesting development but no melodic content worth speaking of. I also failed to understand the closing section of this movement which is completely out of step with the overall character of the movement. The Dance movement reminds me of Copeland's music for "Billy the Kid," but fails to sustain its mood, again, I think, for lack of musical material which the composer can work with. The closing movement was a clever satire on the popular "Ach, du Lieber Augustien."

To sum up my impression of this more than generous amount of Mr. Rice's music is a bit difficult. He is, as I said earlier, thoroughly accomplished in his craft. What is needed now is more imaginative musical material to provide his composition with a thematic solidity that was lacking throughout most of the work played. What is most praiseworthy in his work is a real feeling of musical motion, the result of a careful concern with development composition-wise. Without musical "stuff", however, this sense of development can easily become tedious nad boring.

Peter Ford's art of composition is dedicated to the task of "transmuting" other music, poetry (and I suppose, eventually painting) into his own kind of music. As such, one does not "compose" but translate" music. Mr. Ford's music, however, does not seem to achieve what it sets out to do. Employing percussion instruments of all kinds in addition to such interesting objects as bow-and-arrow, garbage pail, water pistol, and an upside down bicycle, he creates sounds which repeat and swell in volume and end at their height. Infrequently, one was able to enjoy the contrast of sounds or the interplay of different sounds, but, for me, music never came into existence by this method of transmutation.

This is not the place to become involved in obviously different conceptions of what music is and should be, but it would seem that if art is symbolic (as Mr. Ford might seemed to have perhaps said in his delightfully clever talk "The New Esthetic") it does not follow that, therefore, one art form can be "translated" into another. It may well be that uniqueness of music is exactly the symbolization of feelings that cannot be expressed in any other medium or any other way. If not music, Mr. Ford at least demonstrated with considerable success that there is pleasure in listening consciously to just sound. And in this direction I wish him all the success in the world, whether it is art or not.

Aycock Cabinet Discusses Honor System

The primary topic of the Chancellor's cabinet meeting Monday concerned the Honor System in the classroom.

Due to the complaints of professors about the Honor System the cabinet attempted to analyze the problem, according to Student Body President Don Furtado. The cabinet concluded that two questions were the most prevalent in the matter: Are the professors cooperating with the student government in its operation? Are students fulfilling their responsibilities to the Honor System?

One proposal was for the establishment of an orientation for incoming faculty members. It was pointed out that many new professors have come to UNC within the last 10 years and may not be familiar with the UNC Honor System.

The orientation program is being undertaken by the cabinet and Deans Fred Weaver and James L. Godfrey as a tenative move. The entire Honor System problem will be considered by the Student Honor System Commission to propose working solutions.

The cabinet also discussed the progress of the Student Committee of State Affairs. It is their belief that the students should be oriented to the budget needs of the University. A thorough knowledge of the students of the budget needs could aid in publicizing the needs.

Members of the cabinet present for the Chancellor's meeting included on Furtado, Paddy Sue Wall, Ralph Cummings, Charlie Gray and Hugh Patterson.

Dance Lessons Start At 7 p.m. This Evening

University students interested in dance lessons have been reminded that the second week of reguarly scheduled lessons starts at 7 p.m. today in the Rendezvous Room of Graham Memorial.

Tonight's participants will review the basic fundamentals taught last week and then proceed into more advanced mambo steps. They will also learn fundamental steps in another dance.

These lessons, sponsored by the Special Events Committee of Graham Memorial, are held each Tuesday and Thursday evening at 7.

The lessons are taught by John Harris, a former Arthur Murray instructor. Harris was also associated with Able Studios in Atlanta, Ga., and taught privately for several years. He plans to teach a different step each night so that those unable to attend each lesson can benefit from the ones attended.

Future lessons will include instruction in the waltz, tango, samba and cha-cha. Jan. 6 will be the date for the last lesson.

A special invitation has been extended by the Special Events Committee to co-eds to attend these sessions.

Hudock High With 20; Poteet Collects 18

By ELLIOTT COOPER

Carolina's freshman basketball team literally walked away with its second win of the season yesterday as Coach Dean Smith put everyone in the lineup with the end result being a 88-56 victory over the High Point J. V.

This game was almost identical to the Hargrave contest in that the Tar Babies were never in trouble, and there was never any doubt about the outcome. Jim Hudock with 18 points to his credit. The only other Tar Baby in double figures was guard Don Walsh who got 12. After Walsh the scoring was divided up among eight players who got anywhere from 9 to 1 for the evening.

Smith, substituting liberally in order to give all the squad members a chance to see action, had his first stringers rack up a 47-26 halftime lead and coasted on home from there.

Midway through the second half the frosh doubled the High Point score at 64-32 and held this point spread until the final buzzer. Before Smith took out his starting five at 5:14 the first-string unit had built up a commanding 81-39 lead which was the Tar Babies biggest margin of the night.

Hudock Fouls Out

Once again the frosh looked bad in the fouling department. Hudock fouled out for the second game in row, this time lasting until 9:47 of the last half. The big center was the only one to actually foul out, but it might have been a different story if the starters had had to go all the way.

For the last five minutes Smith used a lineup made up of Ward Marslender, Roger Foushee, John Laws, Louis Sullivan, and John Engel. During the period this group was in they could only manage to add eight points to the team total. Engel got 3 points on a foul shot and a lay up, Sullivan got a jump shot for 2, and Laws hit one foul shot.

The frosh get their first real test of the season Saturday night when they take on the powerful Wake Forest freshmen in Winston-Salem.

The Scoring

Carolina — Hubbard, 8; McComb, 9; Hudock, 20; Walsh, 12; Poteet, 18; Callahan, 6; Phillips, 4; O'Bannon, 2; Clark, 2; Laws, 1; Engel, 4; Sullivan, 2.

High Point — Unger, 4; Simmons, 2; Roach, 19; Trotter, 4; Flippin, 13; Guzinski, 4; Webster, 4; Samuels, 2; Windham, 2.

As if the "beat your brother" Atlantic Coast Conference basketball race wasn't enough, the eight teams within the ACC have signed a near suicide schedule against outside teams.

The ACC teams have gone out of their way to get tough games with teams outside the loop, in addition to the annual round-robin fiasco. They will, however, fare very well against these teams because they come from the best conference in the nation.

Fans will remember several years back when Brigham Young, then ranked high nationally, came sailing into North Carolina. You guessed it — they played two games with ACC squads and dropped both of them. And there's always the time Duke whipped Kentucky a few years ago.

Carolina goes to Kentucky over Christmas for the Blue Grass Invitational, which contains the Tar Heels, Louisville, Notre Dame and Northwestern. Then comes the Dixie Classic featuring the Big Four plus Cincinatti (with Oscar Robinson), Michigan State (with Johnny Green), Yale, and Louisville.

In single games, the Heels play Notre Dame (with Tom Hawkins) and always tough Loyola. The Notre Dame contest is in Charlotte January 3 and the ticket office has tickets for students.

Clemson visits the Steel Bowl in Pittsburgh this month, which features Pitt, Duquesne and Miami. They play in the Carousel Tourney during Christmas which has Davidson, St. Francis, Pitt, Fordham, George Washington and Bucknell. South Carolina also is signed for the Carousel.

Duke, who lost their entire team through graduation, really went gung-ho on outside competition. The Blue Devils face Kentucky and West Virginia in succesive games, plus Penn and Villanova. They too are in the Classic, then they play Pitt and Navy.

Maryland also has decided to go in for extra-curriculars in a big way. The Terps play Northwestern, Kentucky, Navy, Georgetown, and George Washington. They also enter the Sugar Bowl Tourney which has Memphis State, Mississippi State, and Loyola.

State, traditionally one of the stronger teams in the country, has already beaten Penn State. Now they have LaSalle and (ouch!) Kansas State and Kansas. They also are the host team for the Dixie Classic and later take on Villanova and Eastern Kentucky just for the sheer joy of playing basketball.

No wonder coaches get gray around these parts. No wonder they chew towels and eat tranquilizers. Some cage coaches around the league would probably really like to be hung, and not just in effigy.

But, as usual, the ACC will show well even against these national powerhouses. They always have, and they always will. The brand of basketball played in this conference stands head and shoulders above most leagues in the country.

The fun really starts when these powerful teams meet each other. Anythnig can happen, and usually does. Sell-outs are the only kind of crowd that can be had for one of the traditional rivalrys in the loop.

Why are they so good? They've got the horses. They get players from everywhere, and the best players at that. The New York Kankees' fabulous chain system even stands gaping in open-mouthed wonder at the recruiting power exhibited by teams in the ACC.

It's going to be another great season. Don't miss a minute of it.

Basketball

Heels way in front to stay. Both his baskets came from passes from Doug Moe, who had one assist after another all night.

The game was marked throughout by rough play both under the boards and along the court. Densmore and Siewers fouled out for the Cavaliers before the final horn sounded.

Frank McGuire one again shuffled men in and out of his line-up, but this time he never did find a combination which stayed together long.

McGuire said after the contest that "That's a good team out there (Virginia) and they'll be mighty rough on their home court."

McGuire continued, "We played very poorly in the last few minutes of the first half, but I was very satisfied with our showing in the second half. Dick Kepley did a great job on Busch. We have five men playing together, all working as a team."

Phi Betes Tap Fifteen In Ceremonies In Di

Fifteen students were tapped into Carolina's Phi Beta Kappa chapter yesterday in ceremonies in the Dialectic Senate Chamber, New West Hall.

Those intiated were Ernest Hampton Austin, Hamlet; Robert Wilson Carter, Selma; Nancy Marie Collins, Albemarle; Gabriel Marlin Evans, High Point; Edward Bynum Fowlkes II, Tarboro; Alma Eleanor Graham, Raleigh;

Marion Wiley Harris, Englehard; Paul Donald Herring, Clinton; Annie Nichols Higgins, Chapel Hill; Gary Melvin Hipps, Tryon; Jane Hammond Massey, Charlotte; William Dumas McLester, Rockingham;

Carolyn Wisler Prince, Chapel Hill; Eleanor Belknap Stephens, Asheville; and Constance Elizabeth Whitaker, Whittier, Cal.

Dean of Awards and Distinctions E. L. Mackie announced earlier that this is one of the smallest groups elected to the local chapter in recent years.

This small number of initiates is due, he said, to the September 1957 change in requirements for electon to the organization. At this time standards were raised from a "B" average for second semester juniors and seniors to a 2.6 average for second semester juniors and a 2.3 average for seniors.

Under the University quality point system, B's are worth two quality points per semester hour and A's are worth three. In order to attain a 2.6 average, a student's typical grades per semester would have to be three A's and two B's. A B average would equal 2.0 and an A average, 3.0

Ordinarily, in the fall, he said, about 30 to 40 persons are tapped. In the spring, from 80 to 100 are usually selected.

The change in requirements was also reflected in the election of only 31 students last spring.

Clemons Gets Playbill Editor Appointment

Joel M. Clemons, sophomore, has been appointed by the Publications Board as editor of the new student publication, Playbill.

Clemons was named yesterday to replace Jim Pruett, who had been appointed earlier this year.

Authorized by Student Legislature, Playbill is a magazine which will provide a program for campus activites and coming events. The new magazine will operate under the Publications Board.

Various positions on the new publication are open. Any person interesting in getting further information has been asked to contact Joel Clemons at 123 Winston or telephone 8-9125.

Diplomats Deny Possible Policy Split

LONDON (AP)—British diplomats today denied reports of a rift between Britain and Germany over their Berlin policies.

They scoffed at a suggestion that West German Chancellor Adenauer had planned to fly to Britain this week to try to heal the breach.

Informants emphasized there is no divergence between Britain and Germany over their attitude toward Soviet Premier Nikita Khrushchev's free city proposals for isolated Berlin. Both nations turned them down.

Adenauer had planned to fly here Friday for talks with Prime Minister Macmillan on European trade problems but reports from Bonn today said his doctors ordered him to bed with a feverish cold and the 82-year-old Chancellor called off his trip.

Spring Set For Bricking Lenoir Area

Bricking the area between Lenoir Hall and the Manning Hall may take place in the spring, according to J. S. Bennett in a letter to Student Body President Don Furtado.

The Bennett letter came as a result of earlier Student Legislature action. Furtado wrote Bennett requesting the project.

Bennett explained that the project had been scheduled for two years, but due to insufficient appropriations progress in grading and bricking was slow. He further stated that a retaining wall next to Emerson Stadium and a regrading job of the whole area would be necessary to make a complete job of the area.

By doing both jobs at one time the project could be done more efficiently and cheaper, he wrote. He assured Furtado that the job would be done as soon as possible, "after the many pressing things are done first."

He added in the letter, "it will probably be spring before we will be able to do this, and even then it will depend on funds available."

Furtado said Monday that a letter was sent to Bennett commenting that the student government's understanding of the problems in the bricking between Lenoir and Manning Halls.Furtado said it would be appreciated if action could be taken at the earliest possible date.

Whyburn Goes To Texas For USE

Consolidated University Vice President William M. Whyburn left Chapel Hill Monday for El Paso, Texas, where he wil attend a meeting of the Univac Scientific Exchange (USE).

USE consists of representatives of 32 educational, industrial, governmental and military organizations owning Univac models 1103A and 1105. An 1105 is scheduled for installation in the new wing being built onto Phillips Hall.

The group's purpose is the promotion and exchange of ideas concerning the operation and development of this type of machine.

This meeting, which starts Wednesday and ends Friday, wil be the first attended by a Consolidated University representative. While there, Whyburn will participate in policy-making and will learn about the machine's operation and development.

One of the principal functions of USE is the sharing of information concerning the working of similar problems by different group members. The exchange of such ideas and procedures should save researchers much time effort and expense.

The Consolidated Universty gained membership in USE through its installment plans. Among other members of the organization are Boeing Aircraft Co., Johns Hopkins University, Ramo-Wooldridge Corp. and the Armour Research Foundaton.

Comedy Plays At Duke

The Duke Players will present Christopher Fry's comedy, The Lady's Not For Burning, tonight through Saturday night at 8:15 in Branson Hall.

Tickets, priced at $1, may be reserved by calling Duke University extension 2339; seating is on a first-come-first-served basis.

Due to the small seating capacity of the theatre and the probability of weekend crowds, the management has suggested that those able to attend tonight or Thursday do so.

Modern fathers with boys in college will sympathize with cicero, the Roman statesman and leading figure in Roman literature, for his troubles with his son who wrote home for more money, who wanted to set up his own bachelor quarters, and who devoted a disporportionate share of his time to extracurricular activities.

Professor of Latin Walter Allen, delivering the Humanities Lecture at the University of North Carolina, told in a speech prepared for delivery last night about Cicero's worry over his son's future. The boy wanted to go and join Caesar's legions, and Cicero as opposed to Caesar's tyranny and his war-making. The boy also wanted funds to set up a bachelor apartment. Cicero sent his son to Athens to school to get him out of the country. Cicero tried to supervise his son's education from afar, even insisting that his son abandon one study with a teacher who was "too well informed about some extracurricular pursuits," Prof. Allen said.

The son, Marcus Cicero, also wrote to Cicero's secretary, asking for money to hire a secretary to copy his notes, which were taking too much of his time.

Cicero was able to take these and other tribulations of his life, because he was both a philosopher and a humorist.

The Roman writer was one of the great wits of the ages, Prof. Allen points out in his lecture "Private and Confidential: Cicero's Correspondence."

Dr. Allen said the criticism by some scholars over Cicero's hesitation and indecision regarding whether to support Caesar or Pompey when Caesar was waging Civil War against the Republic should not be taken as a sign of weakness, but of strength.

What happened was that Cicero was not confronted with a choice between right or wrong — otherwise he would immediately have chosen the right according to his principles.

"But he was confronted with a choice between two bad alternatives," said Allen. "Cicero saw only too clearly that both alternatives were bad." Pompey's cause in defending Rome was not an ideal one, in Cicero's view, but neither did he favor the tyrant Caesar and what he might do — and did do after Rome was taken.

Cicero was not one of those who mourned Caesar's assassination. He complained that even though the tyrant was dead, tyranny lived on — under Mark Anthony.

Cicero wrote, in fact, that if he had been invited to the banquet of the assasins, there would have been no leavings. He meant that Mark Anthony would have been killed at the same time.

Cicero was the Bernard Baruch of his day. People of both parties, and kings and princes came to him for advice.

Dr. Allen shows that Cicero's distrust of Anthony was fully returned, resulting in Cicero's assassination by Anthony's henchmen, and the date was a day of infany for Rome and significant in our own times, for it happened exactly 2,000 years ago on Dec. 7, the latter date being the annivtrsary of Pearl Harbor.

Allen states: "Cicero is that rarity in world history, a civilized gentleman."

Russia Claims 8,000 Mile Guided Missile

By JERRY T. BAULCH

WASHINGTON — (AP) — Soviet Premier Nikita Khrushchev was reported yesterday to have told Sen. Hubert Humphrey (D-Minn) that Russia has an intercontinental ballistic missile capable of firing a warhead 8,694 miles.

Achievement of such a range would surpass the best U. S. ICBM effort so far — the Atlas which the Air Force hurled 6,325 miles on Nov.

Foul Play Suspected In Backstage Death

Sheriff Jim Fasul yesterday revealed the posibility of foul play in the backstage death of pretty ingenue, Diana Johnson, during the final suspense-filled moments of the Playmakers production of "Look Homeward Angel" Sunday night.

"After conducting an exhaustive investgiation," Fasul said, "we have decided there is more than meets the eye in this death."

When asked his reasons for suspecting foul play in the greasepaint slaying that shocked the campus, Sheriff Fasul said he was "playing a hunch" backed up by some material evidence the nature of which he refused to disclose.

Miss Johnson, who was named 1958 Yackety Yack beauty queen and also Miss Chapel Hill of 1958, was killed during the final act of the Playmakers' production when she was struck by a flying flower pot thrown pursuant to the script by Mrs. Marion Fitz-Simons, who played the role of Eliza Gant.

The popular, raven haired beauty was pronounced dead on arrival at Memorial Hospital. She was rushed to the hospital by ambulance soon after her motionless body was discovered in the wings even as an enthusiastic audience was applauding the cast on the stage.

Neither members of the cast nor the audience were aware of the grim, off-stage drama until after the final curtain.

Sheriff Fasul refused to label Mrs. Fitz-Simons as a suspect, but told a group of reporters surrounding his desk they "could draw draw their own conclusions."

"I'm not going to make any definite statement in this case until I review and evaluate the evidence we have gathered thus far," Sheriff Fasul said.

"One thing for sure," he remarked dryly, "whatever else was in that script I know of one thing that wasn't supposed to be there."

"What was that?" someone asked.

"Murder," said the sheriff.

Positive Government Action, Minority Rights Expression Urged By Noted C-R Experts

The expression of minority rights and positive action by the national government were two issues promoted by civil rights experts, William McGovern and Edward P. Morgan, during a Human Rights forum this week here.

ABC news commentator Morgan also praised the University for being a valuable social laboratory to orient a minority group, the Negro. He said the Nergo problem today is heightened primarily through lack of communication between whites and Negroes.

Carolina, Morgan said, is advancing particularly in promoting an atmosphere where such communication is easily available.

By positive action, the two men had reference to such policy-making as: waiting until Little Rock does something about the 1954 Supreme Court decision instead of immediately planning some workable compliance with the high court decision.

Also, the men criticized lack of positive policy regarding the status of Berlin after World War II until the current crisis.

The two men were sponsored here by the YM-YWCA Public Affairs Committee, headed by Carol Josey and John Casparis. Morgan and McGovern came Sunday for a series of discussions on "Human

'Carmen' Conductor Former Accompanist To Lead Singer

Metropolitan opera star Claramae Turner, who will sing the title role in Carmen next January here, will take her cues from a conductor who has been her accompanist.

Wilton Mason, associate professor of music at UNC, recently played several concerts with Miss Turner when she made a tour of the South. Mason's recitals with the California-born contralto gave him the idea of engaging Miss Turner to sing in the Music Department's next opera.

Details with her agent, Sol Hurok, were worked out so that she might spend several days on the UNC campus rehearsing with the cast, chorus and symphony orchestra for this first performance of Bizet's opera in Chapel Hill.

Mason, who seems to specialize in music premieres, directed the first televised performance, in America, of Mozart's "Marriage of Figaro." This performance was staged by the Music Department and the Playmakers.

Mason was the composer and first conductor for Kermit Hunter's outdoor drama, "Horn in the West," when it started nearly a decade ago. In 1950 he conducted, for the Playmakers, the premiere of "Spring for Sure," one of his own musicals which is still being performed in the South.

Joining Mason and Miss Turner in this concert version of "Carmen," set for January 13 in Memorial Hall, are Joel Carter, member of the music department faculty, as Escamillo; Gene Strassler, a graduate assistant in music from Apollo, Pa., as Don Jose; and Martha Fouse, soprano of Chapel Hill, as Micaela.

Supporting roles will be handled by Brian Klitz, UNC graduate assistant in music, singing the parts of Zuniga, Morales and El Dancairo; James Pruett as El Remendado; Marilyn Zschau, UNC senior, as Mercedes; and Rebecca Carnes, a graduate student, as Frasquita.

Brooks Gets Student Party Chairmanship

By DEE DANIELS

John Brooks was elected Student Party chairman for the spring semester last night with only one dissenting vote.

In the remainder of the party officer elections, three offices were filled by acclamation and one was decided by a run-off vote.

Dewey Sheffield was Brooks' only opponent.

For vice-chairman, Sheffield bested Bob Matthews, Davis Young and Roger Foushee. The final vote was decided in a run-off between Foushee and Sheffield.

The present secretary, Christy Farnham, was re-elected by acclamation.

Pappy Churchill was selected, also by acclamation, to serve as file clerk.

Retaining his position as sergeant at arms is Bill Lamn, the third to be chosen by acclamation.

Bob Matthews, Roger Foushee, Martha Morgan and Norman E. Smith were elected to the SP Advisory Board over Davis Young, Jim Crownover and Frank Elkins from a seven man field.

Erwin Fuller, treasurer, will retain his office until March as set up in the party constitution.

At the conclusion of the meeting, Leon Holt, present party chairman, urged members to stick up for what they believe, even if this is unpopular with the mass opinion.

He pointed out that without independent, sometimes unpopular opinions the campus would not progress.

"I hope that in the spring you will carry SP to greater heights on stones which others have laid," Holt entreated.

There will be no party meeting next week. The body voted to hold the next meeting Monday, Jan. 12.

Cheerleader To Be Elected Revision Of Law Indicated

Sandy Trotman and Davis Young won elections last night as a constitutional amendment which would have made head cheerleader an appointive office was defeated.

Trotman whipped Bunky Jester, an independent candidate running without selection board approval, 196-162. The two had tied for the third vacant seat in the Women's Honor Council in the regular fall elections held three weeks ago.

Young edged out Charlie Graham by six votes 190-184 for the sophomore class presidency.

The match was a revote of the regular election in which Graham beat Young by two votes. Young contested the elections on the grounds that there were no ballots given to Infirmary patients, and that one ballot box had been collected before the polls closed.

Two weeks ago, the Student Council upheld Young's appeal, and the revote was scheduled.

The defeat of the constitutional amendment 559-481 will necessitate a revision of the new elections law, which has no provision for election of head cheerleader.

About 15 per cent of the student body turned out at the polls.

IDC To Set Social Room Opening Date

The date social rooms in men's dormitories will be open to coeds will be announced tonight by Jim Scott at a meeting of the Interdormitory Council at 7 p.m. in Phi Hall, New East.

Before opening its social room, each dorm must secure the approval of the Visiting Board. The date the board will visit the dorms will also be announced tonight.

A report will be given on the progress of the Dorm District Court system. The date the courts will go into operation in the dorms will be announced.

A report on the progress of obtaining money to pay the dorm intramural managers will also be given.

The council will discuss quiet hours in the dorm, how well they are inforced, where the problems lie and how the problems can best be solved.

The council will also hear reports on plans for a blanket party-tennis court dance this spring and the Mardi Gras sponsored by GM and the IDC also scheduled for the spring.

Juror Interviews End

Today is the last day for interviews.

The interviews are being conducted by the Honor System Commission from 3 to 5 p.m. in the Honor Council Room in Graham Memorial.

Appointments may be made in the Student Government office. Application forms for prospective jurors will also be available in the Student Government office.

INFIRMARY

Students in the Infirmary yesterday included:

Phi Defeats Militia Bill

The Phi Society defeated a bill to establish a national militia in place of our armed forces by a unanimous vote last night.

Rep. Don Jacobs, who introduced the bill, argued that the prohibitive cost of maintaining a large standing army could be reduced by instituting a naional militia.

The program would have all men and women take basic training and two weeks of summer camp every year thereafter.

Arguments against the bill centered on its impracticability in an age of "push-button" warfare. Rep. Bill Jackson said that we are not threatened by ground attack and thus do not need a large, half-trained army. Rep. Bob Morely pointed out that, since most of our commitments are overseas, it it would be ridiculous to transport troops abroad for two weeks. The vote on the bill was 5 to 0 against.

UP Meeting

The University Party heard discussion on several bills pending in the Student Legislature in a short meeting last night at 7:15 p.m.

Bills discussed included those dealing with th single spring elecion for the legislature, the $100 appropriation for the State Affairs Committee, and a bill concerning the installation of washing machines on campus.

Treasurer David Green presented a brief financial report.

It was announced that the election of new party officers will be held next Tuesday night.

Choral Club Presents Bach Christmas Oratorio

The first three parts of Bach's Christmas Oratorio will be performed by the Chapel Hill Choral Club Dec. 16.

The 8 p.m. concert in Hill Hall is the sixth of the Tuesday Evening Series presented by the club directed by Dr. Joel Carter.

The oratorio written in 1733-34 is divided into six cantatas. Each cantata was meant to be performed on a different day beginning on Christmas Day and ending on Epiphany.

Seven members will perform as soloists. Robert Melton, a staff physician at Duke University Hospital, will sing the tenor role of the Evangelist. All alto solos will be sung by Betty Jean Smith of Chapel Hill.

Dr. U. T. Holmes, Kenan professor of romance languages, will perform the bass recitatives. Barbara Peacock of Chapel Hill, will sing the soprano recitatives.

Other soloists include Marvin Tatum, UNC graduate student, bass ;Beth Diaz, of Durham, soprano; and David L. Vaughn, UNC graduate student.

Lee Bostian, graduate assistant in music and the regular accompanist for the Choral Club will play for the soloists. Miss Kay Knight will join Bostian in a two-piano arangement for the orchestral accompaniments for the choruses. Dr. Glenn Watkins, UNC assistant professor of organ, will play for all of the recitatives.

The Chapel Hill Choral Club is composed of about 85 townspeople, faculty and students. It has been in existence for over 30 years. Its major appearances each year are during the Christmas season and commencement.

Little Rock

A piece of good news emanated from Little Rock this week, when good news has been extremely rare from that island outpost.

The good news is the election of three Faubus opponents to the school board. It is good because it is indicative that Faubus is fighting a losing battle—a battle in which time is on the side of right and in opposition to the governor.

The longer children are deprived of school, the more chance parents will have to reconsider their opposition to segregation in light of the resultant denial of education. This reconsideration may lead to the idea that perhaps education is important, and perhaps sitting next to a Negro in class is not such a traumatic experience. If this comes about in the area where massive resistance was first tried, there may be a change of attitude in the south.

One thing is sure. The south is not getting stronger through the ignorance of its children. And education for its children is the only way to build some strength. Industry will be quite reluctant to go into an area where the children of executives and workers cannot be sure from one day to the next whether they will have an education or not.

It is time for the south to stop emoting, and start thinking sensibly. If it does not, it will be lost in the quicksand of time.

Rules

There is a quite important move under foot in the new Congress—a move to limit the power of the House Rules Committee.

All pieces of House legislation are channeled through the Rules Committee, and the committee has often been used as a stumbling block to legislation that in the opinion of the chairman should not be passed. The committee will just give the legislation a low priority, and somehow it never seems to get on the floor.

There must be created some way to avoid pigeon holing of major legislation by the Rules Committee. This may be in the offing.

University Club

The University Club has not served its function to the best of its ability. It has concentrated on major sports to the detriment of the minor sports.

With or without the University Club's efforts there would be a large attendance at basketball and football games, but without anybody's assistance, there is virtually no attendance at swimming meets, track meets, tennis matches, wrestling matches, or soccer games.

It is the relatively minor sports that really need the emphasis. They need the support of the student body in order really to create any interest in athletics at Carolina.

The problem of "shcool spirit," whatever that is, might well be solved by channeling students to the minor sports. These athletes, who are not subsidized, need recognition a great deal more than those who are. Maybe the University Club can fulfill its function by bringing this type of recognition to the athletes in minor sports.

Counterpoint

William Cheney

Mr. Peter Ford is one of four things. He may be very profound in which case he is a counterrevolutionary and should be shot.

He may be a very sarcastic person in which case he has probably laughed himself to death by now, or he may be a Martian. It is conceivable that he is purely and simply insane.

Whatever he is, or possibly . . . was (see first paragraph), his portion of last Sunday's Petite Musical was, to say the least, startling. The presentation was a sort of sonic shock treatment or, to use an idiom more similar to Mr. Ford's: a continuous experience in discontinuous spasm. I think.

I believe (although I am not at all sure) that Mr. Ford's music is vehicle for social prediction of the most dire kind. It would seem that there is a vast contingent of you-i (you-ing in its i) and i-you (i-ing in its you) gathered somewhere in the cosmos waiting for the right moment to INVADE. Although this was not implicitly stated, several incidents in space and time appear to bear it out. I refer specifically to the strategic manner in which the light bulb failed, yes failed, to explode in the water pail and to certain unmentionable things that the female singer-screamer-laugher sang-screamed-laughed. I must remind you that this is all conjecture on my part and that I am not sure at all much of any un-thing.

Whatever the case may be as regards the above mentioned unthings, Mr. Ford has been kind enough to leave us certain information in print which may or may not help to clear things up (latter-formers are very elusive). The printed un-things paint a dark picture although it is somewhat different from the spasm-thoughts we derived. It is stated, for instance, that although "plusful folk have lovely alls . . . he's o so busy bodying, she has no time to soul." When things have come to such a pass, what's the use? All is lost — it doesn't even matter if the you-i come or not. Excuse me, dear no-readers, while psalm-singing and eyes to plus I jump from the balcony.

No, wait; instead I shall write "Concerto for French Window and Baboon" proving it all to be lies and the essence of untruth and endlessly on etsscettra.

On Service

Sidney Dakar

Very good service in most restaurants is almost non-existent today. It is so rare that I will venture to say that not more than 1 in 25 of you who are reading this has EVER enjoyed the services of a very good waiter or waitress. In my rather vast experience of eating in all types of restaurants all over the U. S., I have found that most waitresses pay little heed to instructions, at least not to the ones I give them.

I believe it is a practiced art of most waitresses to stare right at us for five minutes without once ackowledging our frantic signal for more service. Most of them ignore us, misunderstand us and forget us. Most of them don't have the slightest interst in what they are doing and do more harm to a man's business than they do good.

Here are a few examples that I have ran across. On a trip this summer I had to eat in an officer's club seven days a week for four weeks. (I was in the Arctic and there was no other choice.) Not over 25 or 30 men ate breakfast. Every morning, without fail, the cook asked me how I wanted my eggs. Every morning, without fail, I told him soft scrambled. Every morning. Without fail, he did not take those eggs off the grill until I saw they were getting too hard and asked him to give them to me.

This morning I ordered eggs—soft scrambled. The waitress listened to my order with a patience that was commendable. However, a gate post is also patient, which is what I may as well have been talking to when I asked for the eggs soft scrambled. Those eggs came back more baked than scrambled. I get the sensation that I am eating pancakes rather than eggs when they are so thoroughly dehydrated on a grill.

I have ordered coffee and do-nuts and have had the waitress bring me only the do-nuts and then go on about her day dreaming until I hailed her and asked for the coffee again. She even looked at me as if I were stupid for not ordering the coffee with the do-nuts so that she could have brought everything at once. I won't mention such minor things as not receiving silverware with the meal.

If there is one expression that best describes most waitresses, it is one of extreme boredom, or, a day dreaming, outer space stare. None of these people seem to realise that the art of serving can be very interesting and lucrative. Very good waiters are in great demand and are well paid because there are so few of them. It is a real joy for me to see a really good waiter operate. He anticipates my every want before I can ask for it. But, he does not hang over my shoulder when he is not needed; he knows the art of fading into the wallpaper design when he is not wanted. I am very willing to pay for this type of service.

The service is so poor in most of the restaurants (I can't eat in the Ranch House every night!) that I had rather just go through the slop shute at Lenior. I feel that the quick, though sometimes more painful, trip to Lenior is my only choice if I am to keep my equanimity. Just as sure as I go to most of the restaurants I will become irrated and angry with the world.

It is very frustrating to realize that the next time I order my eggs —soft scrambled—the waitress will probably bring them back in the shape of a pancake and just as dry. I will then become an accomplice to the deed by meekly pushing them down with the aid of several cups of coffee while repressing the primative urge to jump up and slap her face with that egg turned flap jack. The meek die a thousand deaths —all of them unsung.

The World's Sense

Norman Cousins

Nonsense is on stage and the stage is the world. A giant panda, one of the largest and most valuable of its kind, has been barred from the United States because it comes from Communist China. Zoos in this country have offered up to $25,000 for the clown of the raccoon family, but various restrictions having to do with Communist China prevent the panda from entering the United States. Mean while, the animal is appearing in zoos throughout Europe without any noticeable threat to the internal security of the nations involved.

In the Soviet Union, one of the world's great writers committed an apparently subversive act by being awarded the world's most important literary prize. The Soviet Union of Writers was willing to put up with Boris Pasternak despite the independent nature of his work, but the moment he received the Nobel Prize he was expelled from the union and denounced as a traitor. The implication is clear that writers in the Soviet can write about anything they wish so long as they do so with genuine mediocrity.

Meanwhile, the glossary of nonsense in the twentieth century is being constantly enriched. Now, in addition to words like "clean" to describe a supposedly radioactive-free nuclear explosive, or "sunshine units" to describe the amount of radiation exposure for human beings, we have the term "tiny" to describe a newly developed H-Bomb. A commander of the Air Force in the U. S. broke the good news that a "tiny" hydrogen bomb had been perfected that can be carried by a fighter plane. The bomb will of course contain the equivalent of several billion pounds of dynamite, enough to pulverize a city, but it now comes in the convenient and cozy fighter-plane size. People who are used to thinking of the word "tiny" to describe littie children will have to make a minor adjustment.

It is curious to see the way nonsense is attracted to power, as though this were its natural habitat. In the Far East, the Chinese Communists pursued a combined policy of murder and mercy for one month towards the occupants of Quemoy and Matsu. Bombing and brotherhood were tied together as a unified program. On Monday the people on the islands would be shelled. But on Tuesday the shelling would cease and the people would be encouraged to entrench themselves and receive supplies. Indeed, if the food ran short, they had only to ask the mainland and it would be supplied. If this policy of now-we-will-kill-you, now-we-won't made sense to the islanders, they made no mention of it.

Almost by way of establishing a grim consistency, the head of the Chinese Communist Party announced that his country could not be intimidated by the threat of nuclear war. He was willing to admit that 300 million Chinese might be killed in such a war. Even so, he said, there would be 300 million left. Something else would be left. The people would have their memories. They would have memories of the missing from among their families and friends. They would also have memories of a world that had turned against itself.

But Communist China isn't the only nation that feels obliged to pronounce such nonsense to the world. In the United States, officers of the State Department have openly declared that our main security is to be found in our willingness to risk all-out nuclear war. Fortunately, there are still a few people left in government who believe that for our safety we must look to world control of nuclear weapons rather than to nuclear stockpiles. What these people say makes sense, but the surrounding sounds of nonsense are rapidly becoming louder.

Commissioner Willard F. Libby of the United States Atomic Energy Commission, for example, spoke dangerous nonsense the other day to Mayor Norris Poulson of Los Angeles. Mayor Poulson was deeply alarmed about the shock radioactive fallout that took place over his city as the result of the recent beat-the-deadline Nevada nuclear tests. He telephoned Commissioner Libby who told him, in effect, to forget it. But Mayor Poulson couldn't forget it. The fallout had soared far beyond the danger limits set by the Atomic Energy Commission itself. There as a real threat to the health of his people. Mayor Poulson regarded what Dr. Libby said as casual and callous handling of an important problem. In any event, Dr. Libby has made it clear that his job is to make and test the bombs, and not theorize about ways in which people can counteract the effects of the resultant radiation in their water, milk, and bones.

All these incidents are not something out of the fiendish tales of a bygone era of ghouls but a characteristic feature of an age, our age, in which absolute force and absolute nonsense attract one another and are being made dominant in human affairs. The unholy alliance seems to assert itself wherever vast force appears, almost as though the very nature of the force divides the human community into the sane and the insane and confers upon the latter the privileges of rule. Indeed, there is a blighting quality to the power, for once-reasonable men who come in contact with it seemingly become transfixed by it and take easily and freely to the language of nonsense that belongs to the power.

By way of lending grim point to the consequences of invented nonsense, we read a report from the U. S. Department of Agriculture which says that the nematode, a species of plant-worm or parasite, carries within itself a mysterious ability to resist harm from radiation. Man, puny creature, gets into trouble when he is exposed to doses of 300 roentgens or more. But the nematode can take up to 600,000 units of radiation. Man need not therefore fear that his nonsense will empty life from this earth. If man doesn't want the world the nematode is perfectly willing to take it. —The Saturday Review

Gottingen Letter

Goettingen lies north east of Kassel approximately 10 miles from the East Sector of Germany. Goettingen, one thousand years old, is the home of the Georg-August-University founded in 1737 by Adolph from Munchhausen and named after the German King of England.

Gottingen with its University of 7,000 students, its Deutsches Theater, and Symphony Orchestra, is one of the cultural centers of Europe. The Town, now grown into a city of eighty thousand inhabitants, reflects the past with its six fourteenth century churches, its sixteenth century timbered houses, and its sx-hunderd year old Rathaus (city hall). The modern Zeiss Winkel Optical Works and the Sartorius Works for electric micro scales are both located in the city.

Often late in the night it is no surprise to see a police car force an antiquated Buick onto the sidewalk or to meet a lurching "Pangerwagon" packed with grim faced SS troops. The both are scenes from two movies currently being filmed by the Gottingen Film Studios.

The Winter Semester at Gottingen begins in a leasurely fashon in the first week of November. Students, after being accepted, buy themselves a catalogue, thumb through it, and pick out the professors whose lectures they wish to hear. They them crowd around bulletin boards located in the Aula (our South Building) to see when and where the lectures are held. During the next couple of weeks come the period of selection in which students discard and add to their lecture list. Certain courses are required that students may pass their finals which come generally at the end of the eighth semester.

Sometime during the first two weeks of school, the students, are matriculated and receive their "Studiumbuch" in which they write down their courses. The "Studiumbuch" is taken to the cashier where the students pay roughly thrity-five dollars admissions fees and sixty-three cents per semester hour. In the course of the semester, the students have each of their professors sign this book showing that they attended at least one of his lectures.

On the fifteenth of November, Academic Holiday is declared; and the new students are welcomed in a special program by His Magnificence Professor D. O. Weber, the Rector of the university. After the program students receive their I. D. cards from the chairmen of their respective facultes. Those in the philosophy faculty received their cards from Prof. Alfred Heuss, the brother of the President of West Germany.

Letters

Editor:

I would like to point out the inaccuracy of Mr. Nisbet's analogy in the Sunday Daily Tar Heel. It is hardly a matter of Dr. Erkenbrecker's throwing an eraser at one of two dogs. This would put the whole siutation on a new level. The inhumanity and discrimination lies in the fact that one barking dog is throwing erasers at another barking dog!

I also object to the reduction of a crisis in American, and world, history to such a ridiculous and ridiculing level. If the good fair-skinned citizens of our neighboring states cannot be made aware of North Carolina's more reasonable (I thought) attitudes, then liberalism certainly is dying.

Marion Roesel

Editor:

Thursday night was a long way from being the darkest day in the history of the student government. It was one of the brightest. Your bill was defeated and you didn't like it, too bad. It seems to me there are things right here in North Carolina and on this campus that deserve the immediate attention of the student government. But they seem to be too busy trying to approve of integration to act on things that would benefit us as students.

Editor:

I don't quite understand Chuck Nisbet's attitude about a black day in the history of the university.

As far as I can see, two dogs were disturbing a lecture on Egyptian hieroglyphes and the professor disciplined one of the dogs by throwing an eraser at him. Perhaps this dog was making more noise than the other dog, or perhaps this dog was punished as an example for the other dog to keep still also. Maybe, and this is probably the case, the professor threw the eraser wildly in a weak moment not caring which dog he hit as long as silence prevailed.

Whatever the motive for the punishment of one dog or the other, or even both, what does this have to do with liberalism . . . or a black day in the history of the world?

Don't you think Chuck is a little confused? Moreover, shouldn't he concentrate on more important things than stray dogs on campus: Good pioneering liberalists do!

Jocelyn G. S. Mann

Editor:

In a recent article our highly esteemed editor took it upon himself to bear the cross of another of his endless crusades for better public education.

The editorial in question blasted the Student Legislature for refusing to send telegrams to Governors Faubus and Almond disapproving of their closing the schools. The vote was 27 18 against sending the telegram. He described it as "a dark night in the annals of student government and will probably remain on the books as being one of the darkest student government has ever had."

How touching! With such poetical genius perhaps Mr. Gans had better turn his literary pursuits to the field of verse, and leave the editorial page to the less romantic.

In his editorial the "Scourge of the Demigods" praised those in favor of the bill, while picturing who voted against it as bigots, ogres, and hatemongers.

Editor Gans, in an evident attempt to gain support for the bill from further participation in student government. Presumably, he believes in government "of Gans, by Gans, and for Gans." God's gift to The Daily Tar Heel majestically stands forward as a leader of the misled.

Accordig to Gans, the biased Student Legislature will be the ones to blame if the schools of North Carolina are shut down.

In the case of such an event, Mr. Gans, we shall oppose, vehemently oppose, all such efforts to deprive the children of North Carolina from obtaining the proper education. But since when has it been the policy of this state, one which has been a leader in the fight for individual states' rights, to interfere in the iternal workings of neighboring states?

In the future please concentrate on refining your publicity-hungry pack to the problems concerning the University and leave those of the State and nation where they belong—to the experts.

In conclusion, supposing your worthless bill had been passed ,the only hesitancy it would have created for Governors Faubus and Almond would have been the decision to tear it up in either two or four pieces before throwing it in the wastepaper basket.

The army is marching, Mikhail my friend,
The army is marching once more:
The peace talks have failed—they dragged without end,
And you must be going to war!

Then laugh at our freedom, Mikhail my friend,
And spit on the westerner's hand;
Your bombs have done damage which nothing can mend,
So ravage your enemies' land.

And when the war rages, Mikhail my friend,
When troops fight it out on their soil,
Perhaps you'll remember these words I have penned,
With death the reward for your toil.

Life's but a brief lesson—and school's out before we know it.

Rights in a World of Tension."

In speaking of minority rights McGovern, advocated the right of the individual to object as long as his own action is not infringing upon the same rights enjoyed by others. The 1954 supreme court decision against separate but equal schools is in essence a question of minority rights.

The decision was made to protect a minority group, the Negro, not because the majority of the people in the United States wanted integration, McGovern said. He regarded the Supreme Court decision as inevitable because of the psychological aspect of a child's denial.

Speaking of the right to object, McGovern also stressed the obligation of the objecter to seek action through proper legal means, rather than to resort to violent measures. He cited such actions as the bombing of the synagogues, and the rabble-rousing of John Kasper as examples of violent measures that do more harm to the cause than good. These people must take the responsibility of their actions.

In speaking of the lack of positive governmental action in the realm of foreign policy, Morgan said the cold war was in essence "an incessant basketball game between East and West." Each side merely reacts to actions by the other side. Positive as well as combative thinking is necessary to build up American ideals, he said.

Both speakers related the lack of governmental action to the indifferent attitude of most Americans toward world problems. McGovern cited as an example of this the emphasis on mass opinion which results in suppression of the individual to a degree almost as bad as in communist society. He also said that students should be exposed to communism so that they can see the appeal communism makes and then make up their own minds.

EDUCATION STAFF ATTENDS KELLOGG CONFERENCE

Guy Phillips, and Neal Tracy, of the School of Education, and Richard Ray and Robert Nelson, graduate Kellogg scholarship students, are attending a Regional Conference of the Kellogg Project at Gatlinburg, Tenn., until Thursday. Representatives of eight southern states are particpating.

During the past six years the UNC School of Education has participated in the Kellogg Project to study. Seven N. C. school systems cooperatively.

Training Program Features Dr. Paul Wager As Speaker

Dr. Paul W. Wager, of the Department of Political Science, will be the featured speaker at an In-Service Training Program, Thursday, Dec. 11, at 4 p.m. in 105 Hanes Hall, according to Dr. Katherine Kennedy Carmichael, dean of women.

Dr. Wager has been a member of the University faculty since 1926. He received his Ph.D. degree here in 1927. In addition to his academic career, he has served as a member of the N. C. Tax Commission; as taxation economist for the U. S. Forest Service; as Regional Chief of the Land Use Planning Sections of the Resettlement Administration and the Bureau of Agricultural Economy and as Consultant to the National Resources Planning Board.

He is the author of "One Foot on the Soil," "County Govt. in North Carolina," "North Carolina State—The State and Its Government," and is editor of "County Government Across the Nation."

The In-Service Training Programs are developed by dormitory hostesses working under the dean of women. Mrs. J. C. Clamp and Mrs. Robert Jackson will be in charge of Thursday's program.

KHRUSHCHEV

28. It also would put almost all the United States within reach of Soviet weapons.

Senate sources told of Khrushchev's "secret" message to Humphrey. The Minnesota Senator himself declined to give details of his 80-minute briefing of Presdent Eisenhower on his long face-to-face talk with Khruschchev.

Humphrey told reporters he passed on to Eisenhower a confidential message from the Soviet Premier dealing with Russian nuclear explosions of a very substantial size. He also told Eisenhower about secret Soviet developments in the missile field, the Senator said.

He said the administration would have to decide whether to make public the information he relayed from the Soviet Premier to Eisenhower. The White House said it would not do so if it contained too much Soviet propaganda.

White House Press Secretary James C. Hagerty stuck by that stand after Senate sources reported what Humphrey told Eisenhower about missiles. Hagerty said the government would have to evaluate the information before deciding.

The Pentagon had no comment on the report either.

Humphrey, en route to Minneapolis, was not available to confirm or deny the accuracy of the report.

However, the version from Senate sources was similar to that given a reporter by an official in a government deartment. And it gibed with a report in the Dec. 15 issue of Newsweek Magazine publised today.

The Khrushchev "secret" dealing with nuclear explosions, according to these sources, was that Russia has developed a compact five-megaton nuclear bomb. A megaton is the equivalent of one million tons of tnt. Bombs of that force are usually of the hydrogen type.

One the surface that report did not appear too significant compared to U. S. achievements.

The United States has been dropping test hydrogen bombs with a 10-megaton yield for several years and on March 1, 1954, exloded a device in the Pacific with about a 17-megaton yield.

Since then the effort has centered on smaller hydrogen bombs, so they could be easily transorted and handled. Although officials have never disclosed the progress, they have hinted that some detonations have been below the one-megaton class.

The United States has put a low-yield hydrogen bomb into a package small enough that several can be carried in a B-52 heavy bomber or a single bomb in a B-47 medium bomber.

Newsweek's version of Humphrey's eight-hour Kremlin talk said Khrushchev told him:

"You are lucky we are fighting you economically and not by military means. We now have more A and H-bombs than we will ever need. We are ready to stop production of new weapons and to dismantle some of those we have.

"We have a missile with a range of 14,000 kilometers (8,694 miles).

"We have a bomb capable of a five-magaton blast which is simple to construct and requires a minimum of fissionable material."

Responsible U. S. officials said such claims from Khrushchev must be assessed from the viewpoint of how accurate any Soviet missile may be. Soviet missiles in the past are reported to have had inadequate guidance systems.

Military officials point out that the range of ballistic missiles has been one of the lesser problems. What is important in reliability, they emphasive, is the accuracy.

"NERO DIDN'T FIDDLE WHILE ROME BURNED—HE ATE PIZZA"

At long last the truth concerning Nero's activity on the night of Rome's burning has been established. The unearthed documents reveal that actually the story of Nero's fiddling was inserted into subsequent historical documents by a coalition of subserviant fiddle makers who, at that time, were competing with the Pizza makers union.

TRACKIN' THE TARHEELS

by RUSTY HAMMOND
DTH SPORTS EDITOR

It now appears after only two games that Carolina's Tar Heels could give any team in the country a real battle in the second half. For the second straight contest, the Tar Heels shook off a bad first half and poured on the power in the second half to win easily.

Against Clemson, Carolina didn't look exactly bad in the initial half. It was just that the Tigers looked very good in hitting 59% of their shots. Carolina ran away with it, however, in the second stanza, both offensively and defensively.

Against Virginia the Heels did look bad in the first half, especially in the closing minutes. They blew an early lead to the Cavaliers, who came on quickly in the closing moments to pull within a point at 29-28.

Virginia even led briefly at the beginning of the second half. But it was very briefly, for the Tar Heels hit a real hot streak and pulled ahead to 39-31, and after that were never threatened.

Most of those points in the spurt came on a Doug Moe to Lee Shaffer combination. Moe passed to Shaffer twice for lay-ups which Lee made good. He also collected a foul shot on each play.

As far as shooting went, Moe had a bad night. Everywhere else, though, he was exceptional, especially on assists and rebounds. Doug grabbed off 11 rebounds for second high man.

Dick Kepley was held down to 10 points against the Cavaliers, a far cry from his 24 in the opener. But Kepley was a demon on defense, hauling in 16 rebounds and stopping big Herb Busch, but good. Busch didn't score a point or get a rebound.

This year's Tar Heel team features a slight "New Look" from those teams of the past. For instance, on the national championship team, the order of every game was "get the ball to Rosenbluth." Last year Pete Brennan was the big man.

It appears at this early date that the '58-'59 version of the Tar Heels won't have any "big" man, it will have five. There probably won't be any one big scorer, but all five of the starters nad most of the subs are capable of a 20-point night.

This may serve to make the Tar Heels even more dangerous than they have been in the past. After the Virginia game, Coach Frank McGuire remarked, "We have five men out there playing together."

Before the season started, there was talk around campus that the basketball team had "five good individual stars but they will never be able to work together." It seems now that the exact opposite is true. They have five good individual stars, but they work together, and how.

The conference race is moving merrily along with Satte College now in the driver's seat. The Pack is unbeaten in three games, two of them against league foes Wake Forest and Maryland. Carolina, of course, has an identical in conference record, but has so far not met the stiff competition that State has.

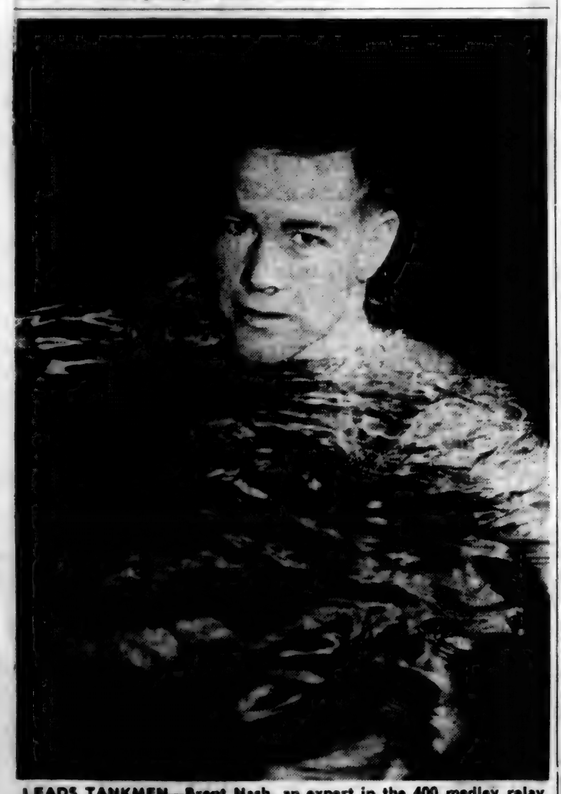
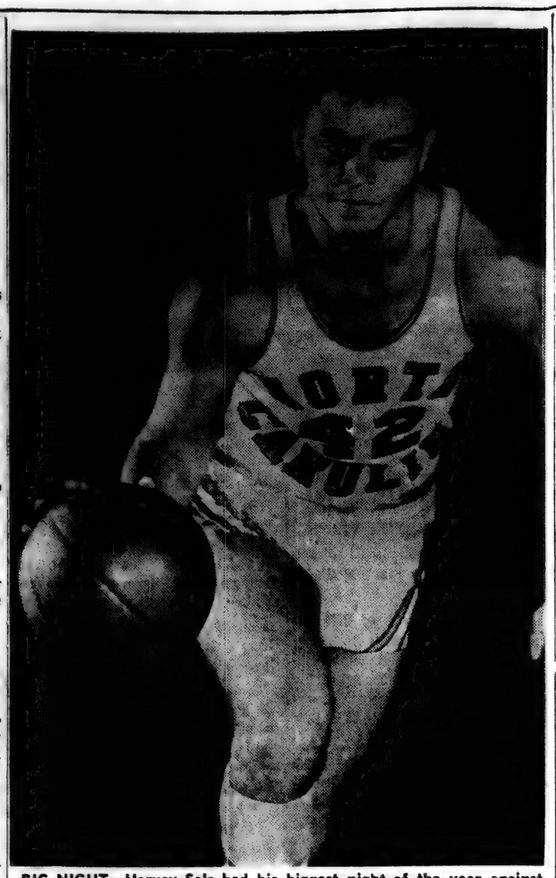
Game Delights: In the pressbox for the Virginia game was Lou Carcacerra, an assistant coach at St. John's. He was scouting the Cavaliers who meet St. John's later in the season. Carcacerra is quite an old hand with Tar Heel players, having coached Tommy Kearns, Hugh Donahue and York Larese at St. Ann's High School in New York City. He played for Frank McGuire when McGuire was at St. John's.

Also in the pressbox was Ken Rosemond, former Tar Heel backcourt man and last year's freshman cage coach. Rosemond is now assistant coach at South Carolina, and he was scouting the Tar Heels who meet South Carolina in their next game.

A disappointing note: Even with the small capacity in Woollen Gym, the last two home games have not been sellouts. Both nights there have been plenty of seats available.



LEADS TANKMEN—Brent Nash, an expert in the 400 medley relay and 100 freestyle, leads his Tar Heel mates into their second meet of the season today against East Carolina at Greenville.



BIG NIGHT—Harvey Salz had his biggest night of the year against Virginia, gunning for 19 points. Salz was high scorer for both teams. He is also the Tar Heel playmaker.

Swimmers Meet ECC Today

Carolina's defending ACC champion swimming team, fresh from a 64-18 rout of Clemson in their season opener, travel to Greenville today to meet East Carolina College in their home pool.

The meet should be something of a breather for the Tar Heels, a meet that Coach Pat Earey has described as "not a real test." Once again Earey's hot-shot sophomores will be getting more of valuable experience, the only ingredient they lack for another shot at the ACC crown.

The sophs did exceptionally well against Clemson, especially freestyler Harry Bloom. Bloom, who cracked many of Carolina's freshman records last year, was the only double winner in the meet. He captured the 220 freestyle and the 440 freestyle.

Another soph, Randy Dodson, finished first in the 200-yard butterfly and helped his mates to a win in the 400-freestyle relay. Dodson will be heavily counted on today, in addition to soph Tom Gurrant, another freestyler.

Old hands like Kit Mercer in the medley relay, Dick Cashwell and Pete Reynolds on the diving boards, Brent Nash in the 100-freestyle will also be looking for second victories.

Still another soph, Bob Hunter, will be out for win number two in the backstroke event.

Last year the Dolphins roared through 11 straight meets without a loss, and appear to be well on the way to another undefeated season under at Earey.

Five All-Americans graduated off last year's team, but even these losses seem to have able and willing replacements which appear in the form of sophomores up from one of the finest frosh teams in the history of the conference.

Football To Open Vs. Clemson

By Associated Press

Carolina swapped pesty North Carolina State for Clemson as its opening day football foe on the 1959 schedule announced Tuesday by Athletic Director Chuck Erickson.

The 10-game slate includes all the Tar Heels' 1958 opponents except Southern California who will be replaced next year by Miami, Fla.

Carolina plays five home games and five on the road. The latter include traditional season-ended against Duke, Nov. 21 at Durham.

Coach Jim Tatum's Carolina crew, which won six and lost four in 1958, will open with Clemson, the year's Atlantic Coast Conference Champion, in a home game Sept. 19.

The Tar Heels will play all seven other conference foes, and, in addition to Miami, will meet Norte Dame and Tennessee in intersectional matches.

They'll play North Carolina State at home Oct. 3. The Wolfpack, opening day team for the past three years, spoiled the Tar Heels' debuts in 1956, 1957 and 1958.

U. S. Will Remain Firm In Berlin

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Eisenhower put Russia on notice yesterday that the West will stand firm in Berlin and, if any trouble starts, it will be Moscow's fault.

Eisenhower opened his news conference with what he called a "sort of summary of the circumstances and events that have brought about a division of Berlin."

The President went back to 1944, when the World War II Allies started planning postwar administration of defeated territories. At Yalta and Potsdam later, he said, more detailed plans were worked out. Then at the 1955 summit conference it was decided to reunite Germany by free elections, he said.

As a result of all these arrangements, the President declared:

"We stand firm on the rights and the responsibilities that we have undertaken."

But he also said:

"I should like to make clear there is no attempt on the part of the United States in this position to be arbitrary in the sense of trying to irritate or anger any body else."

This commemnt was interpreted as being aimed at Soviet Premier Nikita Khrushchev. The Soviet leader has delivered a virtual ultimatum to the allied big three to clear out of West Berlin after six months of preparatory negotiations.

Eisenhower told his news conference he didn't see anything particularly new in Khrushchev's suggestions on the Berlin crisis, relayed to the President by Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey (D-Minn).

But Eisenhower declined to go into details on Humphrey's report of his eight-hour talk with Khrushchev in the Kremlin last week.

The President did confirm two points already published: That Khrushchev boasted Russia has an 8,700-mile ballistic missile and

Fitz-Simons Face Murder Charge For Sunday's Backstage Death

(Phi Alpha Delta legal fraternity each year sponsors a mock trial featuring prominent campus personalities as principals. The following story is connected with the trial scheduled for Friday.)

An ashen-faced Marion Fitz-Simons was arrested late last night on a warrant for first degree murder in connection with the mysterious backstage slaying of beautiful Diana Johnson during the final act of "Look Homeward, Angel" Sunday night.

Mrs. Fitz-Simons was taken into custody at her home by Sheriff Jim Fasul and local police. She was immediately taken to the county jail where she is being held now without privelege of bond.

Miss Johnson was killed by a thrown flower pot during a scene in the Playmakers production where the boarders were being chased from the stage by Mrs. Fitz-Simons, who played the role of Eliza Gant.

Sheriff Fasul, who had previously stated he had seen a possibility of foul play in the Johnson death, said evidence had been uncovered which backed up his theory and led to Mrs. Fitz-Simon's arrest last night.

When asked what this evidence was Sheriff Fasul said, "Boys, my job is finished. Any more questions you want answered better be directed to Solicitor Luke Corbett. I'll give you a hint though — there ain't much a jealous woman won't do."

When reached last night at his home, Corbett said he and members of his staff had been working closely with the sheriff's department while the investigation had been in progress, but declined to "give away the state's case."

Corbett said, however, that after careful consideration of the factors invoived in the alleged murder he had decided to press for a conviction of murder in the first degree. Under North Carolina law, murder in the first degree is punishable by death or life imprisonment contingent upon the jury's recommendation.

Shortly after the sheriff and his deputies arrived at the Fitz-Simons residence, Fitz-Simons called Stan Gertzman, the family attorney, who accompanied Mrs. Fitz-Simons to jail.

When asked what action he planned to take, Gertzman declined to comment but stated that the charge against his client was the "most ridiculous thing I have ever heard in my life and furthermore I intend to prove it in court."

Gertzman would not allow reporters t oask Mrs. Fitz-Simons any question saying that he would answer them for her in two words, "No comment."

Over 35 UNC Students To Attend SSL Opening

Legislature To Act On Bill Allowing Student Referendum

A bill to let the electorate vote on a referendum to have one Legislative spring election (Norman Smith-ind.) will be the main order of business at the Student Legislature meeting tonight.

They will meet at 7 p.m., instead of the usual 7:30, in Phi Hall, 4th floor, New East, according to Ralph Cummings, speaker of the Student Legislture.

Don Furtado, student body president, "heartily endorses" the idea of one campus wide spring election.

Furtado said yesterday he believes it would solve a number of problems which exist in the present campus electoral set-up.

He stated that at present the campus is faced with two elections, one almost upon arrival in the fall and another after the mid-semester vacation period. He feels one election would allow students to concentrate on one campus election and let students voting for freshman class officers and women's seats know for whom they are voting.

"The single election would also allow the initiation of a training period following the actual election, in which old Legislators or student government officers would continue to function but in which officers-elect would receive the necessary training and endocrination which is so obviously lacking now," he continued.

Furtado suggests the establishment of one women's district instead of the present three, or as an alternative, allow girls to transfer freely from one district to another without loss of Legislative seat.

At present, women are obligated to remain in the district from which they are elected. If the single annual election were established, they would be unable to transfer to a sorority house in the fall.

Furtado expressed no doubt that it would be advantageous to require a three or four months residential period on campus for familiarization purposes before election time, but the problem of transferring to sorority houses would be encountered

WHC Reaches No Decision On Fund Pool

A plan to create a central activity fund for all women's dorms was brought before the Women's Residence Council Tuesday night, but no decision was reached.

The plan, presented by a committee, calls for the combining of activity fees from each dorm into a fund to be handled by the treasurer of the Women's Honor Council.

As the system stands now, a set activity fee is collected from each girl and retained within her dorm. The fund is used for such purposes as the sponsornig of floats and Yack contestants, but not for socials. As expenses are about equal, the larger dorms usually have an excess which allows them to buy extra items and make repairs on their dorms. The smaller ones may run short.

The purpose of this plan is to give aid to the smaller dorms by equalizing the fund among all dorms. The same amount will continue to be collected, but it will all be turned over to the Women's Residence Council treasurer and then be distributed according to need.

Two suggestions were made for the distribution of the excess of the central fund. The first called for equal distribution among all dorms, and the second for division according to the size of the dorm.

Because of much dissension, the bill was referred back to the committee for further work on details. In a meeting held since Tuesday, the committee has added another proposal asking that the excess go to purchase reference books for each dorm, to be used by the girls after closing hours.

Continued discussion and possibly a vote is planned or next week's meeting.

In a light Recorder's Court session Tuesday devoted to clearing up old cases, only one student was tried.

Robert B. Smith, 21, was found guilty of using an expired operator's license. He was fined $10 and costs.

Omnibus Bill To Cover Several Major Issues

Over 35 UNC students will move into Raleigh today to take part in the North Carolina Student Legislature.

According to Curtis Gans, UNC House floor leader at the legislature, the UNC group will present an omnibus bill covering several points. The major items of the bill concern stands on segregation, "massive resistance," congressional investigating committees and discrimination in fraternities.

Concerning Congressional investigating committees the bill will uphold the right of privacy and the use of the fifth Amendment and will attack the use of loyalty oaths.

The bill will also attack the discriminatory clauses in the charters of fraternities.

One point will censure the use of intimidation to prevent the individuals exercising Constitutional freedom. This point is related to the discharge of a Louisianna State University professor for taking a stand on the segregation issues, Gans said.

Included in the bill is a resolution concerning the use of massive resistance to prevent intergration which, according to the bill, denies youth the right of public education.

The bill also includes a statement which reaffirms the right of the Student Legislature to meet and speak freely.

This resolution is related to the action taken last year by the legislature which caused a storm in the capital.

Due to last year's bills the Council of State demanded sponsorship of at least half of the participating colleges. Of the 21 participating colleges this year 12 have letters from school heads sponsoring the delegations.

Schools which have the necessary credentials include Duke, N. C. College at Durham, Shaw, Catawba, Greensboro College, Livingston, Davidson, Woman's College, East Carolina, Guilford, North Carolina State College and the University of North Carolina.

In the 1957 meeting the legislature passed a resolution calling for the abolition of North Carolina's ban of interracial marriages. There had been some discussion earlier this year about surrendering the use of the Capitol for the college group. Tuesday the Council of State gave permission for this year's meeting in the Capitol. The Council demanded letters of sponsorship this year.

Governor Luther Hodges will speak briefly at the opening session today at 3 p.m.

IDC Supports Individual Study Rights

By RON SHUMATE

"The Inter-Dormitory Council feels that the right to study is the paramount right given to individuals," Rudy Edwards, IDC president, said last night.

The IDC discussed the problem of quiet hours in dormitories at length. "As far as the IDC has been able to ascertain quiet hours have been much better this year than last year. According to Carl Churchill, superintendent of UNC dorms, physical damage to dorms has been substantially less than last year," Edwards said.

Edwalds stated that the IDC is "justly proud, but feels that there are still some troubled areas which must be worked on."

The Dormitory District Court system, which is expected to go into effect next week, is, according to Edwards, "a measure whereby rules can be enforced to the extent to which there is an atmosphere conducive to study."

The dorm Visiting Board will inspect all men's dorms next Monday from 2 to 6 p.m. Each dorm must be approved by the Visiting Board before opening its social room. Dorms also must have two faculty couples as sponsors.

The campus store, which will be in the basement of Avery dorm, is expected to be open between Jan. 1 and Feb. 1. This "temporary" store will have a fountain, and will serve milkshakes, fountain drinks, do-nuts, sandwiches, and other similar items.

Six "Hear here" telephone booths have been ordered, according to Edwards, and it is hoped that they will be installed by Christmas. Edwards emphasized that these booths are on a trial basis, and, if they work satisfactorily, may be installed in other dorms.

Planetarium Display Features Vanguard

A 12-foot cutaway model of the Vanguard satellite launching rocket went on display Sunday in the South Science exhibit room at the Morehead Planetarium.

The scale replica of the rocket, furnished by The Martin Co. of Baltimore, Md., will be on public display during presentation of the traditional Christmas program, "Star of Bethlehem."

Besides outlining the flight path of Vanguard and describing its design, the display by the rocket's prime contractor illustrates some highlights of rocket development and the next logical steps in space exploration.

The three-stage Vanguard rocket added new "semi-permanent" body to the heavens early this year when it launched a 3¼-pound solar-powered transmitter and a 50-yound rocket casing into an orbit that varies between 400 and 2,500 miles above the earth's surface. The orbit of the Vanguard satellite is so stable that scientists predict it will last at least two centuries.

Di Unanimously Defeats Bill Favoring Abolition Of States

By CAROLE COPLAN

A bill favoring the abolition of the states was unanimously defeated last night by the Dialectic Senate.

The affirmative argued that even though the establishment of the states is accepted as tradition, this institution of governing from within the state is a wasteful duplication of powers.

Senator Rick Wolfer said that the state governments of today operate in much the same way as the central government, but their only accomplishment is to hinder the national government. He also stated that the present day states should be divided into districts that would be directly responsible to the central government.

Senator Gary Greer, arguing on the negative side based his stand on the clause in the Constitution delegating all powers not otherwise delegated to Congress to the states or the people. Greer argued that since the states are a tradition, any change would result in a great modification to the present system. Not only would there be a geographical change, but the various laws controlled by the states such as marriage, divorce, and the issuance of driver's licenses would be involved, he said.

Sen. Pebley Barrow, also arguing on the negative side, said the bill gave all the evils of the present system of states, but didn't tell how these evils could be eliminated and still maintain the states.

He quoted Jefferson as saying, "The government that governs closest to the people is best."

He commented that the abolition of the states would spell the doom of the type of democracy that the United States has known for almost 200 years.

Branch Says Avery Gets Snack Bar

A snack bar selling coffee, sandwiches and ice cream products will be constructed in the basement of Avery Dorm and will be operating by the beginning of the spring semester, J. A. Branch, University business manager, said yesterday.

Branch made the decision at the request of the Campus Stores Committee. The committee, under the chairmanship of Jim Crownover, had polled the students and found a definite need and a desire for the store.

The final decision was made after the residents of the first floor of the dorm agreed to accept the store, which could possibly be noisy.

Branch told the committee in its last meeting that the store would be a temporary measure, to last only three or four years. In the future a permanent structure will be erected in that vicinity to accomodates the boys in Avery, Parker and Teague and the four other dorms to be built.

Three people were given warnings, there were three semester probations, one probation until June and six cases were dismissed.

The names of the eight people who did not appear for trial are being turned over to the dean of student affairs.

Withrow Installed As Cardboard Head

Larry Withrow was installed as the new president of the UNC Cardboard at the annual awards banquet Tuesday night in the Lenoir Hall banquet room.

Out going president aPt Dooley installed Withrow and the other newly elected officers: Ed Riner, vice president; Jerry Berrier, office director; Grady Phillips, head usher; and Ray Twiddy, art director.

Withrow, a member in Sigma Phi Epsilon fraternity, in one breath thanked the Cardboard for his election and in another started working in announcing "a meeting early in February to plan next year's work." He also stressed the need for a larger staff for next year.

Prior to the installations Dooley praised the staff no work during the current year. He also made annual awards to 20 Cardboard members. First-year members received certificates of merit, and second-year members received a monogrammed jacket. For third and fourth year work the awards were a monogrammed sweater and a gold key and chain respectively.

Those receiving monogrammed sweaters were Peggy Smith, Pat Sweeney, Grady Phillips, Withrow and Dooley. Thal Elliott and Ed Riner were awarded jackets.

Standards

Very often, especially in connection with criticism, there is a great deal of question of what standards should be chosen, what goals are to be aimed at, or what criteria to be used.

What factors must be taken into consideration is a live issue. "What about the pratical side?" becomes a valid question.

Yet, there can be now and always only one valid standard against which an individual can judge; namely, the individual's view of perfection in the situation. The goals to be aimed at are things necessary to make a perfect thing out of an imperfect. The criteria are the ought to be is in any given situation. Any lower standards are insulting to those who are erecting the edifice in question.

Unless one wants to make the damaging admission that he can do no more than shoot for inferior standards, and unfortunately many people are willing to make this admission, the standards to be used are the highest.

The most critical criticism is more often than not a view on man that is so praising, so openminded, and so cognizant of his potential of the good and the perfect, that unless man wants to degrade himself as a capable being, he should have no argument with the standards used..

The standards that are used are to judge not the person, but the edifice, the creation, and as such man is given credit for being able to create a perfect edifice.

If one falls short of the highest standard he need not feel as remorseful, as if he attains a lower standard which is not an adequite criterion of his capabilities.

There is no question that practical factors can be noted, but they are in the form of an explanation rather than of an excuse and should be treated as such.

The potential of man has been underrated too long by too many. It is time for people to have a renascence of faith — in the abilities of the human being.

CUSC

The Consolidated University Student Council, a group of nebulous status, amorphous structure, and vague purpose, passed two quite commendable resolutions in its meeting Sunday afternoon.

The first of these resolutions was in opposition of continuing a full self-liquidating program of dormitory construction in the state, and went on record as favoring a program, recommended by the Board of Higher Education, for one-half self-liquidation as a temporary measure in stopping spiraling room rents and overall cost of education to the individual.

One of the key words in the resolution was temporary, for the situation to be desired is a total commitment of the state to education in which self-liquidation become a thing of the past. This is what should be worked for.

The second resolution, in support of the original Consolidated University budget request of four million plus for salary increases, is both a constructive and courageous resolution. In this the students of the council are opposing the recommendations made by the Board of Higher Education in which the figure was cut by two million. Again the question of total commitment comes into play, as there is a necessity for making salaries competitive so that the University can raise itself to be the best University in the south.

A program of leaves was also recommended in the second resolution, and it is one that takes cognisance of the fringe benefits that are necessary to keep a faculty of the highest caliber. Ther are many faculty members who are so devoted to teaching that they would teach without this, but to encourage the teaching profession, a system of leaves has definite advantages.

For a group with relatively no power, the CUSC did quite well for itself in speaking out. If enough people do, the needed commitment to education will be a reality.

A House Erected

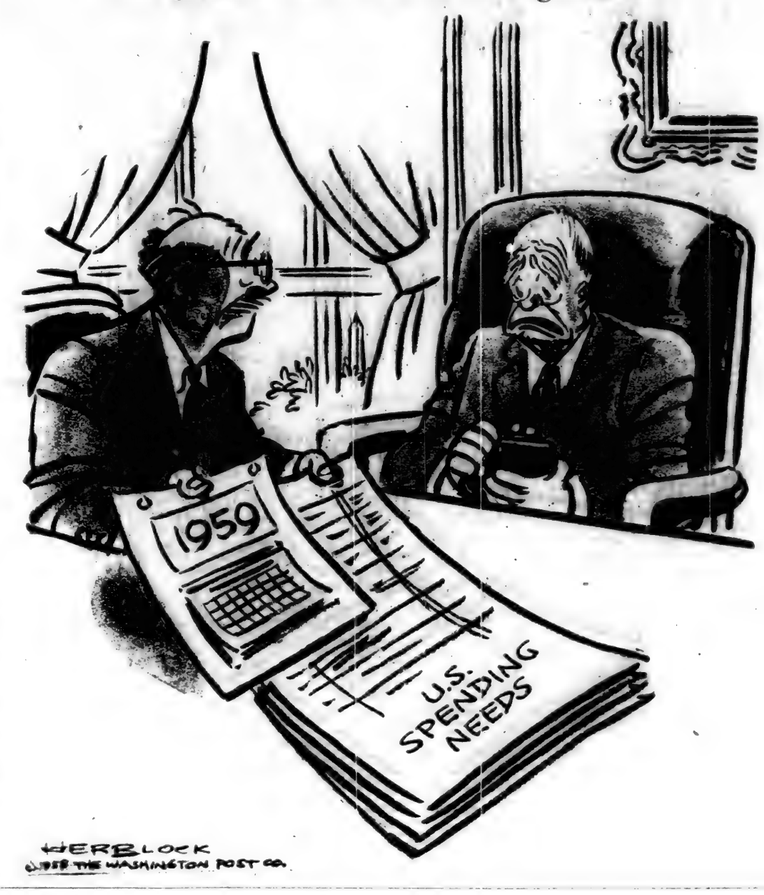
Gary R. Greer

Far away and long ago there arose a mountainous strength of power and prestige so that gods themselves were within the grasp of us mortals. And this growing mountain of strength considered itself "sans end" so that peaks were never considered to be of importance, and so that each successive step was evaluated on its own merit. Thus was the concept of progress born, the illegitimate offspring of a very small mind.

Now, we, the product of mendelian principles and darwinian theory, the evanescent reaction to particularized components, the lynched "item" of the scientific mob, find ourselves (to make a great assumption) in the straits of a great sea; straits which open on one hand to a fthomless depth of magnificance, but on the other to a measurable body of certain limitations.

So it is, and there the whyfore of man in his ultimate achievement. Thus it be and who shall impede it lest he be a non-regular? I suppose that Atilla the Hun would be well pleased else Kubla Khan must find a waterboy. I guess that David must forsake his sling for just perhaps absolym might cut down "that tree' in fine, I suppose that the real George Washington should the bonds that hold the tree aright; and at last I declare that though the hands of a million hold forth this proposition, I will not accept it unless Descartes shows me his God and unless I shall feel the gamma rays penetrate my body.

"I Don't Know Why Everything Has To Keep Changing. When I Was A Young Man—"



Human Rights: Declaration's Progress

Daniel H. Pollitt

(Dr. Pollitt is a professor of law in the University Law School. His help in celebrating Human Rights Week was solicited by Nancy Smathers.)

An "International Bill of Rights" captured the imagination of the first session of the United Nations General Assembly in 1946 and a Commission on Human Rights, headed by Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, was assigned the task of drafting such a document. Two years later, on December 10, 1948, the United Nations without dissenting vote adopted what is known as The Universal Declaration of Human Rights. It contains 30 articles, each designed to put a world-wide stamp of approval on such varied objectives as right to life, liberty and the security of person; right of freedom of movement; right to freedom of assembly, association and to form and join trade unions; ;and a right to social security. The Declaration is a statement of goals and standards. Efforts to implement its effectiveness by giving the force of law or treaty obligation have so far failed, in part because of United States objection. The Declaration of Human Rights, however, has not been without significance in its first ten years.

The Declaration of Human Rights and its component parts have been utilized as a mirror of expected standards of behavior by members of the United Nations. Article 4 of the Declaration provides that "No one shall be held in slavery;" and while slavery still exists within member states of the United Nations, the studies of the special United Nations committees in this area have undoubtedly shamed some states into at least requiring that slaves be afforded more humane treatment. Even less success has attended the United Nations efforts to end forced labor within the Soviet Union, but the constant debate and United Nations resolutions have served to expose and identify the problem. The United States and the United Kingdom tried to no avail for five years to persuade the Soviet Union to return the Second World War prisoners, and then turned the matter over to the United Nations. Some progress was then made, progress which German, Italian and Japanese spokesmen in the General Assembly attributed to the efforts of the United Nation's committees.

Article 2 of the Universal Declaration holds that "everyone is entitled to all the rights and freedoms set forth in this Declaration without distinction of any kind, such as race . . . ." The United Nations considered the South African apartheid policy in this connection, and expressed regret that South Africa "is proceeding with further legislation contrary to the Universal Declaration of Human Rights." The effect of these regrets is difficult to assess. Minimally, it gave hope to the Colored leaders in South Africa and may have encouraged the more moderate elements among all parties.

Article 16 of the Declaration recognizes the right of men and women to marry, without any limitation due to race, nationality or religion." The United Nations, under the leadership of the Chilian representative, adopted the view that the Soviet Union's refusal to permit its citizens who married foreigners to depart the country effectively abridged this right of marriage. Shortly thereafter, the Soviet Union permitted many of its citizens, including the daughter-in-law of the Chilian representative, to join their husbands abroad.

The United Nations condemned Hungary in the Cardinal Mindszenty case of violating the Declaration of religious freedom. The Cardinal did not benefit, but Associated Pressman William Oatis can attribute his release from a Czechoslovokian prison in part to the Union Nations condemnation of that country for interfering with the gathering and transmitting of news. Similarly, a score or more Greek and Spanish labor leaders owe their lives to timely United Nations resolutions condemning military trial and execution for "political" crimes. Thus, on a few occasions, at least, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights has served as effective rallying ground for world public opinion.

The Declaration has also served other functions: as a model for the new constitutions of Indonesia, Costa Rica, Syria, El Salvador, Haitii, Jordan, the Federal Republic of Germany, and Puerto Rico; as a basis for the peace treaty with Japan; and as a standard in other international agreements. The Special Statute for Trieste, to cite one example, begins with the following: "In the administration of their respective areas the Italian and Yugoslav authorities shall act in accordance with the principles of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights." Finally, and closer to home, several American judges have recognized our signature of the Universal Declaration as a manifestation of public policy which has some degree of persuasion in close cases.

The Universal Declaration of Human Rights does not establish a rule of law. It is, in the words of Mrs. Roosevelt, "a declaration of basic principles . . . to serve as a common standard of achievement for all peoples of all nations." But declarations of basic principles, especially when stamped with United Nations approval, have their value. One recalls the words of Thomas Jefferson when shortly after the Alien and Sedition Acts he was taunted about the Constitution he thought would protect freedom of speech: "It is still certain that tho' written constitutions may be violated in moments of passion or delusion, yet they furnish a text to which those who are watchful may again rally and recall the people; they fix too far the people principles for their political creed." Perhaps we can ask no more of the United Nations at this time than that it furnish us a text to which we can rally.

On Paper

Sidney Dakar

Hearing that many of our more important supplies such as toilet paper were partly destroyed in the fire the other day, I was reminded of a happening at our air base in Boose Bay, Labrador. This base is in the middle of a wilderness. There are no roads leading from or to this base of thousands of men, women and children. The only way in is by air, and by ship during the few ice-free months of the summer.

The base supply discovered during the dead of winter that there was an unexpected shortage of toilet paper that approached the critical level. One can realize the full implications of this crisis when one considers that up there no newspapers or other substitutes are available in such emergencies.

Consequently, urgent councils were held and a priority message was sent to the supply base back in the United States. After the usual three or four day customary delay of the service, a reply to their request came back. It read: "Justify your request." It might be wise for all of your requent habitues of Lendir to follow my example and take the preventative measure of caching a few rolls of said paper in case such contingency should arise here.

Overheard in Lenior: (One student worker to another) "Don't clean off that large table; they would only just mess it up again." "Yes, I guess you are right," replied the other while walking to another area in the room.

One sure way to get a table cleaned off in Lenior is to leave your pie on the table for one minute while getting a second cup of coffee.

Walanski: "Ahhh . . . I don't think they will get it in orbit."

It seems to me that a manusually first loves a woman because he desires her; a woman desires a man because she loves him. There is a great difference.

On Kasper

Wilma Dykeman & John Stokely

(The following is from The New Republic and represents the first part of an article from a recent issue.)

The chronicles of John Kasper — self-styled saviour of native, white, Aryan, salt-of-the-earth Americanism — continue to unfold. A few days ago in Nashville, Tennessee, the second white Southern jury to sit in judgment on the apparently incoherent activities of this brooding young stranger convicted him of inciting to riot. It set his sentence at six months on the county roads and a $500 fine, half the maximum sentence possible on the misdemeanor charge.

Although the riots had occurred a year ago during the opening of the 1957 school term, when desegregation of first-grade classes was initiated in Nashville, it had been necessary to postpone the trial until Kasper served a year's sentence in federal prison in connection with 1956 disturbances at Clinton, Tennessee.

Sowing the wind and letting others reap the whirlwind, Kasper's performance on the Southern scene has provoked — in varying degrees in various regions — curiosity, excitement, dismay. But most of all it has produced puzzlement.

How has this interloper from New Jersey, graduate of Columbia University, former bookshop owner, managed so successfully to transform latent discord into open violence? And why? What's the payoff for this "subterranean" who has yet to walk off with any impressive sum of confidence cash, this dead-beat demagogue who has yet to whip up any active interest in personal political office? because they cannot easily answer these questions, many Notherners find it impossible to take John Kasper seriously, and many Southerners find it possible to convict him of charges they might dismiss against their fellow Southerners whose motives would be more readily identifiable.

Sitting for a week in the small, dark-panelled criminal courtroom on the sixth floor of Nashville's Davidson County Courthouse, watching the parade of witnesses — careful policemen, concerned school teachers, wary small businessmen, truculent friends for the defence — listening to testimony about Kasper's mass meetings during those turbulent days — "he said Jews were behind it all, they were Christ-killers, worse than niggers," "he said there was going to be blood in the streets and the crowd just hollered and carried on," "he passed around pictures of colored soldiers kissing white girls" — watching and listening, two clues to the "how" and "why" of Kasper offer themselves.

First, it needs to be clearly understood that Kasper does not seek to divide white and Negro Southerners only; probably the chief success has been in dividing the white South within itself. Some of the shrewder segregation leaders have understood this and reacted most bitterly against Kasper, who brings division at a time when at least the appearance of unity is essential to their cause.

During the height of the tension at Clinton two years ago, one of the embattled young white lawyers who had helped form the home guard to hold off the white mob until the state patrol and the national guard could arrive, observed with some astonishment: "This isn't a race conflict as much as it is a class conflict!"

This has proved true in the same sense that Kasper has been forced to attack the state's leadership, from the Governor to the "city" preachers, the majority of educated, middle-class citizens, and finally even the bulk of the less blunt-spoken of his fellow segregation leaders.

The nature of this class consciousness came to light early in the recent trial. On opening Monday, the chief of Kasper's four lawyers asked for dismissal of the case, and when this was denied, requested change of venue. (This lawyer was former Criminal Court Judge Raulston Schoolfield, of Chattanooga, impeached last summer by the Tennessee House of Representatives and convicted by the state Senate on three counts of misconduct in office.) His argument for dismissal was that the panel from which the jury was to be selected would be "socially biased or otherwise prejudiced" and Kasper himself took the stand to say that he had analyzed the jury list and the majority were from the higher echelon, the silk-stocking districts, not the low-income, interracial neighborhoods where children "are forced to attend integrated schools."

"The great majority of these jurors," he said, "are economically and socially ahead of my defense witnesses and the persons I am accused of inciting to riot." Kasper described the prospective jurors as "foremen, overseers, professionals, executive-type people who live in exclusive, restricted, sub-divisions, with Negro maids and yard boys, which indicates a status not many of us can enjoy."

Although these objections were overruled, the theme recurred in somewhat less formal language again and again during the trial. A young reporter telling about one of Kasper's speeches to the crowd before a Nashville school recalled his saying, "I've found the only folks who will stand up and fight are the poor folks . . . We'll fight it out. We don't want any trouble. I'm doing my best to stop any shooting, hanging or dynamiting. We don't want violence, just our rights. But we'll fight — fight — fight!"

On the stand, Kasper himself explained why he had come to Nashville in the first place: "The poor people in Nashville had no organization to represent them. There seems to be a lot of snobbery about classes here and these people who are the real salt of the earth are the ones who really suffer in integration."

Georgia Bomb Trial Ends In Deadlock, Mistrial

ATLANTIA — (AP) — A mistrial was declared yesterday in the case of Georgia Bright, accused of taking part in the Oct. 12 bombing of a Jewish temple, after the jury deadlocked 9 to 3 for conviction.

The prosecution called Bright's case for immediate retrial but defense attorneys pleaded physical exhaustion from the nine-day trial and obtained a postponement until next month.

The jury reported shortly before noon it had been deadlocked since yesterday morning. It was discharged 84 hours after it received the case. It was the longest period a jury has deliberated in the memory of court officials.

After the state announced it was ready for immediate re-trial, attorneys for the 35-year-old industrial engineer asked the court to throw out the indictment. They also moved to quash the case on the ground of former jeopardy. They were overruled on both counts by Judge Durwood Pye.

Pye said he had ruled on the defense objection to the indictment during the trial and added "there will be no more demurrers to the indictment."

Ralph Castleberry, jury foreman, told newsmen the nine jurors voting for conviction, would have recommended mercy which would mean a life sentence. Under the court's charge they could have returned a verdict without recommending mercy that would have carried the death penalty, conviction with a recommendation for mercy, or acquital.

The nine jurors were reluctant, Castleberry said, to impose the death sentence inasmuch as there were no fatalities in the temple dynamitin. The blast caused damage placed at $96,000. Castleberry also said the three who declined to convict held out because they claimed the evidence was insufficient. These three also felt, he said, that they could not believe the state's witness James DeVore, whose testimony was aimed at putting Bright at the scene.

DeVore, a cellmate of Bright, testified the defendant told him in their jail cell that he acted as a lookout on the night of the bombing. He quoted Bright as saying Richard Bowling, one of four other defendants, planted the explosive.

Bowling and the other defendants were released on bond after their attorneys agreed to withdraw demands for an immediate trial and after the Bright jury became deadlocked.

Bright, in a six and a half-hour long, unsworn statement to the jury allowed under Georgia law, denied any connection with the bombing.

an easy-to-build nuclear bomb with the explosive power of five million tons of TNT.

Eisenhower said he was not impressed. He noted the United States already has successfully tested a 6,000-mile missile and that, he said, is sufficient range. Also, the United States has exploded bigger bombs.

Another report which failed to make any apparent impact on Eisenhower was that the Russians are test-flying an atomic-powered airplane.

"There is absolutely no intelligence, no reliable evidence of any kind that indicates that the Soviets have flown a nuclear-powered airplane," the President said.

He added that American scientists fail to see any usefulness for such a plane "in the present state of the art." Meanwhile, he said, U. S. researchers will keep trying to build an atomic engine capable of flying an airplane more than "a few hundred feet off the ground."

Charlie Gray, UP floor leader, said yesterday he hadn't definitely made up his mind about the bill. "I can see the advantages of it and the disadvantages." He stated that, right now, it seems he will be against it unless something can be done about the disadvantages it would create.

Smith feels it's the obligation of the Legislative body to present the referendum to the electorate because the purpose of a referendum is to prevent legislative dictatorship. He believes passage of the referendum itself would increase the efficiency o fthe Student Legislature and center more interest on elections.

Five other bills, introduced last week, will be on the agenda

These include a bill to appropriate $25 to the Dean of Awards, (Jim Crownover-SP) a bill to allot $125 from the Unappropriated Balance to the Carolina Women's Council (Anne Eckerson-SP) and a bill to approve the Honor Council by-laws of the Medical School (Gary Greer-SP).

The other two include a bill to appropriate $100 to the Committee on State Affairs for miscellaneous expenditures (Smith) and one to approve the Graduate Club Constitution (Janie Walters-SP).

Employment Show Slight Nov. Increase

WASHINGTON (AP)—Government figures showed today that unemployment increased by only 28,000 in November, to 3,833,000.

The increase was so small that the Labor and Commerce Departments viewed it as meaning there was virtually no change, whereas seasonal gains had been expected.

While the picture looked good for last month, government specialists said unemployment might rise seasonally during January and February to the five-million level of last year.

Total employment was shown to have fallen during November by 653,000 to 64,653,000. This drop was laid chiefly to seasonal curtailment of farm work.

Most of those leaving farm jobs were said to have withdrawn from the labor force entirely instead of seeking new work. A number of previously unemployed factory workers were recalled, especially in auto plants.

The seasonally adjusted rate of unemployment in November was 5.9 per cent of the total labor force, the lowest it has been in 10 months. Last spring and late last summer it had gone to 7.5 per cent.

Increases in overtime in the auto industry and the ending of several strikes helped boost the factory work week in November to 39.9 hours, two hours longer than in October.

Partly because of the longer work week and partly because of pay increases, factory worker earnings rose $1.62 a week to a new record of $88.58. Every industry group showed increases.

Carolina Swimmers Edge Tough East Carolina College 50-36

Bloom, Nash Get Two Wins Each

Carolina's defending ACC champion swimmers got the scare of their lives before finally whipping upstart East Carolina at Greenville yesterday 50-36.

The Tar Heels went into the final event, the 400-freestyle relay, needing a sweep to win the meet. Had ECC won the meet it would have been a tie and would have put the first black mark on the Carolina record for 2 seasons.

Carolina had their troubles in several events. ECC swept first and second in the diving and 220 breast stroke and placed highly in other events.

Sophomore flash Harry Bloom continued his winning ways with little difficulty, however, as he won both of the events in which he was entered. Bloom swept first in both the 220 and 440 freestyle races.

One of the rarities of a swimming match occured in the backstroke event when Carolina's Bob Hunter and East Carolina's Tom Sawyer finished in a dead heat. No one was declared winner.

Soph Randy Dodson helped the cause with a win in the 200 butterfly, and also swam with the winners in the 400-medley relay and the 400 freestyle relay.

Old hand Brent Nash came through with two victories also, copping the 50 freestyle and the 100 freestyle.

The Summary

400-medley relay: Carolina (Hunter, Douglas, Dodson, Gurrant) 4:18.5.

200-butterfly: Dodson (C), Carrol (E), Garrison (E) 2:24.7.

200-backstroke: tie Hunter (C) and Sawyer (E), Hamrick (C) 2:26.7.

400-freestyle relay: Carolina (Dodson, Nash, Bloom, Kalkhurst) 3:41.2.

Tar Babies Roll Along

Carolina's unbeaten Tar Babies, with 6-8 Jim Hudock leading the way, continued this week to roll over opposition in fine style.

Hudock collected 20 points Monday night as his mates ran over High Point College 88-56 in a warm-up game prior to the varsity tilt between Carolina and Virginia.

Yogi Poteet, last year's outstanding cage prospect in the state, aided the cause with 18 markers to finish second in the scoring.

The Tar Babies jumped off to an early lead and held on to it with no trouble. In the second half they stretched it to 81-39 at one point before Dean Smith called off the dogs and gave the second unit a chance.

The only problem facing the Tar Babies thus far has been that of personal fouls. Monday night some of the players committed foolish fouls, and Hudock fouled out of the game for the second straight time.

The frosh take to the road this Saturday to do battle with Wake Forest's highly touted Baby Deacons. The Baby Deacs earned their big reputation earlier in the year when they beat the Wake varsity in a practice game. They have not, however, held up to their advance notice so far.

The Wake frosh have lost their last two starts, to Duke's Blue Imps and State's Wolflets.

Coach Dean Smith thinks "They are coming along fine and I'm satisfied with their progress. Everyone of the starters is an outstanding prospect. Playing Wake Forest on a neutral court will show just how good a team we are."

Saunders Wins Award

The 1958 Jacobs Blocking Trophy will be awarded to South Carolina fullback John Saunders at the Greenville, S. C., touchdown jamboree Jan. 22.

The Atlantic Coast Sports Writers Assn. announced Wednesday that Saunders has been named winner of the trophy. Sixty-eight sportswriters, sportscasters and college publicity men in the Atlantic Coast Conference participated in the poll.

Saunders, 210-pound junior of Churchland, Va., received 103 points. Runner-up was North Carolina State guard Bill Rearick with 95. Duke guard Mike McGee was third with 76.

Saunders, who lost only five yards rushing all season, won the ACC's ground-gaining title by rolling up 653 yards in 128 carries for a 5.1 average. He scored six touchdowns.

South Carolina Coach Warren Giese said Saunders is "the finest blocking fullback I have ever been associated with. He set a high objective for himself and realized that a fullback's key role is to lead other ball carriers. His determination to fulfill that assignment and his love of contact helped him make the fine blocker that he is."

Key blocks by the hard-hitting Saunders enabled halfbacks Alex Hawkins and King Dixon to score numerous gains.

Other ACC players who figured prominently in the balloting were Hawkins, Clemson center Bill Thomas, and tackle Phil Blazer and center Ronnie Koes of North Carolina.

"NERO DIDN'T FIDDLE WHILE ROME BURNED—HE ATE PIZZA"

At long last the truth concerning Nero's activity on the night of Rome's burning has been established. The unearthed documents reveal that actually the story of Nero's fiddling was inserted into subsequent historical documents by a coalition of subserviant fiddle makers who, at that time, were competing with the Pizza makers union.

Accidents From Snow In Village

By NEIL MURPHY

A rash of accidents hit Chapel Hill, along with a blanket of snow, from the east yesterday.

Chapel Hill police report more than twenty minor accidents during the day. No personal injuries occurred. Many of the accidents involved damage over one hundred dollars.

The snow that totaled more than six inches did not interrupt power in the Chapel Hill area. Phone lines were jammed and service slower, but phone company officials said that no lines were down. What seemed to save the public utility lines was the light weight of the dry snow. Service men fear that sleet will do much greater dammage.

At 4 p.m. yesterday the snow stood at six inches and was predicted to reach a depth of 12 inches in spots.

Traffic was at a standstill on the Durham-Chapel Hill Boulevard and many cars had skidded into the ditch on the Hillsboro Road. Cars were jammed along the hospital by-pass.

The snow, which started at 7:15 a.m., was expected to stop sometime last night.

The western part of the state escaped the snow almost completely. Greensboro received only light flurries.

Snow Affects Whole State

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

A swirling snow storm of near-blizzard proportions swept over central and eastern North Carolina yesterday, virtually paralyzing traffic in many communities.

Depths ranging up to 15 inches were reported from the storm, which sneaked in without warning from the south during Wednesday night and the early morning hours.

Campus Christmas Look Gets Addition Thursday

By MARY ALICE ROWLETTE

It's beginning to look a lot like Christmas and the Christmas look at Carolina should reach its peak Thursday night in Y Court when the Y and the Grail sponsor a carol sing around the Christmas tree.

The sing will begin at 9 o'clock and hot chocolate and donuts will be served afterward, according to Bill Sugg, representative of the Y. Charlie Huntington is in charge of the sing for the Grail.

Sugg said Dr. Joel Carter of the Music Department will lead the singing and the Glee Club will be there to "back things up." It has been tentatively arranged for the Glee Club to sing one number alone.

"The idea behind the sing," Sugg said, "is to get the various groups on campus, such as sororities, fraternities, dorms and other organizations, to do their caroling early in the evening and then come and join in a campus wide sing."

This is the first time the carol sing has been held, but the Y and Grail hope that it will become an every year occurance. Sugg urged everyone on campus and in Chapel Hill to come to the sing.

Others working with the caroling are Denton Lotz, Sophie Martin, Betty Kay Johnson, Ben Taylor and John Hunnicutt.

ED WIVES

The Ed Wives met at the home of Mrs. John B. Chase Jr. Wednesday night and heard guest speaker Paul Green.

Slippery Snow Causes Falls No Injuries

A coed was rushed to the infirmary yesterday after a serious fall in the snow at Y Court.

Brenda Jean Bryan was not seriously injured by the fall, according to Dr. James Taylor. Earlier rumors indicated that she was dead, but Dr. Taylor said the girl claimed she had never lost consciousness.

A series of X-rays revealed no injuries, but Dr. Taylor called in an orthopedic specialist to recheck Miss Bryan. She was received at the infirmary about 10:30 a.m. yesterday.

After the X-rays she was sent to bed because of some "uncomfortableness" caused by the fall, Dr. Taylor said.

The new design of the 25-cent U. S. Savings Stamp still has the Minute Man of Concord on it, adapted from the statue "by the rude bridge that arched the flood" done by Daniel Chester French.

But the new version, now on sale at post offices, is red-white-and-blue. Also new are $2.50 and $5 gift books of Savings Stamps for any occasion.

Banks offer free gift covers for E Bonds, which start at $18.75.

Bingham Protected By Police

By RON SHUMATE

Bingham Hall was still standing yesterday afternoon at 3:15.

Classes in Bingham will resume today, and classes all over the campus will be held as usual, despite yesterday's bomb scare and snow, according to Chancellor William B. Aycock.

Aycock said that when such a bomb scare occurs, "every precaution will be taken. We're not taking any chances."

Desk Sgt. W. F. Hester received the call at about 10:30. This one was from a man, possibly college age, who warned the police that a bomb had been planted in Bingham and was set to explode between 3:15 and 3:16 p.m. Thursday. Apparently the man made no attempt to disguise his voice, though police said it sounded muffled.

Chapel Hill Police Chief W. D. Blake listened on an extension phone to the second call. There were no sounds in the background. All that was heard was the voice and heavy breathing.

Police made a systematic check of both buildings, but no bomb was found. They also searched the Chapel Hill Junior High School and the West Franklin St. Elementary School. Both schools were closed yesterday.

According to the office of the superintendent of Chapel Hill schools the school should be open today. Joseph M. Johnson, school superintendent, was not available for a statement.

J. Arthur Branch, University business manager, said that the administration "decided not to take a chance, although it's probably a prank." He said that the University police searched Bingham yesterday, "as an added precaution."

Policemen were stationed at each door in Bingham to keep students from entering.

Upon hearing of the "bomb" the police systematicaly searched every room in the building.

Chapel Hill High School Closed By Bomb Threat

North Carolina's school-bombing "scare" epidemic spread yesterday to Chapel Hill and the University campus.

Two calls to the Chapel Hill Poice Dept.... two hours apart Wednesday night, warned of bombings to Chapel Hill High Schol and to Bingham Hall on the UNC campus and set in motion extensive searches and guards by officers.

Until noon yesterday, no evidence of actual bomb placings had been uncovered.

Just in case, however, Bingham Hall, the high school and junior high school were closed for the day. Later, heavy snow forced all public schools to close. University classes other than in Bingham, which houses the English Dept., proceeded.

A call to the police at 8:35 Wednesday night by a "crying" teenager started the bomb-scare craze here.

"My brother is going to blow up Chapel Hill High School in the morning," the voice wailed. "For heaven's sake don't let it happen." Sgt. W. F. Hester, on the telephone desk, then asked the person his name. He hung the receiver up in a hurry.

The caller was described as "about 16-17 years old, and crying all the time."

Immediately, the high school was checked and guards placed. It was searched again early yesterday morning and later. No bomb was found.

"All of these threats in the state have proved to be false, but you can't take any chances," Chief of Police Bill Blake said today. He said that guards were maintained at the threatened buildings throughout the day.

Ironically, the local force held a meeting only last week to prepare for any bomb threat incident, and plans were made.

"We were still shocked when the calls came in," Chief Blake said.

He attributed the calls to "crackpots."

SSL Snowed Under; Postponed—Bad Roads

RALEIGH—(AP)—North Carolina student legislators who had a tough time getting the use of the state capital for their annual mock legislative sessions had to call off their meeting at the last minute Thursday—because of heavy snow in the central and eastern part of the state.

The meeting, which Gov. Hodges had been scheduled to address in a welcoming speech at 3 p.m., was postponed indefinitely when only three of some 21 college delegations had arrived by early afternoon.

Leaders said the annual event would be re-scheduled at a later date.

Ironically, the students had to call their meeting off only two days after they had been assured of the use of the state's legislative halls. As a result of criticism they stirred up last year they had to get letters of sponsorship from half of the heads of the colleges represented. The needed number of letters arrived only Tuesday.

The criticism resulted from a resolution the students adopted last year advocating repeal of the state's laws which prohibit inter-racial marriages.

IT'S YOUR TAR HEEL

The Daily Tar Heel belongs to its readers.

Students have to pay for it, and have been repeatedly invited to use it to announce club meetings, advertise for lost articles, or to print special notices.

But the paper is more than an announcement sheet. As the word "newspaper" implies, The Daily Tar Heel is a publication of news events.

Experience isn't a prerequisite for Daily Tar Heel reporters.

Carolina's SSL Delegation Waited, And Waited And . . .

A UNC delegation of over twenty was waiting patiently yesterday to await word of whether it was safe to drive to Raleigh for this year's State Student Legislature convocation at the Capitol.

Students started gathering in The Daily Tar Heel office before 11 a.m. and continued to stay while telegrams and the phone calls were placed to Raleigh in hopes of getting word whether the meeting was going to be held.

At 1 p.m. delegation Chairman Ed Levy called and said that roads were considered impassable, and the delegation was advised that travel for the next two hours was impossible.

In the meantime the waiters received a report over the radio that the SSL would meet.

Officially they were in a quandry until after 3 p.m., when the meeting was finally called off.

Chairman Levy expressed hope that the meeting would be held at a later date.

Judge Reid Thompson To Preside At 'Trial'

Judge Reid Thompson of Pittsboro arrives here today to preside over the annual Phi Alpha Delta mock trial scheduled for 7:30 tonight in the Manning Hall Courtroom.

Judge Thompson will attend a dinner tonight honoring the principals of the trial at the Pines Restaurant.

The judge will also be the featured speaker at the annual Phi Alpha Delta Christmas banquet to be held Saturday night.

This year's trial is centered about the "slaying" of Miss Diana Johnson, 1958 Yackety Yack beauty queen and Miss Chapel Hill of 1958, during the final act of the Playmakers' production of "Look Homeward, Angel" Sunday night by Mrs. Marion Fitz-Simons.

Serving as coordinator is Duane Johnson, a second year student from Niagara Falls, N. Y.

Defense counsel for this year's trial will include: Stan Gertzman, Jim Kirkpatrick, Milton Nowell, Jim Clark and Dave Reid.

For the prosecution will be: Luke Corbett, John Allred, Dick Tuggle, Frank Schrimsher and John Smart.

Jim Fasul is serving as sheriff. Dwight Cranford is serving as clerk. Angel" Sunday night by Mrs. Marion Fitz-Simons.

A capacity crowd is expected for the "trial." Students have been urged to come early in order to be assured of obtaining a seat.

Each year the fraternity elects a chief defense counsel and a prosecutor to play the principal roles in the mock trial. These men spend weeks in preparation for the event, which has both entertaining and educational aspects.

Months before the trial, a coordinator is appointed by the chapter to be responsible for setting up an incident and to find a suitable (and cooperative) defendant and murder victim.

MOCK TRIAL IS TONIGHT

Diana Johnson 'Death' Case In Court

(Phi Alpha Delta legal fraternity each year sponsors a mock trial featuring prominent campus personalities as principals. The following story is connected with the trial scheduled for today.)

Miss Marion Fitz-Simons faces trial tonight on a charge of first degree murder in connection with the brutal and bewildering slaying of Diana Johnson during the final act of "Look Homeward Angel" Sunday night.

Mrs. Fitz-Simons
. . . accused

Miss Johnson, who played a minor role in the Playmakers' production, was killed by a heavy flowerpot thrown by the defendant during a scene where the boarders were being chased from the stage.

The beautiful, dark haired girl, who had been chosen 1958 Yackety Yack beauty queen and Miss Chapel Hill of 1958, died of severe head injuries backstage. Neither members of the cast nor the audience was aware of the tragedy until after the final curtain.

Sheriff Jim Fasul, who at first theorized the death was accidental, uncovered evidence which led to the arrest of Mrs. Fitz-Simons. The defendant is the wife of dramatics professor Foster Fitz-Simons.

One of the stranger aspects of "backstage murder" is that even up to the day before the trial, no mention has been made by either Solicitor Luke Corbett or Sheriff Fasul about the motive for the killing.

Sheriff Fasul hinted when asked about the motive that jealousy might be involved in the case.

"I'll give you a hint though—there ain't much a jealous woman won't do," Sheriff Fasul told reporters after Mrs. Fitz-Simons' arrest.

Because of a widespread interest in the case and the extensive coverage it received in the press, Defense Attorney Stanley Gertzman seriously considered asking for a change of venue.

When asked yesterday if he still planned to make such a motion, Gertzman said, "I certainly will not."

"As I said before, these charges are so utterly ridiculous and without foundation that both Mrs. Fitz-Simons and myself are anxious to have the case tried as quickly as possible in order that she might be cleared of this unfortunate occurance with dispatch," Gertzman said.

"I am surprised that the state even chose to prosecute this case seriously," he said.

Solicitor Luke Corbett, however, told newsmen in his office yesterday that he intended to press for a conviction of first degree murder which carries a possible death penalty.

When informed of Gertzman's earlier statement, Corbett refused to comment, but indicated that on the basis of the state's evidence he found it rather difficult to believe that Gertzman would have an easy time convincing a jury of his client's innocence.

FOSTER FITZ-SIMONS
. . . involved in case?

Voir et dire examination of the jury will be held today at 2 p.m. in the Manning Hall Courtroom.

Judge Reid Thompson of Pittsboro will preside at the trial which is slated for 7:30 tonight in the Manning Hall Courtroom. Officials of the clerk's office said that a capacity crowd of onlookers was expected for the trial and that it would be wise for those interested in the case to come early in order to be assured of a seat. He pointed out that some judges do not allow onlookers to stand in the courtroom during the trial.

INFIRMARY

Students in the Infirmary yesterday included:

Constitution

Somewhere in the student constitution of the University there is a clause saying that the Student Legislature is the supreme legislative body of the University of North Carolina student body.

Several paragraphs below this there is a short statement about the IDC in which it states that the IDC is responsible for the mechanics of dorm government and welfare.

Within the past few months the Student Legislature has created committees to study washing machines, trash cans, and paving, and if the need which is there shows up will soon create a weather stripping committee for three dorms that need weather stripping.

The IDC in the meantime has entirely restructured its judicial system, has instituted a broad intramural program, and is currently working on the rules by which dormitory residents live.

In short, the IDC is beginning to look like the Supreme Legislative Authority, while the student legislature is beginning to look like a dormitory investigating squad producing many committees and very little action.

Moreover, the hyperabundance of legislative committees indicates a need for reorganization of the Student Legislature. Student Body President Don Furtado at the present time has to make more appointments to positions than he has time for considering his other duties. He has absolutely no way to keep tabs on the myriad of committees that have been appointed by the Student Legislature to tell anyone how many and what committees are operative.

There seems to be indicated a need for some organization to take some of the burden off the president. Perhaps this can be in the form of a hierarchical system of committeee and sub-committees, in which Furtado could appoint the committees and the committees appoint the sub-committees. In this way, Furtado would not have to ask someone the question, "How much experience have you had with the use, cost, location, and disposal of trash cans?"

WRC

The Women's Residence Council, which is something less than to be desired when the questions of individual freedom and regulations come up, has an intelligent proposal before itself when it meets next week.

The proposal to appropriate money from each dorm resident to the WRC to be dispensed centrally is a good idea. This way both small dorms and large can derive equal benefit from the money turned in, the small dorms will not have to suffer for the lack of size, and the large ones, which usually end up with a surplus, will not be harmed by the move.

The question the WRC is currently wrestling with is whether to turn any central surplus to dorms on proportional basis of population or on an equal basis. There are two answers to this dilemma. The first is an answer if the money is returned. If it is, then it must be given to the dormitories in the proportion that it first was collected. If the money is not returned, a residence council surplus could be established to be used for extra events.

This type of idea is a good one. There is a great need for centralized programming on the campus.

Why?

Why in an auditorium that seats as many people as Memorial Hall does is there but one water fountain?

And why does the fountain deliver water only at a dribble?

Rule's Roost

Paul Rule

Jingle bells! Jingle bells! The panorama of Christmas shopping is on again. Mom, with smiling face, charges toward the stores, preceded by carefree, laughing, kids and followed by scowling Dad. He only came along to carry the credit card.

Well, in the true spirit of commercialized Christmas, we're making out our list of appropriate gifts for Santa to distribute in his jet sleigh on Christmas Eve.

Here's what we're giving so far:

To John Foster Dulles — accomodations at a Washington hotel in case he arrives back in town after the new Congress meets and there's not a soul around whom he knows.

To Paul Butler, Democratic Party chairman— a hi-fi recording of "Are You From Dixie?"

To Vice President Nixon — a bullet-proof car and a road map showing roads in South America.

To President Eisenhower — three dozen golf balls — each bearing a picture of Harry Truman.

To Maj. Gen. John P. Medaris, chief of the Army's space project — a ticket to the show at Morehead Planetarium — if he can't get to the moon, at least this will give him a chance to see what it looks like.

To Krushchev — a leather-bound, engraved, copy of "Doctor Zhivago."

To Republican congressmen — a new book entitled, "Ten Best Ways To Stand In Line At An Unemployment Compensation Office."

While we're on the subject of Christmas shopping, here are a few "Rule's Roost" gift suggestions for the man or woman on your list who "has everything:"

A new book by an eminent X-ray technician entitled, "Inside John Gunther."

A set of monogrammed tooth brushes. (You'll save money here if hte person you're giving them to happens to be named Dr. West.)

A roll of Tums equipped with silencers for the man who can't burp after every meal.

We hope these ideas will help, but remember, it's not the gift that counts, it's the money behind it.

"I Don't Think They Want Me In There"

Dear - - - Columns Cause Humor

All of us enjoy reading "Dear Abby" and "Dorothy Dix" in the daily newspapers. A few days ago Saul Pett came out in The Washington Star with a satirical version of the advice to the lovelorn column. Here are some of his efforts:

Dear Know it all:

Lately my wife has begun to look fat and sloppy but I don't know how to tell her. —Wordless.

Why not try, "Dear, you've been looking fat and sloppy lately. — KIA.

Dear KIA: My husband hasn't worked in 23 years because he's an incurable alcoholic and he chases women and our eldest son takes heroin and our daughter is a kletomaniac and to make ends meet I work for a bookie and to combat loneliness I date other men but now we are about to be evicted from the vacant store where we live with six in laws. Can this marriage be saved? —Concerned

Dear KIA: I have been going with a boy 28 years but he keeps putting off the big questions. How can I get him to the altar? —Getting Impatient

*Have you tried a simple fireman's carry? —KIA

Dear KIA: My husband returned from a business trip to Paris last week bringing his secretary some black lingerie and six ounces of perfume. He brought me a cook book. Does this mean anything?— Suburban Wife.

*You must learn to curb your suspicious nature. KIA

Dear KIA: I have always tried to be a devoted wife but my husband keeps losing his temper. He punches me and kicks me and knocks me down and twists my arm behind my back. Who shall I complain to? —Distraught.

*The state Boxing commission. KIA

Dear KIA: Recently my wife went away for the weekend to visit a sick girl friend, she said . . But after she left and invited us to a then the girl friend phoned shortly skiing party. Should I go? —Undecided

*Yes. Either way its a snow job. KIA.

These bits of wit are highly humorous, but behind the answers to these hypothetical cases lies a basic human error. It is indeed terrible to contemplate the situations mentioned. But it is even more appalling to examine the type of answer given. You'll note that the mythical supplicants in this piece wrote with a childlike faith that all would be right and that a remedy would be provided by KIA. This optimistic attitude is good. However, the people involved turned to the wrong source for their solutions.

Other society, represented by KIA, offers no help to the lovelorn, only scorn and cutting humor at the victim's expense. This is because so much of society is made up of individuals who are hiding the candle of their collective goodness under the proverbial bush, afraid to bring it into view for fear someone will doubt it . . Instead, they choose to assume a mask of insolent unconcern and biting heartlessness . . . This is a false and utterly indefensible position. No one can really put a damper on any one else's happiness. Some may try to make a person feel bad because he expresses joy, but the attackers will find themselves having a hard time keeping their own inner good from responding and coming forth. Pessimism is an enforced state of mind, assumed by those who are too cowardly to admit they're normal people and by those who desire attention and seek to get it by being bitterly nonconformist. People who thus fool themselves are pathetic. Anyone with insight is mentally down-grading such a person for this obviously false approach to life. So, in the desire to protect himself from pain and to be a respected member of society, the "bitter one" becomes an object of pity.

Is it really worth it? Why hurt others by insolent or indifferent replies to honest inquiry, as in the case of KIA. Why retire into a claustophobic little world, shutting oneself off from all but a select few, just for the misguided satisfaction of being different. You really aren't, you know. There are so many people doing exactly the same thing that we might think of society as an aggregation of small cliques (of all sizes and constituency) each of which considers itself unique and which regards everyone else as "The mass." How unutterably asinine, if you'll pardon my french.

So you really want to be different, eh, be admired and respected by others? Okay, I'll let you in on the hot poop, straight from the Big Bopper. All you've got to do to really make a splash in this pond is to try reflecting good. Show that inner light, that joy and tenderness and compassion that you're slyly concealing in your egotistical little heart. It's there, whether you want to admit it or not. It's really not such an effort once you relax and hang loose. Of course, some unenlightened soul (bless his black heart) isn't going to recognize your genuineness, and he'll undoubtedly give you a hard time, but this is to be expected. People sometimes don't accept goodness at face value. They've got to examine it and make sure you have no ulterior motive first. But watch the happiness in their faces when suddenly they realize that you're not after their hide—that you're really trying to help. Why, you'll be a public hero.

To be perfectly truthful, we're so busy looking after our own interests that when we cross paths with some individual who is interested in others we are overjoyed. It's like finding an oasis in a dry region. Such people are sought after, eulogized and aggrandized.

We're all products of one omnipotent Mind, so we are basically very similar in our goals and needs. The road is so much smoother and the load so much lighter when shared with others. We've got all humanity with which to share our joys and sorrows. Commpanions are all around us, so why not accept them and quit holding everyone at arm's length. (a stiff armed position is very tiring.) There's always someone to enjoy our triumphs and to bind up our wounds when we goof. When we climb into a box, "they just ain't nobody to help us." So let's quit ducking and admit that we have everything to gain and nothing to lose.

All right, the sermon is over. Deposit your money in the collection plate as you leave, if you please.

Survival

Sidney Dakar

An interesting case could be made over the point of whether everything will really "come out all right in the end." That is to say, will man always continue to inhabit this planet as he has for the last tens of thousands of years? We could even go so far as to surmise whether this planet that we call earth will always remain intact. We sometimes forget that our earth is only a small speck in a Galaxy which is very small when compared to other still more distant and larger Galaxies.

If we could stand as a disinterested spectator at some distant point in space, we would discover that our earth is so small. We would have to look for our earth as we look for a small cell in a large organism and we would need one of the strongest microscopes just to see this little cell. As we were looking at this little cell we call earth we would not be able to see why this little cell could not just simply disappear, like a grain of sand when it is swept from the beach into the ocean, or like a blood cell that has been destroyed by a virus.

I certainly do not know of any infallible natural law that says that man shall somehow always manage, that he simply must manage, to continue his existence on this planet. To say that we will remain here just because we always have is the most unsound of all arguments. Fate has always been precariously balanced on the scales of Chance and there is no evidence to indicate that it will ever be otherwise.

Our dissipation could take various forms. We could go in a day, a month, a year, a hundred years, or we could go with the speed and ease of a candle being snuffed out. This last split second method would seem to be the worst way, but on second thought this method has many "advantages." Within a split second during our sleep in the dark of night all of us would simply cease to exist. There would be no pain, sorrow, or worry. This would be infinitely better than if we were to suddenly realize that all of us were sterile, or, to have to stand helplessly and watch our children being born without hair or limbs or eyes or brains, or, to realize that blood and bone cancers were slowly, silently and inexorably making shells of our bodies that would eventually crumble.

We know that many species of beasts fish and foul have long since disappeared in the distant eons of time. Of course we like to think of ourselves as much more intelligent than the extinct beasts and of course we are. But, how intelligent is intelligent? Intelligence is a relative thing. Many stupid men, by our standards, have been able to solve some problems, yet our most intelligent men have no solution to many of our current problems. And of course the example of the dinosaur shows all who will look that much more than mere brute force is necessary in the struggle for survival.

Will man be able to respond to the ever increasing challenge to his very existence? As one author has said, "the challenge is great, but history won't excuse the inadequacy of the response by the vastness of the challenge." One day our earth may suddenly just disappear in one blinding flash. It could be because of our intelligence or lack of it, or, because of that once in a million chance event. Thus after thousands of years of questionable glory, which have not occupied one second on the clock of the universe, Homo sapiens would be no more. Comfortable feeling isn't it?

A Letter

Dear Anthony Wolff:

In spite of your efforts to thwart it, I think you're going to find that drama is a movement that is here to stay. True, it has been put down in its time by various fanatical groups, but it always came back bigger and better than ever, and it now has all the earmarks of being firmly entrenched in our civilization.

To never read your column was a firmly established custom of mine until today when I managed to wade through your review of LOOK HOMEWARD ANGEL (heaven certainly blessed you with a long wind!), and I found it, to say the most, obvious. Your maniacal idealism and your utter incapability to objectify your opinions, it seems to me, are a threat to your sanity. And this reminds me of a passage from The Great Gatsby: "there is no difference between men, in intelligence or race, so profound as the difference between the sick and the well." Catch?

Face it, LOOK HOMEWARD ANGEL is not a good play — it's an imitation, but Mr. Davis packed the largest theatre on this campus for three nights (almost a spectator for every word in your column). He did a good job with poor material, and the actors, all of them, certainly measured up to the character they were playing. Pure art, remember, is an elusive thing, and for this reason, every theatrical experience is only an experiment. Your righteous indignation reminds me (in the words of Aldous Huxley) "of an ungifted artist denouncing the scapegoat whom he has chosen to take the blame for the lamentable consequences of his own lack of talent."

On Kasper

Wilma Dykeman & John Stokely

(This is the conclusion of an article on the segregationist John Kasper which appeared in a recent issue of The New Republic.

It remained for Kasper's star witness to make the loftiest statement, however. Tall, graying, suntanned, retired Rear Admiral John G. Crommelin, of Wetumpka, Alabama, unsuccessful candidate for Alabama's Democratic nomination for Senator and Governor, former staff member of the McCarthy Committee, testified that Kasper had first come South at his suggestion. He though Kasper well versed in the Communist-Jewish conspiracy. He described Kasper as an intellectual Robin Hood, with the ability to express the Constitution in terms of people who work with their hands.

There is some evidence that a few of Kasper's hard core followers also look upon him as a sort of Robin Hood. "We didn't have no education, no way to let those city folks know how we felt," one lean weather-bitten woman said outside the courtroom at Kasper's trial in Knoxville last year, "but now John can speak up for us and tell them about the colored and all that. He's been to college, but he's for us."

Looking at the other aspect of the Admiral's statement, its anti-Semitism, in the past the South has been relatively free from this virus. But here, again, Kasper has used racial tensions in the hope of dividing and conquering. Where old-line political demagogues used to reenforce their white supremacy appeal by attacking Eastern banks or the big railroads, this personal friend and disciple of Ezra Pound heightens the emotionalism of race by an economic and religious attack on Jews. There is also the possibility, as one man attending the trial observed, that "Kasper couldn't get enough lower-class anti-Negro money, so he had to move up a notch and go after some middle-class anti-Semitic money, too."

Actually, Kasper seems to have embarked on his strange career without special concern for either money or principle, good or evil.

And this is the second fact which emerged at his recent trial: the "why" of John Kasper is the "why" of many dark corridors in our present time, the indifferences which reflect our basic inhumanity, the opportunism which reveals our lack of principle. This "why" is the question beyond reasonable answer, its subject is the man beyond affirmation or negation. He is Nietzsche's 18th Century superman who has now become the 20th Century's hipster.

As Robert Fitch described the hipster in a recent issue of The New Republic: "He is deliberately a non-conformist, an irrational and irresponsible individualist, socially maladjusted and proud of it. But he is not a rebel for some cause of truth, or of beauty, or of justice; he is a rebel without a cause." Or — as in the case of Kasper's crusade for segregation — any cause that seems to further irresponsible rebellion of the moment.

In himself, John Kasper is no longer a particularly potent force. One of the law enforcement officials of Clinton, where Kasper once boasted a ing organization complete with weekly newspaper and treasurer, said last month that he believed Kasper would be in physical danger if he returned to thriving organization complete with weekly newsaway from him with the same emotional violence that had at one time drawn them to him.

It must also be noted that those people in the Southern power structure who are waging a last-ditch fight for segregation have found it convenient to use Kasper as a whipping-boy. Their denunciations of his incitements to violence, their rejection of his raw oratory and the crude following it enlists, provide the foil, the camouflage for their own brand of violence and disregard for law. It has been to their advantage to discredit this interloper's bold anarchy, so that their own defiance and revolt may appear like sweet reasonableness.

The terror of John Kasper lies in what he mirrors. It is the reflection of a segment of our society whose proportions are difficult to assess, but whose reality is undeniable. Perhaps the most chilling moment of that entire week's trial in Nashville came, not during displays of hate literature and descriptions of Kasper's harangues and predictions of violence, followed by the riot at Fehr School and the dynamiting of Hattie Cotton school, but during a summation speech by one of Kasper's lawyers. He said:

I want to make a predicition this morning, even as John Kasper made one over a year ago. If integration comes to Hamilton County and Chattanooga, where I live, I predict there'll be hangings, shootings, dynamitings, and blood will flow in the streets. And you can quote me on that.

Let's be realistic, gentlemen. The people of the South have lived too long under the system of segregation to permit the Supreme Court to tell them thy've got to let their children go to school with the colored. The Supreme Court is not the law of the land — you are the law!

And perhaps more accurately than he realized, he said in his final appeal: "Gentlemen of the jury, John Kasper is as innocent as you or I. I thank you."

Reconsideration Moved On Levy Telegram Bill

By DEE DANIELS

Reconsideration of Ed Levy's bill to send telegrams to Governors Orval Faubus and Lindsay Almond denouncing their closing of the public schools will be the first order of business at next Thursday's meeting of the Student Legislature.

Reconsideration of the bill was moved by Bill Miller (SP), and before any action could be taken on his move, the entire University Party delegation, excepting Gordon Street and Ann Harvey, left the hall.

A quorum was called, and there was found to be less than the requisite 25 members in the Legislature, thus making the meeting carry over until next week.

In other action, a bill to change the Constitution to provide one legislative election in the spring was tabled, as four bills were passed, one by special orders.

Jim Crownover's (SP) bill to create a committee to study the need for washing machines in men's dormitories received special orders and was sanctioned by the body.

The body approved a bill introduced by Crownover, to appropriate $25 to the Dean of Awards for use in printing student government Certificates of Award to all freshmen who maintained an average equivalent to the Dean's List for their first two semesters.

A bill presented by Anne Eckerson (SP), to allot $125 from the Unappropriated Balance to the Carolina Women's Council for their social program, dorm scholarship program and award reception was also approved.

The sum of $100 was appropriated to the Committee on State Affairs for miscellaneous expenses (Smith).

Gordon Street introduced a bill, on behalf of Charlie Gray (UP) and Crownover, to expand the attorney-general's staff in order to broaden its function of investigation to cases of the Women's Council and Student Council.

Modern, Biblical Man Shown In 'Sign Of Jonah'

By PAT BROWDER

"The Sign of Jonah," a modern religious drama, will be presented by the Episcopal Student Congregation Sunday and Monday at 7 p.m. at the Chapel of the Cross.

Written by Guenter Rutenborn, a Lutheran minister of a parish in East Germany during World War II, teh play presents a parallel between post war modern man and the people of the Old Testament cities of Babylon and Nineveh. Bill White directs the Playmaker's presentation to be staged in the Small Chapel of the Episcopal Church.

The drama in a mildly surrealistic fashion presents an answer to the "why's' posed by the Nazi atrocities of the last war.

The cast of 10 presenting roles ranging from Jonah the prophet to the Queen of the South, the mistress of nations, portrays the ruin and degradation of the Nazi terrors in allegory with the abominations of Jonah's Nineveh and Daniel's Babylon.

The scene is a trial, governed by a Judge who is seeking to bring judgment on an unknown defendant in the attempted murder of the three children of Israel in Babylon's fiery furnace.

The crime is also likened to the extermination of the nearly six million Jews in the gas chambers and furnaces of Nazi concentration camps. The witnesses are a Man and a Woman in the Street and the Queen of the South.

These three, through portrayals of their losses, both personal and national, suffered during the destruction by Heil fire of Babylon or Berlin, seek to acuse and condemn the unknown defendant of the inhumanities they had suffered.

A Merchant, portraying the average lost soul of the ravages of war, adds to the accusation. Jonah the prophet sits as jury, and the three Archangels of God, Michael, Raphael and Gabriel, serve as messengers to bear to God the judgment of the court. A prompter interrupts the play at intervals to clear up points of obscurity and to make more clear to the audience the deeper meanings of the play.

ON TRIAL . . . in play

Eight members of the cast of whom are veterans of Playmaker performances. Bob Ketler plays Jonah the prophet, and Art McDonald the Judge. Both had roles in the recent production of "Look Homeward, Angel."

Also fresh from the recent Playmaker production are Herb Drinnon, as the Merchant; Craven Mackie, as Michael; and Doug McDermott as Gabriel.

Post Office To Open Early

The Chapel Hill Post Office will begin opening its stamp and parcel post windows an hour earlier Monday to help take care of the anticipated Christmas rush.

Postmaster Paul Cheek announced the new hours and noted that one mailing window was put under the new hours this Monday. Normally, the windows are operated from 9 a.m. to 5:30 p.m.

The new hours will remin in effect until decreased volume necessitates a change, Mr. Cheek said.

According to the Postmaster, the Yule "rush" hasn't hit the local office yet, although an increased volume was apparent Tuesday.

"It's getting heavier every day," he said.

The opera season opened recently. The stories of the great operas can be found in books at the Confederate Memorial Library.

Four outstanding UNC debators are in New York this weekend for the annual Hall of Fame Debate Tournament.

Tom Long and John Brooks (the affirmative team) and Clay Simpson and David Evans (the negative team) left yesterday for the tournament to be attended by around 70 colleges and universities.

Representative institutions will include: Princeton, Harvard, Yale, the Naval Academy, Boston College and Washington and Lee University.

In 1956, a UNC debate team, composed of Brooks and Sonny Evans ('58), took third place at this tournament.

This year, in New York University's Hall of Fame (the up-town campus), the debate will focus on the nuclear weapons issue. The topic for five rounds of debating is "Resolved: That the further development of nuclear weapons should be prohibited by international agreement."

All four Carolina debators have had several years of experience in collegiate debating and have won various honors in tournaments.

Now in his fourth year of debating, John Brooks headed the Debate Squad last year and is currently president of the Forensic Council (the control body for all debate organizations). One of his achievements was the third place honor he and Evans took at the New York in 1956.

Tom Long, the other member of the affirmative team, took second place honors this year at the Emory Universiyt Peach Tree Tournament. Long, a senior, is in his second year of debating.

The incumbent president of the Debate Squad is Clay Simpson, a member of the negative team at the New York tournament. Simpson has had over two years of debate experience.

David Evans, Simpson's partner on the negative team, has also been debating for two years.

The number of tournaments UNC debators are entering this year has increased two-fold, Simpson (Debate Squad president) commented this week. He also said that the number of participants has doubled.

After the present New York tournament, others coming up next semester include: Marshall Wythe Tournament at William and Mary, Brooklyn University Debate Tournament, Boston University Debate Tournament, ACC Conference Tournament, Capital Hill Tournament at the University of Maryland and the Southern Universities Tournament at Vander bilt (for the top eight Southern institutions scholastically).

Thus far, Universiyt debators have attended: the University of Virginia Discussion Tournament South Carolina Forensic Tournament, Emory University Peach Tree Tournament and the Dixie Classic Tournament at Wake Forest.

Second place honors were taken at the Emory tournament and UNC's novice team placed third at Wake Forest.

Markets go to those best fitted to serve them.

MEN'S APPAREL
149 EAST FRANKLIN ST.

Many great and famous men have graduated from the University of North Carolina. Among them are Frank Porter Graham, Robert Ruark and Thomas Wolfe. Few men, however, have attracted as much attention or commanded more respect than a slightly-built kid from Asheville named Charlie Justice.

Colonial Press of Chapel Hill has recently published a book about Justice, entitled Choo Choo. The book is one no true Carolina fan will want to miss reading. It is brilliantly written by two University graduates, Bob Quincy, sports editor of the Charlotte News, and Julian Scheer, also of the News.

WILL NOT GET NATIONAL FOLLOWING

The book will not go down in history as a great one. It will not enjoy wide national following others will receive.

It will, though, be immensly popular with anyone in any way connected with the University, or the State, or even the sport of football.

This column is not usually dedicated to the review of books. This is an exception, and the book reviewed is expectional. The story is of two things. It is the story of a man and the story of an era.

It is evident after reading the first few pages that much work went into the process of writing the book. These labors paid off. Charlie Justice, Choo Choo, Number 22 . . . is forever captured at his best in its pages.

GOLDEN ERA

We have stated that this book is also the story of an era. For this reason alone it is worth reading. It tells of the other players on those phowerhouse teams of the late 1940's, players like Art Weiner, Ernie Williamsor, Chan Highsmith, Bob Cox, Sid Varney, Hosea Rogers, Walt Pupa, Johnny Clements, and many others.

At the same time the "Justice Era" was in effect on the gridiron of Kenan Stadium, the golden era was just as evident in other sports. There was Hook Dillon in basketball, Harvey Ward in golf, and Vic Seixias in tennis.

The book pulls no punches. Even a Charlie Justice makes mistakes and the good days and bad days are treated with equal fairness. The good days, of course, far outnumber the bad when you're a Charlie Justice.

From the book you discover little interesting facts not generally known, at least not by students attending the University now. You learn that Justice played service ball before entering college, that he came from a family of athletes, and that he was an all-American both on and off the field.

You learn that Charlie Justice was a man first and a football player second. He was one of the greatest team players in the history of football. He had the most pressure on him of any man ever to wear a Carolina uniform.

HAS HUMOROUS TOUCHES

The book contains a goodly number of quotes, and most of them touch on the humorous side. It contains a number of humorous incidents, such as the time a history professor asked that each student in his class vote on a piece of paper for the man they consiered the most important in the country.

The president of the University got 1 vote, the president of the United States got 2 votes, and Charlie Justice got the remaining 23.

Choo Choo tells of the football fever that was present in Chapel Hill, a fever so intense that literally thousands of fans banded together in a caravan to New York to watch their hero face Notre Dame.

Choo Choo, the story of Charlie Justice, is understandingly written by those who knew him. It is a book that cannot be missed by those who love the University, the State, or the sport of football. In it's own way, Choo Choo is a great book.

Carolina's Newest Coach Is Frosh Cage Mentor Dean Smith

By RUSTY HAMMOND

Carolina's newest athletic coach, Dean Smith, is happy to be here and impressed with the University. Smith currently guides the fresh basketballers, who are undefeated, and helps out Frank McGuire with varsity chores.

Smith graduated from the University of Kansas in 1953, and while there played for the Jayhawks in '51, '52, and '53. Dean played his basketball under the watchful eye of maestro Phog Allen, and while he was at UK the Kansans won the National Championship in 1952.

Beat McGuire

The team they beat, ironically enough, was St. John's, who at that time were coached by none other than Frank McGuire. In 1953 the Jays went all the way to the finals before losing to Indiann by a single point.

After graduating, Smith stuck close to the UK campus for a year, serving as assistant coach under Vic Hart. In 1954 he went into the United States Air Force. While he was a flyboy, Smith both coached and played round ball for a year in Europe.

Went To Air Force Academy

On release from Uncle Sam, Dean found his way to another Air Force institution, this time the newly founded Air Force Academy. Again he took the position of assistant basketball coach, in addition to handling the job of varsity baseball coach.

In 1958 he answered Frank McGuire's call to come to Carolina, and here he is. Smith cites the major reason he came to Carolina as wanting to coach and work for Frank McGuire, who is famous all over this nation for his fine teams.

He calls McGuire, "a great leader and its a pleasure to work for him. I'm also learning a lot."

In regard to Air Force Academy teams of the future, Smith thinks they'll definitely be a national power very soon. He cited the fact that the Falcons did much better than anyone expected this year in football. Last year they were 17-6 in basketball.

Smith says school spirit at the Academy is tremendous, mainly because of the small number of students so closely bonded together. Freshmen are required to attend all games at Air Force.

"Carolina A Good School"

Coach Smith stated that "I found out some time ago that Carolina is well known both for its basketball teams and its scholastic rating. Its a good school."

Smith is married and has three children, all under 4 years of age. The latest addition is a 6-months old boy. Will he grow up to be a man like his Daddy? He could hardly aim much higher.

Quigg: "Great To Be Back With The Boys"

By BART FORBES

Joe Quigg's chief claim to fame occurred in the finals of the 1957 N.C.A.A. tournament when his two free throws won a triple overtime game giving North Carolina the undisputed national championship. Joe's superb shooting and rebounding that year played an integral part in the Tar Heels unprecedented thirty-two game win streak.

Now, two years later, the likeable Quigg is back at his alma mater recuperating from a knee injury and assisting Coach McGuire and assistant coach Dean Smith in their rebuilding program. When asked how he felt about his new job, Joe replied, "Just great, it's wonderful to be back with the boys."

Injured Last Year

As most of those close to Carolina know, Joe was the victim of misfortune last year. In one of the Tar Heels' pre-season practice sessions he suffered a painful knee injury that put him out for the remainder of the season. Needless to say, this was a great blow to the team who had been counting heavily on the giant center. Joe was on crutches the rest of the year, and it was the opinion of many that he might never play basketball again.

But the injury didn't hide Quigg's abilities from those who knew how good he could be if he recovered—the professional scouts. Joe was picked up by the New York Knickerbockers in the annual college draft last April. But, hampered by the knee, he was unable to perform at his best in the Knicks' early practice sessions. Still the New York team was not ready to give up on the talented pivotman. So the team agreed he would be better off to take the coaching offer at Carolina and give his knee time to recuperate fully.

When asked if he still hopes to play with the Knicks, Joe replied, "Yes, I certainly hope so. It all depends on the knee. I think it has improved a great deal. I think it'll come around. The Knicks want me back in February for another tryout." Quigg went on to say that making the jump from college to pro ball was, "like going from high school to college. The competition is much greater in professional ball. The calibre of ball is also better than college. It's a faster game with a great deal more body contact. Players get away with more on both offense and defense in the pros."

Talking about the chances of this year's varsity Joe remarked that the team has a lot of potential and could go a long way. He said that Carolina's fine showing in the first two games can attributed to improved play on the part of the veterans and the help given them by the sophs. "But, we'll be able to tell more after we play some of the tougher teams on the schedule."

The marked improvement of Dick Kepley in Carolina's first two victories makes one wonder if Quigg hasn't been helping Dick with his play. But Joe declines any credit for Kepley's improvement. As he puts it, "A year's experience has of the hardest workers on the squad. helped Dick a great deal. He is one Puts out 100 per cent all the time. This is the reason for his success."

Helping Hudock

On boy Joe has been helping is the center on the freshman team, Jim Hudock, a hulking 6'6", 220 pounder from Pennsylvania. His shooting and rebounding abilities bear resemblance to those of Quigg, and judging from his showing in his first two games, Hudock, in time, could become as good a performer as Quigg. Joe agrees that, "Jim has a great deal of potential; all he needs is experience."

Quigg, a native of New York, says that he plans to finish his study toward his dental degree here in the near future. He added that when his basketball days are over he would like to make his home here in North Carolina. If he's as good in the dental profession as he is at basketball, Joe will surely bt a huge success.

GRAD CLUB PARTY

The Graduate Club is sponsoring a Christmas party for the 20 children in a special education class at Northside Elementary School from 2 to 3 p.m. Friday.

All graduate students wishing to participate have been asked to meet at Kenan Dorm at 1:30 p.m.

In Two Tourneys

Heels Have Busy Xmas

While most of the student body of the University will be home for Christmas, the Tar Heels will be holiday period.

just as active as ever during the Carolina is entered in two big tournaments over Christmas, one in the home state and one in distant Kentucky.

Next Friday, Dec. 19, they disembark for Louisville to take active part in the Blue Grass Invitational tourney. Entered with them are Notre Dame, Northwestern, and Louisville.

Carolina's foe in the first round is rugged Notre Dame, who last year handed the Tar Heels their worst beating in two seasons in Chicago. The potent Irish return to son, and bring along with them ace haunt the Southland again this sea- Tom Hawkins, one of the top players in the nation. Last year Hawkins collected 31 points against Carolina, and this year he is equally tough.

Notre Dame and Carolina meet again just after the holidays when they tangle in Charlotte Colliseum in a single game.

Louisville is always a threat, especially on their home court. Northwestern may be the class of the Big Ten and the Wildcats already own a victory over last year's ACC champ, Maryland.

Following the Blue Grass event, the Heels return to North Carolina to defend their Dixie Classic championship against some of the finest in the land.

In addition to the always tough Big Four, Cincinatti, Yale, Michigan State and Louisville are entered. Cincinatti, featuring everybody's all-one of the favorites in spite of the fact no out of state team has ever copped the Classic. Michigan State has a player Carolina fans remember from the National Championship of '57—John Green. Green, as a sophomore, was a thorn in the side of the Tar Heels who eventually went on to win the national crown.

Carolina's first-round foe is Yale, said to be weakened considerably by graduation. Last year's fine Eli star Johnnie Lee is among the missing.

So, while the students are eating Christmas turkey the Tar Heels will be hitting the tournament trail, playing in five contests before school starts again in January.

EXPLAINS SCHEDULING — Chuch Erickson, University of North Carolina athletic director, explains the system of scheduling football games in today's Tar Heel.

Athletic Director Chuck Erickson Explains Scheduling Techniques

By ELLIOT COOPER

Carolina's 1959 football schedule released earlier this week is hte result of hours of work on the part of Athletic Director Chuck Erickson. Without realizing th problems created by this time-consuming job, Tar Heel football fans may be prone to wonder about why the schedule is not balanced or why some teams do not play us on a home-and-home basis.

For Erickson there is a one word solution, "conflicts." Sitting in his office watching the snow falling outside and wondering how he was going to get his car home before it got completely snowed in, the Athletic Director said, "You just can't imagine how many conflicts there are in trying to get a schedule which will please the students and also give the necessary financial return."

Notre Dame Game

The first question that comes to mind after seeing the 1959 slate is why isn't the Notre Dame game a home game next year. Before attempting to answer this question it was necessary to look at the schedule itself.

Sept. 19 — Clemson (home)
26 — Notre Dame (away)
Oct. 3 — N. C. State (home)
10 — S. Carolina (home)
17 — Maryland (away)
24 — Wake Forest (away)
31 — Tennessee (home)
Nov. 7 — Miami (away)
14 — Virginia (home)
21 — Duke (away)

With the schedule in front of him Erickson began, "First of all it is not desirable to have more than five home games per season. If the Notre Dame game were a home game it would mean that we would have four straight home contests, and that definitely is not good. For these reasons and also because of conflicts on their schedule we are going to play in South Bend next year."

Why Not New York

It is a well known fact that the Notre Dame contest is a pretty fair football game in addition to being good at the gate. With this fact in mind Erickson was asked why not play the Irish in New York and draw even more people. The man behind the desk quickly squelched this idea by mentioning the fact that the New York Yankees will probably be using the stadium for baseball.

So we play Notre Dame in South Bend next year.

From this topic the discussion changed to why must Carolina meet State in Chapel Hill every year. "Originally," Erickson answered, "State wanted the game played on a home-and-home basis, but when they found out they could not take care of it they asked us to take it every year. Last year we played six home games because of State's desire to change the site."

To compensate for meeting the Wolfpack here every year, Erickson is working on a plan whereby the Tar Heels will play a team away for several consecutive years. Under this arrangement next season's game with South Carolina will be the Gamecocks last appearence here for several years. For South Carolina the '59 game will be their third straight here, so they are due for a return in Columbia.

The only major change of opponents next year finds Miami taking the place of Southern California. This will be the big away game next season, and in Erickson's words, "a good trip for the kids."

"Not Our Problem Alone"

"Scheduling is not our problem alone," he continued, "it's everyone else's problem. One change may cause 100 changes across the country. Our's worked out good this year, but you ought to see some of the others," as he pulled out Georgia Tech's and Oklahoma's slate for next season.

The personable director stressed the fact that there are literally hundreds of conflicts that arise in trying to plan a football schedule. He chose the problem caused by Thanksgiving as an example. "In the old days we used to play Virginia on Thanksgiving Day, and it was really a big game. Now, however, it's not so good since Duke is the big rivalry."

Still on the subject of Turkey Day Erickson pulled a composite for the next several years out of his notebook. "In 1960 we are going to be forced to play on Thanksgiving weekend or play our first game before the opening of school. That's the way the calendar works out."

"We are working on games for '63 and '64 now; we don't know who will be playing for us, but we do have a good idea of who they'll be playing against."

Antiquated Woollen Gym Seating Problem

By DICK BARKLEY

During this 1958-59 basketball season, the University of North Carolina will play fewer home games than any other major college or university in the country. Only six contests, all with conference members, are slated for Woollen Gymnasium. The reason: Financial situation.

The seating capacity of Woollen is 4,800, quite small in comparison with other arenas in this area. For many games, only half of the student body is allow to attend due to lack of seats. Games with Duke, Wake Forest, and N. C. State are always sellouts, and many students are consequently shut-out.

Student Sees 4 Games

With a six game home schedule, the average student sees only four games. When we consider that this institution produced the basketball champion of the nation only two years ago and still ranks as one of the larger names in the cage world, the situation is ridiculous.

The fact that the students are unable to see all the home games presents further argument for a larger home slate.

Three other ACC schools, Virginia, Clemson, and South Carolina, have even smaller gyms than we have here. But they somehow manage to stage eight or nine home games each season. Taking a look at the "Big Four," we find:

Duke Indoor Stadium; 9,000 capacity; 5,275 enrollment.

Wake Forest Coliseum; 8,500 capacity; only 2,459 enrollment.

N. C. State Coliseum; 12,500 capacity; 6,215 enrollment.

and North Carolina "Band-Box"; 4,800 capacity, 7,513 enrollment. This makes about as much sense as does the ACC tournament.

Need 8,000 Capacity

What is needed, certainly, is a new gym with a capacity of at least 8,000. Of course such a project would involve plenty of dollars, but at one time of another, Duke, Wake Forest, and State have managed to "get it up."

On Monday night, Kentucky played Duke in Durham. The crowd of around 5,000 was disappointing to say the least. Kentucky Coach Adolph Rupp said afterwards that it was the last time he was bringing his team to Durham. Why? Not enough profit.

Should Kentucky, last season's NCAA champion, come to Chapel Hill (and they surely should), the result would be the same, and worse. But with a guarantee, such a fine event could be arranged. So how do we promise a "guarantee?" One solution comes to mind, more could be found if needed.

Each student here at Carolina pays a matriculation fee of $73.50 a year, of which part pays for membership in the Athletic Association. The student has no choice in the matter—he must pay to enroll. Some of these persons never go to a game. But the majority do attend, when seating space allows.

It Takes Money

To bring an outstanding team, Kentucky, Notre Dame, Indiana, or the like, to Chapel Hill would incur an expense and profit guarantee of around $5,000 for the visiting team. Now let's say that the small sum of $1.50 be added to the formentioned matriculation fee. There's very little difference between paying $73.50 a year or $75.00. With 7,513 students participating, a total of $11,320 would be thrown into the Athletic Association "kitty." This would be enough to bring not one—but two outstanding teams to the campus.

GRAVELY TB PATIENT AND VISITORS—Mrs. Lois Bishop of Raleigh, center, a TB patient at Gravely Sanatorium in Chapel Hill receives a visit from William E. Thompson, left, President of the Bank of Chapel Hill, himself a recent patient at Gravely, and President William C. Friday of the Consolidated University of North Carolina who is 1958 chairman of the Christmas Seal Sale Campaign.

Friday Pays Yule Visit To Gravely TB Patients

President William C. Friday on a pre-Yule visit to Gravely Sanatorium on the eve of the 1958 Christmas Seal Sale campaign in North Carolina called on Mrs. Lois Bishop of Raleigh, typical of the thousands of Tar Heels who have tuberculosis. Friday is chairman of the drive this year.

Mrs. Bishop knows what it means to be among the 90,000 Americans TB strikes each year regardless of age, sex, race or economic status.

A TB patient at Gravely Sanatorium in Chapel Hill, Mrs. Bishop, age 30, was found to have TB by the Wake County Health Department in 1956.

Today, aided by modern treatment methods, most patients can be "cured" in a matter of months. Mrs. Bishop, however, was not so lucky. She has had drug therapy and one operation and still faces many more months of drug treatment and probably another operation before her disease is expected to be controlled.

This, in itself, is a tough problem but Mrs. Bishop has other anxieties to overcome which threaten the effectiveness of her treatment. She finds it hard "not to worry" about her four young children who had to be placed in boarding homes.

The outlook for Mrs. Bishop's eventual recovery is good but she will not be able to "forget her TB" even after she returns to her family because there's no certain or permanent cure.

That having TB is a "life-time proposition" is well understood by W. E. Thompson, president of the Bank of Chapel Hill. He was a student at the University in 1918 when his TB was discovered. Since he has suffered two relapses — in 1924 and 1958.

Thompson is quick to point out that there are 1,750,000 ex-TB patients like himself who must take "special care of themselves" to avoid relapse. From this standpoint alone TB is a tremendous public health problem.

Said Thompson, "If everybody could have a little experience with TB there would never be any problem raising money for research and eradication."

Bill Friday, state Christmas Seal chairman, agreed. "Now I really understand what the statement, 'Every six minutes, every day, one American breaks down with TB,' means," he said.

Christmas Seals fight TB by supporting research and programs aimed at preventing TB, finding cases, and helping TB patients with their problems befroe, during, and after treatment, Friday explained.

Superior Students Program Presents Greater Challenge

By STEVE GERSHENSON

Five years ago the University inaugurated a program for those students who, by virtue of native ability and high scholastic records, would benefit by instructuion at an appropriately advanced level.

Professors Edward A. Cameron (math), Everett Hall (philosophy), James King (history) and William Wells (English), initiated the project and taught the basic courses. These professors felt, ". . . that wide variation in ability and preparation among entering freshmen . . . is such as to render very difficult the maintenance of instruction and standards at a level appropriate to the better students.

This situation has often resulted in top students wasting time in courses planned and conducted to fit the ability of the average.

"The core of the academic program was to consist of two semester courses in English, history of wetern civilization and mathematics, and a one-semester course in philosophy to be given in the first semester. These courses were to be based upon and to cover approximately the content of English 3 and 21, social science 1 and 2, mathematics 15 and 16, and philosophy 41. However, it was anticipated that the level of treatment and the amount of material covered would exceed that usually achieved."

To teach the courses mentioned at a level of maturity proper to the ability and preparation of the students was a primary aim of the program. A secondard objective was to investigate and develop natural interrelationships among subjects studied. It was thought that the course in philosophy might serve as an integrating force.

The preliminary steps in selection were based upon high school records and recommendations of school principals. On the basis of these, 50 freshmen were invited to "qualify" for the program by taking a battery of tests.

On the basis of the results of these tests and their high school records, 26 students out of 40 tested were selected for the program and accepted. Through the years the program has expanded from the original 26 until how it encompasses about 50 students.

Special Group's Study Plan Covers Wide Academic Area

The first English course taken by the special students emphasized composition, with class discussion, based upon students' themes, about techniques of exposition. During the semestor, the students handed in papers on topics assigned in their other courses, each paper being critically read by the man making the assignment and the English istructor.

The work of the second semester followed the plan of English 21: Chaucer, Shakespeare and Milton.

Although many members of the class demonstrably have profited from the exercise in composition during the fall term, the instructor felt that the benefit to the majority of the students would be materially increased if attention in the first semester were centered upon literature, especially poetry, with exercises in writing as a by-product of the reading.

An intuitive introduction to the calculus, which constituted the major part of the first semester's work, acquainted the student with the nature and significance of that important branch of mathematics. The heart of the second semester's work was analytical geometry.

In philosophy, selections from the writigs of Decartes, Hume and William James were read and discussed. The attempt was made to present each of these authors as expanding a particular method of gaining knowledge into a general philisophy embracing all disciplines.

The social science courses were essentially the traditional college courses on the evolution of Western civilization, with a maximum provision of freedom for the instructor to interpret the story as he saw fit. The approach employed here was primarily ideological.

Course Grades, Opinions Form Program Evaluation

The judgment of the instructors, the grades on the courses and the appraisal of the program by the students has constituted the chief means of evaluating the results of the experiment.

"The collective opinion of the instructors is that the project was successful. We are certain that the students worked harder and learned more than they would have otherwise. We feel that at least some of them have been encouraged to explore more fully the intellectual horizons opened by the various courses. .

"It is obvious that they developed a fine spirit as a class and this aided greatly in their studies. The boys were very cooperative and eager, and it was a great privilege to teach them.

"This is not to say that we are completely satisfied with the program or that we made no mistakes. In some instance we misjudged the ability and maturity of the boys; sometimes our estimates were too high and sometimes too low. The content of some of the courses should be changed somewhat and other details altered. But it is our conviction that such a program for superior students is feasible at the Univerity and is worth doing. With suitable changes and possible extentions, it can not only give participating students a better education, but may also conceivably help to raise standards of undergraduate education generally."

Studet comments were by no means uncritical. The consensus was that attempts at "intergation" had not been completely successful. Some thought this was inevitable, while others thought that a better job could be done next time.

There was a great deal of comment on the desirability of changing the content of English 2. The philosophy course, as was to be expected, was the subject of considerable and varied discussion. The course is not usually taken by freshmen and it represents a more radical departure from the students' past experience than other courses. There were various suggestions, mostly aimed at easing the shock of introducing the students to abstract thinking.

The faculty evaluation of the program was summed up in the President's Report (1954-55) in which the following paragraph appeared:

"We feel that our experiment in this area has been worthwhile and we are encouraged at the possibilities.. We remain convinced of the tremendous importance of providing our best students with the best possible education. We believe that the University can render no greater service to the state and nation than to provide a challenging course of study for these, the leaders of the future."

2 Major Appointments Go To UNC Professor

Three appointments, two of national significance, came last week to Professor Harold D. Myer, authority on recreation at UNC.

The National Committee on aging has named Meyer to a group concerned with establishing community centers and club programs for the aging. He was named by G. Warfield Hobbs 3rd, of New York, the president.

The project is financed by the Schimper Foundation. The National Committee on Aging is a part of the National Social Welfare Assembly.

The second honor is Meyer's appointment, by Charles B. Cranford of the American Recreation Society, to the post of national legislative chairman of the organization. The society is interested in federal, state and local legislation relating to the recreation movement.

A third distinction is the appointment of Meyer as an "Admiral in the Wilmington Navy", given to him by the City of Wilmington when the N. C. Recreation Society met in the port city..

Prof. Meyer is chairman of the Recreation Curriculum at Carolina. He recently completed a research project on recreation for the aging in North Carolina sponsored by the insurance companies of the state.

West Berlin Holiday Is A Lot Like Home—Almost

By CHUCK FLINNER

(Daily Tar Heel Staffer Flinner spent last Christmas in Berlin. Below are some of the things he remembers about a cold holiday in a cold war city.)

Christmas in West Berlin is much like Christmas throughout the United States.

The streets are gaily decorated and well lighted for the holiday festivities. The department store fronts are decorated with Christmas displays that range from Santa Claus to the twinkling stars in the sky. Even the smaller stores help spread good cheer with their displays on a slightly smaller scale.

The children, of course, are the key. Their faces are painted with the expressions of awe, anticipation and merriment. Their red cheeks glow in the cold air as they are pulled from shop to shop by their parents who are making the same last minute purchases American parents find themselves making.

A glimpse at a child standing before a shop window with a pensive expression makes one think of American children who are also dreaming of wagons, bicycles, dolls and other toys.

Perhaps Berliners are not as fortunate as Americans, but their Christmas spirit is certainly not injured. One of the unusual customs of the city is the giving of Christmas gifts to the policemen. Here in America we may be apt to take that cop on the corner for granted, but in Berlin he is well thought of at Christmas time.

One may see a tiny Volkswagen or a tremendous bus pull near the policeman who helps the driver get to work through the heavy West Berlin traffic every morning. Down comes a window and out pops a friendly arm bearing a gift for the traffic director. It may hold up traffic but no one seems to mind near Christmas.

In the evening the policeman who usually walks home to save a few marks must take a cab in order to handle all of his presents.

Such is not the case on the other side of Brandenburg Gate. Some of the homes may have Christmas decorations in their windows and beautiful Christmas candles are sold on the streets, but there is lacking the real holiday spirit of the streets.

The streets are the same as any other day—drab.

East Berliners are Germans, yes, but under a different economic situation. There can be no lavish decorations, no expensive Christmas dinners, no thoughtful gifts to policemen—or women.

On Christmas Eve Berlin becomes quiet.

As a little snow drifts down, the traffic decreases, the shops are closed, the buses have fewer commuters, and the people leave the streets for their homes.

Christmas day is also quiet except for the heavy flow of people to and from their churches. There is some visiting, as in America, but Berlin is reasonably quiet. Christmas night the people appear on the streets again. They come to Kurfurstendamm, the main street, and look proudly in the shop windows. They know that things which appear in those windows from Fords to food are not only for sale but can be bought by Berliners themselves. They walk the festive streets gazing at the crowd, and being happy.

But all in Berlin is not quite perfect. There is the refugee problem, the housing shortage, fear of communism, and some vacant lots still piled with World War II rubble. Perhaps the most impressive Christmas display of all is indicative of both what has been done and what remains to be done.

High in the ruins of Kaiser-Wilhelm Kirche once a beautiful church in the heart of Berlin, stands a single lighted Christmas tree. It stands where once there were stained glass windows. It can be seen either from Kurfurstendamm or from the other side of the Church where there was formerly a nave.

Christmas in Berlin is memorable.

Girl's Letter To Newspaper Resulted In Christmas Edit

Every Christmas newspaper all over the United States reprints an editorial written in response to a simple letter to the editor.

Francis P. Church, according to what has almost become a legend, didn't want to write the editorial. Finally it was assigned to him, and his effort has made him famous.

Below is the letter and editorial which have become as much a part of Christmas as carols and tinsels.

"Dear Editor: I am eight years old. Some of my little friends say there is no Santa Claus. Papa says, 'If you see it in The Sun it's so.' Please tell me the truth; is there a Santa Claus?

"Virginia O'Hanlon.
"115 West Ninety-fifth Street."

Virginia, your little friends are wrong. They have been affected by the skepticism of a skeptical age. They do not believe except they see. They think that nothing can be which is not comprehensible by their little minds. All minds, Virginia, whether they be men's or children's, are little. In this great universe of ours man is a mere insect, an ant, in his intellect, as compared with the boundless world about him, as measured by the intelligence capable of grasping the whole of truth and knowledge.

Yes, Virginia, there is a Santa Claus. He exists as certainly as love and generosity and devotion exist, and you know that they abound and give to our life its highest beauty and joy. Alas! how dreary would be the world if there were no Santa Claus. It would be as dreary as if there were no Virginias. There would be no childlike faith then, no poetry, no romance, to make tolerable this existence. We should have no enjoyment, except in sense and sight. The eternal light with which childhood fills the world would be extinguished.

Not believe in Santa Claus! You might as well not believe in fairies! You might get your papa to hire men to watch in all the chimneys on Christmas eve to catch Santa Claus, but even if they did not see Santa Claus coming down, what would that prove? Nobody sees Santa Claus, but that is no sign that there is no Santa Claus. The most real things in the world are those that neither children nor men can see. Did you ever see fairies dancing on the lawn? Of course not, but that's no proof that they are not there. Nobody can conceive or imagine all the wonders there are unseen and unseeable in the world.

JOLLY OLD ELF
. . . yes, Virginia

You may tear apart the baby's rattle and see what makes the noise inside, but there is a veil covering the unseen world which not the strongest man, nor even the united strength of all the strongest men that ever lived, could tear apart. Only faith, fancy, poetry, love, romance can push aside that curtain and view and picture the supernal beauty and glory beyond. Is it all real? Ah, Virginia, in all this world there is nothing else real and abiding.

No Santa Claus! Thank God! he lives, and he lives forever. A thousand years from now, Virginia, nay, ten times ten thousand years from now, he will continue to make glad the heart of childhood.

Christmas Music Is Old Tradition

By BENJAMIN SWALIN
(Swalin is director of the North Carolina Symphony Society.)

Music has been one of the greatest contributions to Christmas.

Music at Christmas is the international language of all peoples of the Western world. Christ's Mass, which has been a part of the Christian ritual since 200 A.D., has provided the inspiration for some of the world's greatest composers.

Music is perhaps the purest artistic expression of man's emotion, so it is fitting that the music which we play, sing, and hear at Christmas time should express the many moods of Christmas; the reverence, the gaiety, and the spirituality. The great composer Bach believed that music should be an adjunct of and dedication to God, and in the music of Christmas this is truly the essential function and purpose.

There are many types of Christmas music: the hymns of the early middle-ages and the Protestant schism, the Gregorian Chant, the musical evolution of the Catholic Mass, carols, and the oratorio. But it is with the latter two that we today are most familiar.

The Christmas carol is the derivative of two major influences. The word "carol" originally meant a song of joy accompanying a ring dance or circle dance. These carols probably began in the pre-Christian era when the people of Europe celebrated the winter solstice of the sun, Dec. 22, with bonfires to give the sun strength and hasten an early spring. These fires were accompanied by feasting, singing and dancing; and these early worshipers of nature sang carols about the wonders of the earth.

The second stream of influence on the development of the Christmas carol was the processional chant of the monks and priests, and the hymns and chants of the Christ's Mass. These chants were sung in Latin, and thus divorced from the understanding of the common people.

It is quite natural that the common man should combine the religious ceremony which played so large a part in his life, and the old songs of feasting and rejoicing which he could understand and sing.

On Christmas Eve, 1223, a further step in the popularization of Christmas music was taken when St. Francis of Assisi presented the first nativity play that depicted the infant Jesus in the stable. The hymns and lullabies that appeared in the successors to this first miracle play came to be known as carols.

The carols we sing today are descendents of, and often the same, songs that these medieval Christians sang. These two streams of influence also account for the diversity of tone in our carols.

The oldest printed carol is the "Boar's Head Carol," transcribed in 1521, but perhaps much older. It is still sung on Christmas Day at Queen's College, Oxford, when the traditional dish, the boar's head, is carried into the hall. It is one of many carols emphasizing feasting and good cheer as elements of Christmas joy.

Other folk song type carols in the same tone are "Deck the Hall," an old Welsh tune; "Jingle Bells," with its merry repetitions of snow, sleighs and bells; and "'Good King Wenceslaus," a narrative about a good king who aids a poor man, emphasizing the charity and benevolence of Christmas. "Angels We Have Heard on High" is an old French melody; "God Rest Ye Merry, Gentlemen," sings of the tidings of joy connected with Christ's birth.

Many hymns have become connected with Christmas.

"Fairest Lord Jesus" was sung by the 12th century Crusaders in their journeys to the Holy Land. "Adeste Fideles" is an old Latin hymn which is known to us in the translation, "O Come All Ye Faithful."

The pastoral element has become connected with carols. "The First Noel," is a traditional folk carol drawn from shepherd life. Handel, in his famous "Messiah" takes his Pastoral Symphony from the bag pipe music of the shepherds of Naples, who make an annual pilgrimage from the hills to the city at Christmas time.

Carolina's Holly Trail Brightens Winter Scene

By PETE IVEY

At Yuletide it is appropriate to point out that holly has temporarily eclipsed the ivy at Carolina.

It was planned that way.

The 7-miles of "Holly Trail" in Chapel Hill represents a unique gardening accomplishment on this beautiful campus.

The ten years' of careful attention to developing the wintertime potential of green plants that thrive in cold weather—especially holly—is now paying off.

The man in the forefront of the decade of holly planting here is Francis J. LeClair, who came to Chapel Hill after retirement as a horticulturalist band has worked as a landscape artist for the University. Mr. LeClair continues as a landscaping consultant.

The main idea behind the ever green planting, including holly, is to keep the campus fresh and attractive the year-around, and not just in the Spring and Summer.

The holly here is in many varieties, chiefly as foundation plantings, as individual specimens, and in barriers, screens and hedges.

All placed together, end to end, it would mean a line of holly seven miles long. But instead of a long trail in a single stretch, the holly plantings here are mingled with other trees and shrubbery of all the seasons.

TOM WOLFE COMES HOME

Writer's Friends Remember Incidents

By PETE IVEY

Tom Wolfe came home in the memories of a number of classmates and Chapel Hill friends, assembled at dinner in the Pine Room of the Carolina Inn last Friday night.

Paul Green, presiding, explained, "No formal progam is planned here. We will just call on some of the people who knew Tom and ask each one of them to say something he remembers about Tom."

Men with a tape recorder to take down the comments adjusted their apparatus and the guests dined and a few of them indulged in what Green called the "miserable" experience of having to think up a few appropriate words for a short after-dinner speech.

Green announced that the "three Bills" were present—Bill Friday, Bill Aycock, Billy Carmichael. President Friday spoke briefly on the genius of Thomas Wolfe. Chancellor Aycock said, "Wolfe and his family are a growing and enduring family . . . It is not Thomas Wolfe who has grown. It is we who have grown to appreciate him more abundantly."

Paul Green presented Vice President W. D. Carmichael, Jr. as an "apostle of beautification—one who has done more than anyone else to beautify Chapel Hill and many other parts of North Carolina."

What happens in a remembrance session when two people recall the same thing?

Both Billy Carmichael and LeGette Blythe recollected the same incident, and others in the room corrobrated it.

It happened in the class in English composition by Dr. Edwin Greenlaw.

Tom Wolfe arrived late to class, said Carmichael, and his hair was touseled, as usual, and walked in at awkward gait, and fished into a bulky coat pocket and carefully extracted a long role of toilet paper on which there was typing.

"Sir, I owe you a word of explanation," said Wolfe to Dr. Greenlaw, and to the class. "Last night I was working late in getting out the Tar Heel, and couldn't get to write my theme until after midnight. The stores were closed and I couldn't buy any paper to write on. So, what I have done is write my theme on the only paper that was handy, and here it is."

Dr. Greenlaw, unruffled, bade him read the manuscript. Half way through it the professor called for a halt. "Mr. Wolfe," he said, "'I will observe that from the quality of what you have written it is certainly typed on the right kind of paper."

Blythe who spoke a few minutes later said he had been cogitating on the same happening. "But, as you can guess, Tom hadn't really given out of paper. He wrote it that way as an act to get a laugh."

Wolfe pictured himself in his novels as "lonely, depressed, despised," said Blythe. "But that was not the way he really was. He was the most popular man on the campus, into everything."

If you saw a "knot of people on the campus, laughing uproariously, and you walked to the group to inspect it, you would find in most cases that Tom Wolfe was in the center of it, telling one of his big lies."

Albert Coates, law professor who was a classmate of Wolfe at Chapel Hill and a roommate at Harvard Law School, remembered Tom Wolfe as editor of the Tar Heel.

"We had a bad season in football," said Coates. "Some people seemed to think that the trouble arose from the 'Tar Heel' not generating enough spirit for the team. So the Tar Heel was blamed, made the scapegoat. Tom came to my room one night before the VMI game. He said he was going to cover the VMI game himself. When the Tar Heel reported the game, which was won by VMI 40 to 0, a typical Wolfe sentence describing the game went like this, 'Halfback Leach of VMI went around the Carolina end for 45 yards, only to be dowed in his tracks oy a carolina tackler.'"

Dean Corydon Spruill, another classmate, recalled Tom Wolfe, "the serious student of Greek, a man whose efforts showed the influence of what he had learned from Greek form and discipline."

Fred Cohn of Raleigh made a revelation not known by many people. Tom Wolfe once was up before the student council. With another upperclassman, Wolfe took a freshman out on a cedar bird hunt, what today is something like a snipe hunt. It was considered to be a violation of the anti-hazing rules. But Wolfe was exhonerated by the student council.

Fred Wolfe, Tom Wolfe's brother and the sole surviving member of the Wolfe family, came from Spartanburg with his wife.

Fred Wolfe said, "I was six years older than Tom, and I tried to boss him, and I got away with it for a long time. But not after he had spent his first year at Chapel Hill. After that he was independent."

Presiding officer Paul Green said Tom Wolfe once paddled him in a graveyard initiation near Chapel Hill. "He didn't spare me, and I hated his guts for a good long while," said Green. "But now I have forgiven him."

Mrs. Paul Green, the former Elizabeth Lay of Chapel Hill, worked with Tom Wolfe on the Tar Heel. "I remember waiting at the Tar Heel office when he came in one night," she said. "He was running. He was always late. He took on a lot of things and it was more than he could do. He had a staff on the Tar Heel, but he finally would write it all himself at the last minute. I wrote occasionally about co-ed activities, but he usually wrote most of that too. He seemed to know more about the coeds and what they were doing than I did."

As Mrs. Green sat down, Paul Green, the toastmaster, said, "That was Elizabeth Lay Green. She did all right."

Carolina Women's Council Fills Gap In Dorm Service

By SANDRA WHISNANT

The newly established Carolina Women's Council has filled a gap in serving the women's dormitories both socially and educationally.

Though it's not a policy-making group, the council necessarily functions in promoting active dormitory programs and in promotmoting interest and participation in extra-curricular activities.

In addition, the council works jointly with other campus organizations in sponsoring dorm and campus events.

To keep up with events on campus, the council hears at its meetings reports from the University Club, the Women's Athletic Association and of other student government committees and special activities.

Besides the social function of the council, high scholastic standards are being encouraged and promoted. But this promotion is more than just a policy statement. Scholarship is going to rewarded this spring through a special cup for the dormitory of Chapel Hill Club with the highest scholastic average.

Another phase of the Carolina Women's Council will be noted in the spring when an award will be made to the most outstanding senior dormitory or Chapel Hill Club girl.

Some of the council's work so far this year has been: promotion of homecoming displays in the dorms and work with the Interdrmitory Council in sponsoring Beat Dook floats.

In the annual fall elections, the coucil assisted dormitory girls by writing letters of endorsement and by helping out with publicity.

During Orientation week, a dormitory breakfast was held by the council. As a follow-up to orientation, the Carolina Women's Council made arrangements so that Dean of Women Katherine Carmichael could meet all new coeds.

Weekly meetings of the council are held in the Grail Room of Graham Memorial with two representatives from each women's dorm and from the Chapel Hill Club.

Heading the council for its initial year is Sue Ballantine. Assisting here are: Joe Pattison as vice president; Mary Morgan, secretary; and Jacki Turner, treasurer. Two advisers to the council are: Mrs. Martha DeBerry and Mrs. William B. Aycock.

Controversy At Seminary

By GEORGE W. CORNELL
Associated Press Religion Writer

Democratic rule, proclaimed as a hallmark of Baptists throughout their history, is at the heart of a conflict today that has shaken their most venerable institution.

And it has reverberated across the whole protestant theological realm.

Ordinarily, even when one hem inary professor is fired outright, it causes concern among colleagues around the country. But last June, the Southern Baptist Seminary at Louisville, Ky., fired 13 en masse.

The rafters have been resounding ever since, and the end is no: yet.

Aside from the peripheral issues the crux of the explosion was over who was to control the seminary—the faculty collectively, or its administrative head.

Some paradoxical factors are involved.

Dr. Duke K. McCall, the seminary president, has been one of the most stalwart Southern Baptist defenders of teaching freedom—of an individual church scholar's right to explore truth as he see: it.

In fact, the Louisville seminary, the oldest and largest in the denomination, has been attacked by some Southern Baptist pastors and laymen as being too liberal—for allowing too much diversity of ideas.

Yet, in the present disturbance, the ousted professors had called Dr. McCall's administration high handed and autocratic, in so far as general policy-making was concerned.

It also was rumored that he would manage to prevent the American Assn. of Theological Schools, the interdenominational accrediting agency for seminaries, from probing the affair, since he was its vice president.

Yet he himself asked such ar inquiry.

This week, the association investigation committee issued its report, critizing the dismissal procedures by Dr. McCall and the trustees as too hasty and without full hearings, and asking that amends be made within a year.

Chapel Hill Choral Club Plans Yule Concert

The Chapel Hill Choral Club directed by Dr. Joel Carter will present its annual Christmas Concert in Hill Hall Tuesday, Dec. 16, at 8 p.m.

The program, the sixth in the Tuesday Evening Series sponsored by the UNC Music Department, will consist of the first three parts of Bach's "Christmas Oratorio." Written in 1733-34, the oratorio is divided into six cantatas, each supposed to be performed on a different day beginning on Christmas day and ending on Epiphany.

Seven members of the group will sing solo parts. Robert Melton, resident at Duke University Hospital, will sing the tenor role of the Evangelist. All the alto solos will be sung by Betty Jean Smith.

Dr. U. T. Holmes, Kenan Professor of Romance Languages, will perform the bass recitatives.. Barbara Peacock will handle the soprano recitatives.

Other soloists are UNC graduate student Marvin Tatum, bass; Beth Diaz, soprano; and David L. Vaughn, graduate student.

Lee Bostian, graduate assistant in the music departmet and regular accompanist for the Choral Club, will play for the soloists. He will be joined by Kay Knight in a two-piano arangement of the orchestral accompaniments for the choruses.

Dr. Glenn Watkins, UNC assistant professor of organ, will play for all the recitatives.

Was Mona Lisa In Family Way?

NEW HAVEN, Conn — (AP) — Mona Lisa was pregnant, an English medical authority said last week.

And that was what her smile was all about.

Dr. Kenneth D. Keele of Ashford Hospital, Middlesex, told a Yale audience he thinks Leonardo Da Vinci was trying to portray the pregnant state of woman in his famous painting.

Planetarium Show Briefing Offered To School Children

School children will receive greater education and spiritual values from "Star of Bethlehem" at the Morehead Planetarium this year under a new pre-attendance instructional plan.

The plan was conceived and prepared by James W. Batten, former science teacher and school principal who is now a Morehead Planetarium narrator while working on his doctor's degree at the University. It is designed to complement the instruction pupils usually receive from teachers before attending a Planetarium program.

Basically, the plan is furnishing teachers, who have made reservations for school group attendance, materials which will help the student either review or acquaint himself with geographical locations and definitions of astronomical terms used in "Star of Bethlehem."

Before attending the program, the student will become familiar with the planets in order of their distances from the sun and with the meaning of such things as latitude, longitude, comets, novae, and retrograde motion. These are only a few examples.

Mao's New Commune Plan Means End Of Individual

By J. M. ROBERTS

Associated Press News Analyst

People familiar with Chinese character and Chinese traditions are convinced that Mao Tse Tung will not make his new commune system stick indefinitely.

Stalin tried it with the Russian peasants who were accustomed to being ground down by their landlords and the royal overseers, and he couldn't do it.

There is no reason to believe that Mao will fare any better with a highly individualistic people who for centuries have let the world revolve around the family and its garden plot, rather than vice versa.

Mao is trying to take millions of people away from their homes and villages and resettle them in barracks on the job. Wives work at assigned tasks, teams do the housekeeping, and there are no more private gardens.

"Individuality has absolutely no place," says The People's Daily, Communist Party mouthpiece. "No longer does one find the phenomenon in which workers are members of the working class only when they are working and free people when they are off duty. Now there is all-round party leadership over the production, life and education of the worker masses."

That does not sound like the end of individualism in China, but the beginning of the end of Mao and the Communists.

Chinese nationalists believe that have done would have built up so nothing the Communists could much revulsion—and eventually so much revolution—against themselves.

Stalin and his succesors had to yield in the matter of garden plot ownership and turn progressively toward more "capitalistic" practices.

Mao had to do the same thing several years ago with regard to private loans for farming and home development. Why his party now reverses itself again, ignoring both its own and Russia's lessons, is not clear.

Mao may take the children and raise them in nurseries so that their care may not detract from worker attention to the economic program. But the wails of the Chinese rachels will be heard over the land, and their tears will one day undermine his attempts to reduce the people to nothing but horsepower.

GEORGE HAMILTON IV
. . . from UNC to CBS

Hamilton Hits Top In D. C.

The purchase of a ukelele at the age of six started a modern Tar Heel troubadour on his way to television fame.

George Hamilton IV, native of Winston-Salem, N.C., has gone a long way since then.

The young folk singer and guitar player was born July 19, 1937, and attended schools in his home town. He had one year at Carolina, where he was voted the outstanding pledge of the year in Kappa Alpha fraternity, then journeyed to the nation's capitol to study TV production at American University.

An admirer of the "Grand Ole Opry," George often persuaded his parents to put him on a Friday bus bound for Nashville, Tenn., so he could attend the "Opry" sessions in person.

George's radio and television experience include work at stations in Winston-Salem, the campus radio station in Chapel Hill, and Washington, D.C. Last November he was catapulted to fame after appearing on the Authur Godfrey Show, and after his recording of "A Rose and a Baby Ruth" sold over 1,000,00 copies—100,000 of which were sold within two days!

While still in high school, George formed his own hillbilly band for entertaining local groups, and decided he wanted to become an entertainer.

Buyer, Take Another Sniff— Smells Ain't Always Parisian

WASHINGTON —(AP)— An annual Christmas message from the Federal Trade Commission:

Beware of fly-by-night peddlers who offer you fancifully labeled "French" perfume at a rare bargain price.

The stuff may never have been closer to Paris than New Jersey.

The commission says every year it gets itself set for Christmas perfume complaints, and these show that "once again the wording of the ads and labels is more flagrantly fragrant than the perfume."

It recalled that one company in Newark said its perfume was "Fabrique Avec Essence importees de France" worth $25 a bottle, whereas the truth was it ordinarily sold for $3 and was made from "essence importees de somewhere west of Newark."

Youngsters Learn Languages Early

By VERNA SHMAVONIAN

"Bon jour, madame," chorused te fourth grade students recently when Mrs. Marian Walter visited their class at Hillcrest School in Burlington.

This incident is the result of a new development on the North Carolina public school scene: elementary school children undertaking the study of a foreign language—and showing good grasp of the subject.

The Burlington students and several other North Carolina school groups are becoming bilingual through the efforts of Mrs. Walter and the staff of WUNC-TV, the state's pioneer educational television station.

Since late September Mrs. Walter has been conducting "Rendez-vous en Francais," a language course for children, given on Channel 4 every Monday, Wednesday and Friday mornings at 11 o'clock.

Emphasis is on the spoken language, and everything said on the program from the first day has been in French. This differs from the usual high school or college French course, in which beginners are drilled on reading, writing or grammar exercises.

Never Translates

Mrs. Walter does not translate and she as underlined heavily her instructions to classroom teachers "never to translate." Thus the children learn French the same way that they learned English, hearing words and phrases and then repeating them.

Mrs. Walter uses songs, games, pictures and puppets to make clear what she is saying. Two of her most valuable teaching aids are puppets Jean and Marie, who also "speak" only French. She also illustrates much of her conversation with clever sketches on the blackboard. Although Mrs. Walter often repeats a word or phrase, the context and pace are so varied that the program remains fresh and interesting.

For instance, boys and girls watching "Rendez-vous en Francais" through December will learn to talk in French about Christmas presents and trees, the Nativity, and about clothes for the holidays. They will also learn a French Christmas carol. But interwoven with this exciting fare will be a study of arithmetic combinations, vocabulary review, and several new verbs.

One Of Several Shows

The program is one of several "school-related" shows telecast by WUNC-TV every week. It is on the suggested viewing list for principals and teachers who wish to introduce foreign languages to their students via television. With this kind of informal arrangement, that is no official registration, it is difficult to know how many schools are taking advantage of this unique opportunity. However mail response has been encouraging from teachers, students, and from adults who are following the series at home. From Sanford, one mother writes:

"I have only just begun simple conversations in French with my own four children. They have never heard any foreign languages spoken and think it strange coming from Mother whose only apparent accomplishments are cakes and cookies . . With the world growing smaller by the hour, we Americans are foolish indeed not to prepare our children properly . . . Sanford schools don't carry "Rendez-vous en Francais," but I am going to talk to the principal and teachers, and perhaps even to the PTA . . . . May I compliment you on your presentation of "Rendez-vous en Francais." You have the most cheerful an refreshing smile. The children must love you."

From a fifth-grade student at Hillcrest School came the following letter: "I sure did enjoy your visit to my room. I'll keep on watching you on television and try to do what you told me about trying not to think in English to speak French, but to think in French to speak French."

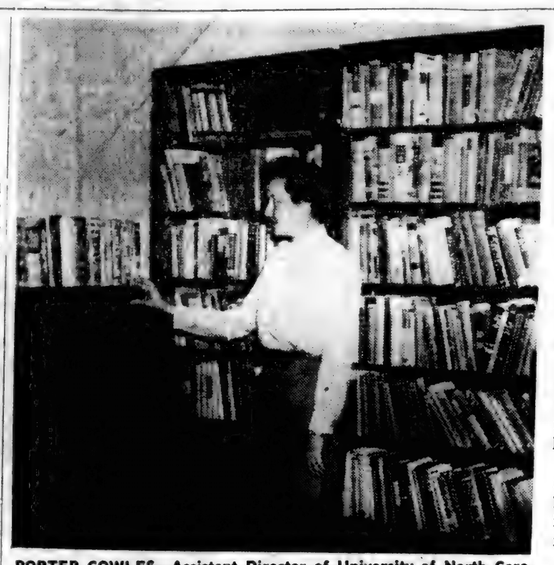
Mrs. Walter and the staff of WUNC-TV hope that the response to "Rendez-vous en Francais" will be great enough to warrant a repeat of this first-year course, and possibly an intermediate French course and an elementary Spanish course on television next year.

Well Qualified

Mrs. Walter is very well qualified to teach both French and Spanish. She has a knowledge of 10 languages and has taught French over a period of years to kindergarten, elementary school, high school and college students. She learned French as a child, studied in France on a Fulbright grant, taught English in Nicaragua and has cooperated in setting up language laboratories at several colleges. She currently is completing the requirements for a Ph.D. degree in Romance languages at the University of North Carolina. "Rendez-vous en Francais" is a course she has written especially for children from the second to the sixth grades.

Best Time For Learning

In answer to the educator's argument that there isn't time in the elementary schools for foreign languages, Mrs. Walter says, "Not only is this period recognized as the most economical time to learn languages, but, far from competing with other work, a recent study has shown that children studying foreign languages in elementary schools register higher in all subjects than those not studying it. It must be recognized that words in any language are the most facile material for thought; that they represent ideas. For example, a child learning arithmetic combinations in Frenc, or making the acquaintance of geographical, artistic, or social phenomenon in French, is not only learning them as well as in English, but with a novel and sharpened focus."



PORTER COWLES—Assistant Director of University of North Carolina Press stands beside bookshelf containing some of the hundreds of books published at Chapel Hill in her 25 years with the Press. Porter Cowles Spurns Offers Of Non-Academic Publishing To Stay With UNC Press

By PETE IVEY

Porter Cowles has spurned many offers to take jobs in the non-academic publishing world. Instead, she has chosen to stay in Chapel Hill, with the University of North Carolina Press.

On the occasion of her 25th year with the Press in the University, the board of governors this week made formal acknowledgement of her work here since 1933.

Miss Cowles, who in private life is Mrs. C. N. Pickell of Chapel Hill, has had a part in the publishing of 584 books, supervising the manufacture of most of them.

The University of North Carolina Press was established in 1922 with Louis R. Wilson as director. It was 11 years old when Porter Cowles came to it in 1933. During these 11 years it had published 161 books. Today it has published 745 books.

She is assistant director of the Press and the business manager.. She has served with three directors: W. T. Couch, Thomas J. Wilson, now director of the Harvard University Press, and Lambert Davis, the present director.

The resolution follows:

"The Board of Governors of the University of North Carolina Press takes this occasion, the 25th anniverary of the beginning of her service, to express its appreciation to Porter Cowles for her many contributions to the success of the Press. She began her work with the Press in the summer of her graduation from the University of North Carolina in the class of 1933, and she has served with distinction in every area of its publishing activity, including two exteded term as Acting Director and her present office of Assistant Director and Business Manager.

"While it is difficult to single out individual achievements in her career without appearing to neglect others, it does seem fitting to point to her singular success in maintaining the organization of the Press in difficult periods and in bringing it to its present state of professional efficiency and high morale. Also of importance to the Press have been her successful relations with printer in developing high standards of book production, and especially her friendship with E. D. Fowler, which has been the basis for a collaboration between the Press and the Seaman Printery in Durham from which the Press has profited greatly over the years.

"The Board is proud that Miss Cowles' attainments have been recognized by her colleagues in university publishing, signalized in her election as Secretary-Treasurer and Executive Committee Member of the Association of American University Presses. The Board is happy to know that, although she has received flattering offers from other organizations in the publishing world.

Melachrino Has Universal Taste; Likes Good Melody

By NEIL MURPHY

George Melachrino sat in his dressing room smoking a cigarette and meditating on his new form of music.

"I've a catholic taste in music, I think; that is, a universal one. I like a good melody."

When asked if he thought that the music he plays today will be regarded as the deeply classical music of the future, he said, "Well, a good tune will last. But you Americans have a saying, the proof of a pudding is in its eating.' "

Then Melachrino sang "Chattanooga Choo Choo." He finished with a smile and asked, "Is that a classic? Surely it is. So are the Beale and Basin Street Blues. They will last just as Tchaikowsky will last.

"It didn't seem necessary to tour the U. S. earlier," he said on this, his first tour in the states, "People were buying our records and listening to our radio show.

But, seriously, our tours are just for the purpose of meeting with the people."

Speaking of his competitor in mood music, Montavani, Melachrino said, "Competition? Quite friendly. Why we both went to the same college of music. How could we be rivals? I grew up with him as a boy. He has his way of treating music and I have mine."

Mrs. Melachrino added, "Yes,

Mangum Holds Point Lead In Contest

With only a few months to go, Mangum Dormitory is leading the men's residence halls in the annual IDC-sponsored Outstanding Dorm Contest.

Mangum has a 60 point lead for the award to be given in April.

The Contest Committee of the IDC compiles a point chart from monthly activity reports from each dorm. Points are given for such activities as: intramurals, dorm meetings and parties, and Christmas decorations and floats.

Contest Chairman Caleb White said only three dorms have not surpassed their total number of points for last year. "This is a clear indication that the activities of the men's dorms are increasing," White said.

Standings in the contest through November 1958 are:

Mangum, 300; Lewis, 240; Cobb, 215; Joyner, 200; Winston, 130; Manly, 150; Ruffin, 145; Grimes, 140; Stacy, Alexander, Aycock, 125;

Graham, 110; Everett, 105; B-V-P, Parker, 100; Avery, 80; Old East, 75; Teague, 50; Old West, 20; and Conner, 0.

Selden Reads Dickens' Story Here Sunday

A traditional pre-Christmas program will take place Sunday here when Samuel Selden gives his annual reading of Charles Dickens' "A Christmas Carol."

The program, open to the public, will be given at 4:30 p.m. in the Playmakers Theatre.

It will be the last such appearance for Selden, who is winding up his duties as chairman of the UNC Department of Dramatic Art to join the faculty at the University of California at Los Angeles in early January.

Selden, who is also director of the Carolina Playmakers, has presented the "Christmas Carol" reading each December since 1944, taking over the traditional role which the late "Proff" Frederick Koch had begun.

Two Buildings Named As Hidden Bomb Sites

Two more bomb threats interrupted UNC classes yesterday in Saunders and Bingham.

Dr. Fletcher Green, History Department head, received a phone call about 8:20 a.m. The caller said, "There is a bomb in your building. He hung up immediately. Dr. Green said the voice sounded like an adult male. It could possibly have been muffled, he said.

Dr. Green called Chancellor William Aycock and classes were suspended until the building could be checked out. Classes were resumed at 11 a.m. Dr. Green said at least six quizzes were scheduled for history classes Friday.

At 12:45 p.m. Chapel Hill Police Chief W. D. Blake received the second bomb threat of the day and the fourth call of the two day series. Chief Blake said the caller spoke rapidly and excitedly.

Blake said it was not clear, but the caller said there was a bomb in Bingham set to go off either in Room 228 or at 2:28 p.m. Chapel Hill Police, Chancellor Aycock and others checked out the entire building. There is no Room 228 in Bingham Hall.

A number of people went into the building for various items, such as books and purses. By 2:28 the building was checked out thoroughly and cleared of people. All classes were called off except for an oral examination given to M. A.'s by Dr. C. Hugh Holman.

Chancellor Aycock said the Chapel Hill Police Department had cooperated fully in the searches. Thursday he said every precaution possible would be taken because of the lives involved.

"We will work out some plans to carry out the program with a minimum of interruptions," he added.

UP Walkout Provides Fireworks

The walkout of the University Party delegation to the Student Legislature provided most of the fireworks at Thursday night's meeting.

The walkout came when Bill Miller (SP) moved reconsideration on Ed Levy's bill calling for telegrams to Governors Almond of Virginia and Faubus of Arkansas, defeated in the previous meeting of the Legislature.

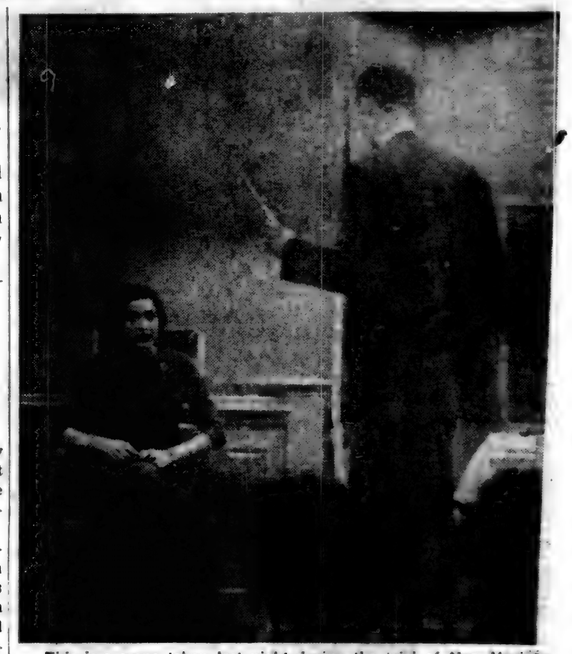
The entire UP delegation, with the exception of Ann Harvey, Sue Wood and Gordon Street, left the hall as soon as the motion was made. A quorum call revealed that fewer than the required 25 members were present, precluding any further action on the motion. The motion will be the first order of old business at the next meeting.

In other action, the Constitutional amendment to provide a single spring election was tabled. A bill introduced by Jim Crownover (SP) to provide washing machines on campus was passed under special orders.

Other bills, including an appropriation of $125 to Carolina Women's Council for social and scholarship purposes, an appropriation of $100 to the Coramittee on State Affairs, and a third appropriation of $25 to the Dean of Awards for the printing of certificates for freshmen Dean's List students were passed.

Gordon Street introduced a bill for Charlie Gray (UP) calling for an expansion of the Attorney-General's staff to include the Women's Honor Council and Student Council.

WUNC-TV, Channel 4, will sign off the air for the Consolidated University holiday beginning Dec. 19 and will resume regular programming Jan. 4.



This is a scene taken last night during the trial of Mrs. Marion Fitz-Simons at the annual mock trial sponsored by Phi Alpha Delta legal fraternity. U. S. Need Not Greatly Fear Youth Going To Communism

By ED GOODMAN

Communist inspired student riots have flared in many parts of the globe during the present decade. This has provoked concern in many quarters that much of the world's youth is being swayed toward the Red camp.

But these fears need not be intense, a Vietnamese student at Carolina, Vu Thi Thanh Mai, commented this week.

Mai Vu witnessed the 1954 Communist capture of North Viet Nam. Her family was forced to flee to the south. Her father, a French professor, had done work for the government.

Many of her classmates participated in the riots that preceded the Communist control. But they did not do so because they actually believed in the Red cause, she said. "They did so because they thought they had to do it to belong to the group."

Mai Vu left Viet Nam in December 1954 to study in this country, she said admitting her unfamiliarity with the Viet Nam of 1958. When she left, she said, the participants in the riots were not very enthusiastic.

Even the students that belong to the Party were not real Communists as far as beliefs were concerned, she said, even though they take part in its activities. The members constituted but a small part of the college population, she said, but were large enough to stage a successful demonstration.

VU THI THANH MAI
. . . saw 1954 uprising

These riots did not take place in the south, she said, only the Communist north. Most people in the south are French sympathizers.

Not only did Vietnamese students not believe in the Communist cause, but most were not even interested in politics. "They were too busy with their studies," Mai Vu said.

Nor do they have much social life.

WORKS YEAR-ROUND PLANNING FOR SHORT SEASON

UNC Cardboard Begins Planning For Next Season

By ED RINER

With the election of its officers for 1959, the UNC Cardboard has started to plan for next year's official cardboard season.

The Cardboard is only in the limelight during halftime in Kenan Stadium for football games, but it works the year-round planning for the short football season.

Newly-elected President Larry Withrow announced a few of the ideas which will be considered for the '59 season. One idea for the organization is the addition of two more colors to the cards used for stunts. Withrow said that these colors—gold and silver — would glitter in the sunlight; therefore, more and brighter colors could be added to the Cardboard's stunts.

From Ohio State the idea of the block section was derived. Withrow explained, "We would form a 'block C' in the center of the cardboard section by having each student in this section to wear a cape around his shoulder. Working in this way the Cardboard could make a large 'block C' in Carolina Blue with a white background." This would not be displayed only at halftime but during the entire game.

Withrow's third idea is an elaboration of a previous plan. That is to coordinate more halftime stunts with the UNC Band. This would entail complete cooperation between the Cardboard and Herbert Fred, band director. "This plan might eliminate some of the confusion caused last year during the half," he pointed out.

The organization is more than just a cardboard; it is another of booster clubs on campus. Everyone at some time or another has seen the slogan card for each football game, which are the work of the slogan committee of the Cardboard.

During the 1958 season some of the slogans were "Stew the Irish" and "Trounce the Trojans." The whole business from the idea—which takes a lot of brain work—to the expense of printing and distribution falls on the shoulders of the staff, he said. In commenting on the slogan cards Withrow said, "They are so popular that many students save a complete set each year as souvenirs."

The Cardboard also joins in the spirit of the annual Duke game by entering a float in the Beat Dook parade.

Withrow said the Cardboard was originated to promote college tradition and to provide color and spirit to the University. In order to cover such a broad field, he said it is necessary that the student body aid with suggestions and ideas. Any one with ideas for stunts and slogans fo rthe '59 season should contact him at Sigma Phi Epsilon, he added.

Another phase of re-organization for the club falls on the physical set up. The offices, on the second floor in the east end of Emerson Stadium, will be arranged for efficient work and more floor space. New cards and paints will also be ordered for next year.

"All in all," Withrow concluded, "the UNC Cardboard will have a new look in '59 with student ideas and student work."

Bomb Scares

Chapel Hill apparently is not exempt from bomb scares, and probably a good many of the bomb scares that have popped up throughout the south are pranks by adolescents whose sense of humor is somewhat warped. And yet, these same adolescent in their zeal to be away from school, cause many people inconvenience, fear, and other difficulties.

The situation on a fake bomb threat is analagous to the little boy who cried wolf. For a while people are going to keep a rigid guard, and, if there is a bomb placed when the guard is dropped, then it will be impossible to make good for the damage. The result is that each threat must be taken seriously, and the guard can never be withdrawn.

It is a necesity therefore to catch the individual or individuals who are placing these calls. It is unfortunate that the local police is not equipped adequately with phone tracing devices, and perhaps the immediate addition of this would be a help. The fact remains that the entire community continues to stand in jeopardy of one irresponsible individual.

It is a necessity therefore to catch the inare a further manifestation of the anti-semitism and violent racism that have precipitated bombings in other states, but it is indicative of a growing trend towards violence that is manifest not only in the south but throughout the country.

Part of this may be due to the issue of the moment, but from one observer's viewpoint, a great deal of this lies in the growing pressure to conform that is sweeping the nation and leaving in its path malcontents who find very few avenues, save violence in which to express themselves.

The ease with which a democracy can turn to a small organized terror is a horrible commentary on the strength of the two major educational forces — the home and the schools.

For the long range, there needs to be constructive work done in the area of building responsible individuals, individuals who are weaned from mother and motherism before they are too old to profit and are consequently helpless.

In the meantime, there is a mop-up job to be done in the areas where would-be bombers or pranksters are having a field day.

The Monster

Chapel Hill was totally unprepared.

The monster came down and blanketed the campus.

People were scurrying for shelter, and once attaining shelter they stripped themselves of rainments which were exposed to the monster.

People changed clothing to avoid the contagion that could result from the after effects of the monster. Strong protective outer garments were brought into action, replacing flimsier, more porous material.

The police and newspapers were beseiged with phone calls and were asked whether any hope of rescue from the monster was in sight.

The facilities of the town could not handle the monster. Cars were left by the side of the road and stores were closed for the day. Even facilities that might have been an aid in some cases closed early to get away into the confines of four solid walls and heat.

People were making speculations as to the future opening of the public facilities, and rumors of death and destruction spread like wildfire.

Communications and transportation were non-existent, and the town was isolated.

The whole color of the town changed. Normal perspective was a thing of the past. People were blinded by the monster, and balance on what used to be firm ground was lost.

Later reports indicated that Chapel Hill was not the only one in this dilemma, but that the entire eastern part of the state of North Carolina was isolated, and any doings were brought to a virtual standstill.

By early this morning great progress had been made in the restoration of normality, but whatever efforts to erase all traces of the disaster were reportedly vain for several days.

Some northern states reported the same type of monster had beseiged them; however, reports indicated that they were better prepared and after brief delays in spots life moved on as usual.

Meanwhile Chapel Hill was left to dig itself out from the monster — not the rubble following an atomic attack, but a five inch snowfall .

Out Of Joint

March Wind

Editor Gans got jumped on this week for referring to the Student Legislature's rejection of a Faubus-Almond censure as "a dark night in the annals of student government."

I also believe that Gans was wrong, but my point of view on the incident differs materially from that which was so eloquently articulated by Nick Bagdasarian and others.

Rather than a "dark night," I would say that it was a TYPICAL night for the Student Legislature. It is a striking paradox of our time that the Chancellor of this University (to give just one example) is far more liberal, daring and courageous than the student "leaders" who are (for the most part) stuffy old conservatives before they reach the age of 20.

I did not attend the debates on Ed Levy's motion to send a condemnatory telegram to Governors Faubus and Almond. I did not have to. Because two years ago, at another major Southern university, I became involved in a similar situation with the identical kind of spineless student "leadership."

It was the time of the Hungarian Revolution, that grim time when Hungarian youngsters were holding off Russian tanks with homemade gasoline bombs. These young Hungarians had been encouraged by our government for years to revolt. And when they finally did revolt, Mr. Dulles and his friends hit the panic button and blandly pretended that this regrettable affair was no concern of ours.

So, a group of impractical hotheads (myself among them) went to the Student Legislature at this other school to seek authorization for a fund-raising campaign to buy the usual relief supplies for the refugees streaming out of Hungary PLUS one rifle to be stuck, bayonet first, on the Austro-Hungarian border as a symbol that some Americans remembered (with shame) our unfulfilled obligation to the Freedom Fighters.

It was my lot to make the presentation before this group of student "leaders," and I noticed that so long as I confined my pitch to drugs, clothes and food these "leaders" were most sympathetic. But when I mentioned the "one gun," an audible gasp went around the room.

A sweet little girl child immediately leaped to her feet and said: "But I thought this was a war for men's minds."

"Yes," I replied, "But there is a rumor afoot that right now the Russians are using tanks."

A boy child took the floor and said: "We don't want to get involved with the Russians. This one gun of yours might make them mad."

"They seem rather angry without it," I said.

The last student "leader" to speak had the most devastating objections of all. "Look," he said, "This whole scheme is impractical. It won't do any good. What are you trying to do—embarrass the State Department?"

"Yes," I said.

"Well," he countered, "We just can't do that. We have to leave things like Hungary to the people who know best." (Leave it to the experts, is what Badasarian said with reference to the closing of public schools in Arkansas and Virginia.)

The upshot of it all was that we finally got the permission of the "leaders" for a fund-raising campaign limited strictly to relief supplies. We hated their guts, but we went out and raised almost 10,000 dolars in less than a week which compared rather favorably with the leaders' achievement in raising 500 dollars (in three months) for a new mascot for the football team.

Believe it or not, I have mellowed somewhat since those ugly days. I do not hate the adolescent jellyfish who crawl away from the tough decisions, who want to leave the difficult plays to the "experts." I pity these characters. I pity them because I now understand that they are the products of a sick society which only a miracle can save.

Last but not least, may I express my earnest hope that Levy brings up his motion at every meeting of the Student Legislature from now on. Levy may well lose every time. The weaklings usually are in the majority. But at least he will force these weaklings to continually face up to their weakness. This is calculated to be a most unpleasant (and educational) experience.

Letters

Editor:

Concerning Nick Bagdasarian's letter in Wednesday's Daily Tar Teel, it seems to me that there are several faults in his letter that lessen the effectiveness of his points.

The general tone of his letter, being one of vituperation and name-calling, is more out of place anywhere in a newspaper than any "romantic" editorial could be.

"But since when," Mr. Bagdasarian asks, "has it been the policy of this state . . . to interfere in the internal workings of neighboring states?" As I see it, the editorial concerned has nothing to do with the policy of the State of North Carolina. Curtis Gans doesn't, I assume, pretend to speak officially for North Carolina or to determine this State's policy. Rather, he is giving his opinion of the Student Legislature's failure to pass the proposed bill to send Governors Faubus and Almond telegrams.

Further, Mr. Bagdasarian instructs The Daily Tar Heel to confine itself to University affairs. Would this fulfill the basic purpose of any newspaper: That is, to collect (and interpret) all news concerning its readers. Along the same line Mr. Bagdasarian seems to favor only the "experts" (unnamed by him) to be given the privilege of speaking on public affairs, affairs concerning literally millions of people.

Of course the bill, had it been passed, would not have fazed the intended-recipients, but by killing the bill, the Student Legislature (acting as the voice of the students of the University) apparently condones the actions of the Governors of Arkansas and Virginia in closing their respective schools. Surely the majority of Carolina students are not in favor of such actions.

Although on an editorial page practically anything goes, Nick, as for myself, I prefer more news and less abuse.

John Justice

Nick Bagdasarian:

I fail to see any reason to believe that Gans wants, as you say, government of, by, and for himself. It seems to me that he is stating his views about a specific question. I think that this is not a question of Gans' credibility, but merely the fact that you do not agree with him.

It seems to me that Gans has stuck to the issues and presented his arguments point for point. He has not indulged in the black art of trying to discredit what a person says by attacking the person himself or the way he says it.

Far above any particular question or any particular view, I see an editor with more courage than the lot of people who hide behid flimsy, unconvicted negativism rather than standing on their own two feet and saying something like:

"I am against sending these telegrams because I believe in racial segregation."

I am certain that there are people in the Legislature and in other places who fit this description very well. They are hippocrites and cowards. They do not have the guts to say what they believe. They are afraid they will not be bolstered up by the overwhelming support that their sort requires. I repeat, they are hippocrites and cowards. Whether they are right or wrong, they stand lower than the heels of Curtis Gans' shoes.

Why don't you apply your logic to yourself. Curtis Gans is sincere and honest besides being a crusader, as you pointed out. But you must think he has less conviction than Lindsay Almond. Actually, I doubt if he even tears letters like yours up before he drops them in the trash basket .

"I Don't Think They Want Me In There"

Sensibility And Intelligence

Wallace Stegner

Those who pretend to teach writing are doomed to read a lot of contemporary literature before it is written. Much of what one reads represents not original invention but the tentative stereotypes, perhaps later to be discarded, by which writers learn from the past in order to discover their own way. Occasionally one meets real vigor and originality, an individual rather than a traditional control, and when he does he may suffer the delusion that he can predict the literature of the next decades from these juvenilia of one of its probable makers. But constantly he is asked to predict the private future, the individual talent. Ultimately what young writers come to teachers for is less instruction than reasurance. They will have to prove themselves by what they write, and are braced for the test; but meantime they yearn to be told they are not wasting their time. Whether they come belligerently or wistfully, whether they remain grateful to their literary father-image or whether they eat him as soon as they feel big enough, they all feel that surge of hope and self-doubt Have I got it? And what have I got, that makes me think the world should listen when I take to words?

One dare not predict; even guessing is risky. And yet all one's contact with such a young writer is a weighing and estimating of only two things: the quality of his talent, for which I suppose the contemporary jargon word is "sensibility," and the nature and extent of the discipline he imposes upon it. Teachers arrive back at the unsurprising perception that talent and discipline are both needed; they work together.

First the sensibility. Henry James's well-known advice was to be "one of those on whom nothing is lost." The phrase is both negative and passive, and it incorporates a considerable exaggeration. There is no such person as one on whom nothing is lost; the sensibility is as much for excluding things as for letting them in; the memory is as much for forgetting as for remembering. A man upon whom nothing was lost would look like a besieged and berserk James, his mind and his fiction cluttered with avid gatherings like a house where ancient misers have lived. A filled room is not a furnished room; a notebook, or a notebook mind, is not sensibility.

Instead of being one on whom nothing is lost, I should like to be one who seizes from everything some vivid impression. Much is certain to be lost or thrown away, and what is seized is sure to reflect the temperament that seizes it. Happenings that might provide James with a scene that was subtle, qualified, hesitant, humorous, and complex, a composition of gray on gray, might produce in a Stephen Crane quite another—something intense, distorted to the point of caricature, stripped, brilliantly simple, harshly colored. In either case the creating force is a sensibility capable of both bright awareness and intense focus.

A man born with such sensibility may be a novelist. If he does not have it, the testing bureaus should direct him to another line of work. For though sensibility can be trained and sharpened, it cannot be created or acquired. One is not even always aware when his instrument is working: one has the conviction that Scott Fitzgerald, for instance, very often indelibly registered things he never consciously noticed. Sensibility is not alertnes, any more than it is the notebook method.

Probably it is more than half mere senses, pure acuteness of perception. Ideally, all five senses, and as acute as possible, as acute as Hemingway's nose, Crane's eye, Twain's or Joyce's ear. And the senses go further than the mere recording of images. They lead to extended kinds of acuteness—in James, say, or in Virginia Woolf, to a clairvoyance about human contacts, a recognition of the tiniest stigmata of emotion and response. They also lead to the development of an ear for language: a gift for words such as that of Yeats is sensuous at bottom — a trained gift, but a gift.

There ought to be a poet submerged in every novelist; that is part of what his susceptibility amounts to. And in addition to senses and their psychological, social, and linguistic extensions he needs a memory that spills easy, a memory with a loose top, so that any chance can tip it and send rolling the vast and invaluable supply of what the writer did not know he knew, the store of preceptions he did not knew he had recorded.

Finally, a novelist needs what William James called the primary quality of the artistic intelligence —the knack of similar asociation, the faculty (or incurable habit of putting flint and steel together and getting fire), of putting two people or images or ideas together and getting a sudden depth of focus, a parallax, a deepening of meaning and value. Even form, often held to be the product of the logical and critical functions of mind, is quite as often the result of this incorrigible posing of likenesses, the arranging of things in comparative ways. Narrative form in particular is not always built upon cause and effect, stimulus and response, motive and act, situation and resolution. In such a story as Chekhov's "In Exile," for instance, form results simply from proximity, position, the posing together of two men and two systems of value.

Probably there are other things that go to make up sensibility and that make literary prediction remotely posible. I should be happy to settle for the ingredients I have named, and if I were assured that a student writer had them I would lay a modest bet on his future. But first I would want to watch how he handled himself and his weapons of talent, scrutinize the quality of his control. And control is quite another matter, the topic for another time.

Stagnation

Rita Hinden

Decent people in Britain were shocked to the core when race roting broke out in two British cities last November. Both riots occurred in seedy areas where a large number of West Indian immigrants had found homes during the last few years. The chief culprits appear to have been young men of the Teddyboy type, sometimes coming from other neighborhoods for a "lark." They were not short of money; they had suffered no personal affront. But here at last, so it seemed, was adventure, a chance to win a sense of importance, to stand for once in the limelight. "You think I am a nobody," one of them is reported to have shouted as he struck a defenseless colored man.

Stiff sentences of imprisonment and the pressure of a law-abiding public opinion soon put a stop to the riots. But these incidents have underlined the increasing anxiety which many thoughtful people have begun to feel about developments in our modern industrial societies. There are two contradictory trends at work. On the one hand is the spectacular economic progress of the years since the war, which has meant not merely greater wealth for a privileged minority (as might have been the case in the nineteenth century); it has also meant rising living standards for almost everyone. The strong trade unions and an egalitarian political philosophy (call it "Socialist" or anything else) have seen to that! At the same time, a growing sessitivity of the social conscience has insisted that increasing welfare provisions should be made for the old, the young, the ill, the unemployed, the down-and-out.

Today the whole range of educational opportunities is open to all who can make the grade; there are opportunities for entertainment and leisure pursuits before which our ancestors would have rubbed astonished eyes. What at one time were the preserves of the favored few are now the commonplaces of everyday life for the vast majority.

On the other hand, look beneath the surface and a ferment of discontents becomes visible—not the measurable discontents of poverty, wicked inequalities of wealth, wretched living and working conditions, or opportunities denied, but discontents which are unfocused and inarticulate, defying measurement in any quantitative terms. There is the pervading "apathy," the widespread sense of "purposelessness," the preoccupation with violence in public entertainment, the growth of crime in general and of "outcast" behavior among young people in particular. We know the basic reason, for it has been analyzed repeatedly by social psychologists. "Large-scale industrial societies with their immense bureaucracies, operating . . . in society at large, in industry, in trade unions, and in practically every other institution, do not provide the individual with the companionship, the sense of participation, and the sense of significance which he requires for his well-being. He is a mere number, a client, a cog, a member of an age-group, a holder of an insurance card. In the cold impersonal world, he needs the warmth of cooperation; in a society so large that he cannot grasp it adequately, except in times of crisis, he wants to be implicated in an enterprise which has caught his imagination . . . he longs for ego-involvement."

There is, to put it in a nutshell, a curious schizophrenia in the societies we are creating. Looked at from one point of view, the individual is its darling; from another, he is its victim. Never before has so much attention and care been given to each separate person as in some of the comprehensive welfare states of the West; never before has he had the opportunities for comfort, leisure and pleasure as in our increasingly prosperous and increasingly egalitarian economies. Yet never before has he felt he "counted" so little, or had such difficulty in making any distinctive contribution. The care and attention he receives come when he is ill, or has in some way fallen by the wayside; benevolent social services then rush to his rescue. But let him be well and secure, with his money jingling in his pockets, and society disregards him; the large town in which he lives, the scale of any organization to which he belongs, his status at work, all reduce him to nothingness. He does not know how to fill his leisure hours in any satisfying way. His entertainment is left to commercial interests to provide, and these cultivate his worst tastes and pander to his lowest instincts.

To say that these are, after all, democracies, and if people feel "excluded" it is their own fault, is too facile an argument. Of course everyone who wants can vote in elections, or attend union meetings, or play games at a youth club if he is the right age; but none of this meets the real need of people to "count" and in some way to contribute. This deeper, and only real, meaning of democracy is being list in the problems created by the sheer size of everything. The individual does not feel that he has a signifficant place in our organized social institutions; the authorities which rule his destiny seem far beyond his control. People appear to be divided between those "inside" who have power and responsibility, and those "outside" who have not. This is as true within political parties—even Socialist parties—as anywhere else; they also have "Establishments" of their own. (The spread of the concept of the "Establishment" is symptomatic of our present discontents; everything can be blamed on some anonymous forces which are thought to control everything.) The result is that many people turn inward for their pleasures, presenting the blank face of apathy to the outside world. Or, if they are young nad high-spirited, they turn to the antics of the gang.

When they go out on dates, she said, it is usually their parents' wishes. This is because most marriages there are arranged by the couple's parents, and dating might lead to situations which could upset their plans.

But this is not much of a problem, she said, because "most students there don't think about romance and marriage. Studies are the most important thing to them when they're in school."

In many cases, parental marriage arrangements are mere formalities, she said. "Weddings may or may not come after courtships."

But once marriage plans have been made, they are usually uncontested, she said, because "Vietnamese children respect their parents more than anything else. They feel their parents know more than they do."

Another thing Vietnamese students respect is their studies. They are more serious about school work than Americans, she said, "because it means more to them."

There is a shortage of public colleges in Viet Nam, and the competition for admittance to them or public professional schools is stiff. Only 10 per cent of the applicants are admitted to the crowded, tuition-free public colleges. The rest must pay to attend private institutions.

Much study is necessitated by the difficult scholastic requirements of Vietnamese schools, which Mai Vu said are "harder" than similar American institutions. A junior college there, she said, is like an American college.

When Mai Vi left her country, she indicated that Americans were well liked, especially because of their foreign aid programs.

Some animosity toward the United States, however, had been caused by the building of stores and theaters by Americans which were restricted only to whites. But this ill feeling was not really serious, she said.

"We don't get many of Gleason's recordings in London." Mrs. Melachrino said of the American mood music artist.

Melachrino then added, "He is a great artist but, like all comedians, he wants to play Hamlet. I do especially like his album—what's its name—with all the flutes. Quite good. Maybe he wants to be a musician and I a comedian."

The conductor walked out of his dressing room, sat down at the piano and played a few bars of Rachmaninoff and smiled. Turning to Herman Arminski, his pianist, he said "Not bad at all Herman. It's a good piano. Even in tune."

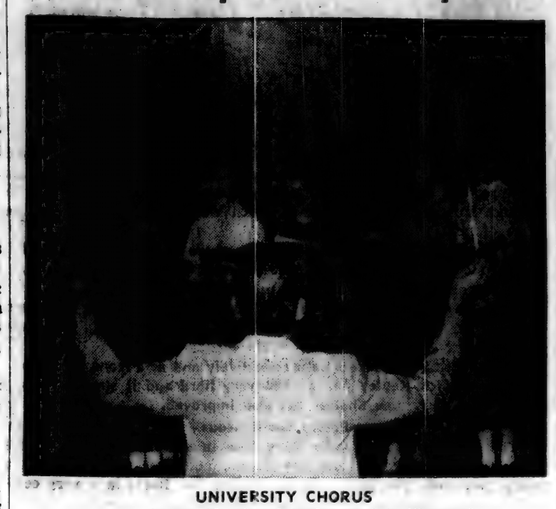
He smiled at his wife and said, "You know, a melody with rythm is the heart of beauty and the beginning of freedom.

"If you will excuse me, I'd like to be alone a while before the concert."

Melachrino walked into his dressing room and closed the door.

Chorus Of 70 Rehearsing Bizet's Opera, Carmen

Metropolitan Opera Star To Sing Title Role



UNIVERSITY CHORUS

. . . . to provide choral background to 'Carmen'

From the soldiers' chorus at the beginning of Act I to the "Toreador, engarde!" in the finale, 70 singers will provide a choral background to the drama of "Carmen."

Rehearsing together for several months under Dr. Wilton Mason, the University Chorus has undertaken a difficult role in Bizet's opera. Not only must the chorus give the necessary commentary to the arias of the principles, but their singing must reflect the highest level of musical ensemble if mood and atmosphere are to be sustained.

For the performance in Memorial Hall Jan. 13, these University students will have the added task of substituting for sets, costumes and all the usual accounterment of stage productions.

The University Chorus was organized by Dr. Mason in the fall, 1956. Since then, the membership has increased from approximately 40 singers to the present full strength of 70. In its two years, the group has presented one concert each semester, performing such major works as "Christmas Oratorio" by Schutz and Honegger's "King David."

Membership in the chorus is open to any student here who is able to read music. Although many music majors belong, most of the members are from other departments.

A Campus-to-Career Case History

John O'Neil likes the interesting contacts his job gives him. At left, he talks with Bill Shaw, Manager of radio station KSFO, about the baseball reporting service John helped develop. At right, he discusses a private-line telephone service with R. E. Kachler, President of The Pacific Coast Stock Exchange, San Francisco Division.

He sells ideas—to sell communications

San Francisco baseball fans don't know it, but they're indebted to John R. O'Neil of the Pacific Telephone and Telegraph Company.

John made it possible for them to get up-to-the-minute reports on Giants baseball games last season. He sold radio station KSFO on the idea of recording inning-by-inning announcements using automatic answering equipment. Fans would simply dial an advertised phone number. The service began last August, and was a big hit.

That's an example of the kind of creative selling John does. "We really sell an idea and then provide the equipment to do the job," is the way John puts it.

John joined Pacific Telephone after graduating from the University of California with an A.B. degree in 1956. He wanted to work into management through Sales and was impressed with the training program and advancement opportunities offered by the Telephone Company.

"As a Telephone Company salesman, I deal with owners and managers of top-level businesses," John says. "Every contact is a challenge to solve a communication problem or to sell an idea for better service. What's more, I'm getting valuable experience that will help me move ahead in the telephone business."

John O'Neil is one of many young men who are finding interesting careers in the Bell Telephone Companies. Find out about the opportunities for you. Talk with the Bell interviewer when he visits your campus. And read the Bell Telephone booklet on file in your Placement Office.

All-Campus Handball Tourney Slated For Early January

The Intramural Department announced yesterday that the All-Campus Handball Tournament would begin around the first of January.

The event, which is open to all students and faculty members, will consist of both single and double entries. Thus far there are 24 single entries and 9 double entries. The tournament will be set up on single elimination basis.

The All-Campus Handball is separate from the point system handball and will not effect the point system at all.

The prizes for the tournament will be trophies to the individual winners and to the winning team in the doubles.

Competition Stiff

Competition promises to be very stiff as Joe Perry, a graduate student with a great deal of handball experience, is expected to take the singles championship without much difficulty.

In the doubles play, Perry and his partner Fred Price are expected to meet with some difficulty when they meet Pete Mullis and Jack LeGrand. The latter are both faculty members. Mullis is in the Physical Education, and LeGrand is in Law School.

Although these two teams are expected to give each other a rough time, they will probable get some additional trouble from the outside. This could come in the form of Phil Blazer and Giles Gaca, or George Knox and Fred Swearingen. The latter pair of teams could cause some real trouble.

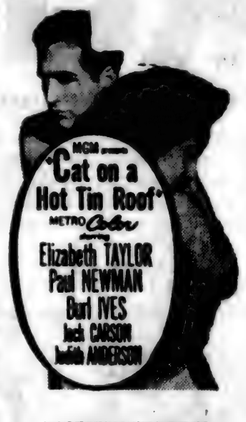
The first and second round play must be completed by January 8. Other deadlines are January 13, 15 and 16.

Courts are reserved by getting in touch with the Intramural Office.

February Draft Will Be 9,000

WASHINGTON — The Defense Department Wednesday ordered 9,000 draftees for the Army during February, the same total as for January.

Draft calls for September been 11,000 a month. The February inductions will bring the total draft since the start of the Korean War to 2,414,430.



"We don't like this long lay-off. It makes us work twice as hard to keep sharp before the next game." These words came from Frank McGuire, and he was speaking of the long lay-off his Tar Heels go through from the Clemson game of last week to the South Carolina game of next week.

"We want to play, because the more we play the better we'll get," McGuire continued. "We have beaten two very good teams, and we need to play as much as possible."

McGuire explained the long draught as coming because the other two home games which Carolina should have would come during this slack period.

In praising his players both collectively and as a team, McGuire said that Dick Kepley has worked very hard and it shows in his improved play. Lee Sheffer has also improved.

Passes Spontaneous

The beautiful passes from Doug Moe in the Clemson game were completely spontaneous, McGuire stated, and that goes to make a sharp ball club. The plays, which put the Tar Heels in a very commanding position early in the second half, were not planned.

"That," the transplanted Yankee continued, "is our style of play. We don't try to run a mechanical basketball team. It is our goal to allow the boys to freely express their talents on the court."

Moe thus far in the season has looked tremendous, and seems to be a good bet as the next Tar Heel All-American. Other players are good shooters or great defensively, but Moe does everything right.

York Larese also drew high praise from the personable mentor. Larese, who is now fighting a not too serious ankle injury, has shown remarkable ability to pass the ball to waiting teammates under the basket and to get loose for easy shots himself.

Donahue May Be Held Out

As for Hugh Donahue, the 6-8, 18-year-old soph center, McGuire doesn't yet know for certain if he'll be held out or not. Donahue is good now, but in another year he could be great.

The teamwork on this year's varsity edition has pleased both the coach and the fans. No Carolina player has had a really big night, but several men have been in double figures both games.

The coach who led Carolina to its first national basketball championship has just returned from a trip to New York City, where he scouted Yale, Carolina's opening opponent in the Dixie Classic.

McGuire reports that Yale is fast, having several good boys. The best of the crop seems to be 6'10" Larry Downes, a senior and co-captain. The game McGuire saw was with Fordham, in Madison Square Garden, and the Elis got beat.

Rough Trip

The bad weather, which has virtually paralyzed all activities around the state, played havoc with the coach's trip. He got in Thursday night at about 3 a.m., and had to fly to Washington and take a train from there home.

Frank McGuire now has a television show on WFMY-TV Greensboro every Sunday night at 6. The show is purely instructional, and has nothing to do with the school. Each week McGuire has a guest. This week it will be frosh and assisting varsity coach Dean Smith who will speak on scouting.

The prime aim of the show is to inform the public about the game of basketball, and will probably enjoy a wide following throughout the region.

Added note: Virginia's Billy McCann, the only coach who has played both Maryland and Carolina, rates the Terps as a better team. Of course, McCann's downtrodden Cavaliers looked much better against Maryland than against the Tar Heels.

Wrestling Match Postponed

Bad weather has forced cancellation of the scheduled varsity wrestling meet with The Citadel in Charleston, S. C., today.

Deep snow and icy roads made it impossible for Coach Sam Branes to take his grapplers further south for their third match of the season.

Those who would have made the trip Curt Champlin, Bill Suttle, Perrin Henderson, Jim Welborn, Ray Russell, Dave Atkinson, Larry Hayes.

Last year the meet was also held at the Citadel with Carolina emerging victorious. The two teams probably will meet later in the year in Chapel Hill when the Citadel invades the north on a tour.

The opening meets earlier in the year for the varsity wrestlers were two convined meets in a double-header at Woollen Gym.

The second team got licked by Washington & Lee, and the first team was edged by Virginia 14-12.

Last year the wrestlers had their finest season in eight years, ending up with a final 6-4 won-lost record.

Clemson Prepares

CLEMSON, S. C. (AP)—Clemson football practice for its Sugar Bowl date with No. 1 Louisiana State opened Friday with the squad at near full physical strength.

The only doubtful player on the Atlantic Coast Conference championship traveling squad of 47 is left guard Jim Payne, who is nursing a knee injury. Sam Crout, a sophomore, may start in Payne's place.

After eight days of practice here to Dec. 20, the players will disperse for Christmas, gather here again for a Dec. 26 practice, then fly to Biloxi, Miss., Dec. 27.

They will work out there till New Year's Eve, when they will have a mild practice in the Sugar Bowl, and stay at the Algiers Naval Station near New Orleans.

Swim Meet With S. C. Called Off

The scheduled swimming meet between Carolina and South Carolina became another victim of the storms yesterday when it was announced that the two teams could not meet today in Woollen Gym as originally planned.

Bad weaher forced South Carolina into postponing the meet which probably will be run off later in the year.

The ACC champion Tar Heels got a big scare from a little school their last time out, but managed to come through.

Carolina's swimming champions got the daylights scared out of them at little East Carolina College before finally emerging victorious 50-36.

The Tar Heels went into the final event, the 400-yard freestyle relay needing a win in order to take the meet. If ECC had won, the meet would have been declared a tie.

The biggest downfall for the swimmers came in the diving and breaststroke events, with ECC sweeping first and second places in each. The backstroke finished in a dead heat between Carolina's Bob Hunter and East Carolina's Tom Sawyer.

Although the tankmen had no trouble in disposing of Clemson last week, it would seem at this early stage of the season that they may not be able to make up for the tremendous losses dealt by graduation last year.

Five Carolina All-Americans were lost through the sheepskin route. Even an impressive array of sophomore talent, led by flash Harry Bloom, may not be able to take ur the slack.

Still, the only big threat on the Tar Heel schedule shapes up to be arch-rival Duke. The Devils were strong last year and their ranks were not so depleted by graduation as those of Carolina.

Last year Pat Earey's crew marched through 11 straight meets and the ACC championships to hand him his second straight unbeaten season.

Larese Suffers Ankle Injury

York Larese, Carolina's promising sophomore basketball player, turned an ankle in practice Thursday and as put on crutches.

The extent of the injury is not yet known, but it is certain that no bones are broken. Larese will probably be ready to go for the next Carolina cage contest, next week against South Carolina in Columbia.

Larese scored 15 and 14 points respectively in his first two games as a full fleged Tar Heel.

The current injury has nothing to do with Larese's bad knees, a factor which kept him entirely out of basketball all of last year.

Coach Fired

MILWAUKEE (AP) — Marquette University's M-Club, an organization of almost 1,000 varsity letter winners, asked the school's board of control Friday to relieve Laurence (Moon) Mullins as athletic director.

Head football coach Johnny Druze quit two weks ago after a disastrous three-year stint during which his teams lost 26 games, won two and tied one.

The Rev. John G. Holbrook, athletic board chairman, said the M-Club made its request in a letter. He said he asked the group's directors to reconsider the request, but they insisted that their request be left on the record.

Frosh Meet Wake Tonight

The Tar Baby basketballers start in with their first Big Four opponent of the season tonight when they take on the Deaclets of Wake Forest at 8:15 in Burlington.

Despite the fact that the Wake frosh have lost their last two games they are still a powerful quintet and definitely the best squad that the Carolina freshmen have faced so far.

Lost Last Two

In their two previous contests the Baby Deacs have gone down at the hands of State, 61-60, and Duke, 76-69. The Tar Babies, on the other hand, won their first games, against Hargrave Military Academy and High Point J. V., by decisive margins.

For the first two games Jim Hudock has been the big gun for the frosh. The 6-7 center dumped in 17 against Hargrave and 20 against High Point before fouling out of each game. Hudock is being backed up in the scorng by Donnie Walsh and Yogi Poteet who have contributed 33 and 38 points respectively through two games.

The star of the Wake Forest team is 6-8 Len Chappell from Portage, Penn. The 240 pound center had a 38 point scoring average in high school and is expected to have a tremendous varsity career. Against Duke he was the high scorer with 27 points.

Added Height

Besides Chappell, the Deac lineup boasts more height in the persons of Gene Compton and Gene Loeffler. These two average 6-6 and supply coach Charlie Bryant with an exceptionally tall front line for a freshman team.

In the backcourt Bryant will should go with 6-0 Dave Wiedeman and 5-11 Billy Packer. Wiedeman holds the South New Jersey high school scoring record and compiled a 30 point average hs senior year. In the losing effort to Duke, Packer and Wiedeman both picked up 14 points.

Tar Baby Lineup

Tar Baby Coach Dean Smith will probably go with the same starting lineup he has used to achieve his first two wins. Starting forwards under this setup would be Ken McComb and Billy Hubbard with Hudock at center and Walsh and Poteet in the backcourt.

Following the Wake Forest game, the freshmen will meet Campbell College in Lillington in their final engagement before the Christmas Holidays. Smith's charges did have a date pending with either the Navy or Maryland frosh for Dec. 19 but this plan fell through.

Carr Named To Head UNC's New $2,400,000 Univac 1105

One of the nation's outstanding authorities on electronic computers, mathematician John W. Carr III of the University of Michigan will be director of Carolina's new Computer Center.

President William C. Friday and Dr. William M. Whyburn, vice president for graduate studies and research of the Consolidated University, announced that Carr will also be an associate professor of mathematics on the Chapel Hill campus.

Carr will be in cargo of the $2,400,000 Univac 1105 Data Automation system, which is scheduled for installation at Chapel Hill in 1959.

The computer has been acquired by the Consolidated University by arrangement with Remington Rand Co., the Bureau of the Census and the National Science Foundation. Its installation marks a significant step toward automation of science for the South.

Carr is a Durham native and a graduate of Duke University, from which he received a B.S. degree in electrical engineering in 1943. His father, John W. Carr II, is a member of the Duke University education faculty.

Though only 33 years of age, Dr. Carr has had extensive experience in the operation of electronic computers.

He was introduced to this relatively new field while a research assistant in mathematics in 1948 on Project Whirlwind at the Digital Computer Laboratory at MIT. He received the M. S. in E. E. in 1949 and spent the following year as a Fulbright Scholar at the Sorbonne in Paris. During his stay in Europe he spent two months with the group at the Mathematical Laboratories, Cambridge University, which had just finished building the EDSAC (Electronic Delay Storage Automatic Calculator), the first electronic stored program calculator to operate. Ideas gained here were applied to the Whirlwind I Computer on his return to the United States, when as a staff mahemaician he had the responsibility for the Library of Subroutines first developed for that computer.

JOHN W. CARR III
. . . to direct UNC computer

He received a Ph.D. in mathematics from MIT in 1951, writing his thesis on a discussion of certain mathematical techniques in solving partial differential equations using high-speed digital computers. In 1951-52, he participated in the solution of some of the first problems presented to the Whirlwind. In 1952 he became a research mathematician at the Willow Run Laboratories of the University of Michigan, directing the preparation for use of the MIDAC (Michigan Digital Automatic Computer).

From 1952 to 1955, he was supervisor of the Digital Computation Department, Willow Run Laboratories, which used the MIDAC in the solution of engineering and scientific problems. In September 1955, he joined the staff of the University of Michigan as assistant professor of mathematics.

During the past 18 months he has served as consultant to the Digital Computation Unit using the IBM-650 and is now participating in planning for using the IBM-704 to be installed in April 1959. On September 1957, he was appointed an associate professor of mathematics.

He has served on the National Council of the Association for Computing Machinery from 1954-56, and as president for the two year term ending in June 1958. He has also served as a trustee of the Society for Industrial and Applied Mathematics. He is now a fellow of the American Association for the Advancement of Science.

At the University of Michigan, his courses have included methods in high-speed computation.

In 1954 he organized the first University of Michigan Summer Conference on Digital Computers. By 1958 this course had grown to over 300 persons (supervised jointly by five staff members) with lecturers including visitors from Germany, Great Britain, the USSR and Ireland. He speaks French and German, reads French, German and Russian and is engaged now in translations of Russian papers in numerical analysis for the National Science Foundation.

Bach's 'Christmas Oratorio' Is Presented By Choral Club

Bach's "Christmas Oratoria" will be performed by the Chapel Hill Choral Club in Hill Hall Tuesday at 8 p.m.

Part of the Tuesday Evening Series sponsored by the UNC Music Department, the program is open to the public without charge.

The annual Christmas concert, one of two major appearances given each year by this community group, will be broadcast by radio station WUNC.

Under the direction of Dr. Joel Carter, associate professor of music at the University, seven members will appear as soloists in the first three parts of Bach's oratorio presented by the choristers.

Tenor Robert Melton, staff member at Duke University Hospital, will sing the role of the Evangelist. Alto solos will be sung by Betty Jean Smith of Chapel Hill.

Dr. U. T. Holmes, Kenan professor of Romance Langues, will perform the bass recitatives. Barbara Peacock of Chapel Hill will handle the soprano recitatives.

The bass aria, "Mighty Lord," will be sung by Marvin Tatum, UNC graduate student from Richmond, Va. Beth Diaz, Durham, and David L. Vaughn, graduate student from Salem, will sing the soprano-bassduet, "Lord, Thy Mercy."

Lee Bostian, graduate assistant in the music department and rekular accompanist for the 35-year old organization, will play for the soloists.

He will be joined by Kay Knight an English major from Osceola, Mo., in a two-piano arrangement of the orchestral accompaniments for the choruses.

Dr. Glenn Watkins, UNC assistant professor of organ, will play for all the recitatives and will perform a transcription of the orchestral "Sinfonia," which introduces the second part of the oratorio.

Mankind On Trial Is Theme In Drama 'Sign Of Jonah'

Mankind on trial, accused by those he has persecuted, and judged by God, forms the theme behind tonight's production of "The Sign of Jonah."

The play will be given at 7 p.m. both today and Monday in the small chapel of the Episcopal Church. Admission is free.

Written by Guenter Rutenborn, a minister of a Lutheran parish in East Germany, the drama portarys parallels of guilt and sin between Rutenborn's war time Germany and Jonah's Nineveh.

The publisher's preface to the script states that into the German war scene "comes the voice of Guenter Rutenborn, confessing his personal guilt for all these atrocities—with none of which he had any direct connection. And he writes a play, 'The Sign of Jonah,' in order to examine in a public trial who in the nation, who in the world, really was guilty."

The blame of this guilt and sin, the preface continues, falls on the shoulders of all mankind as Rutenborn tries to point out in the drama.

Staged in the small chapel of the Cross, the drama uses no backdrops or settings so that an unobstructed view of the altar and cross is before the audience at all times. Director Bill White said that "no settings are used so that the bare and simple meaning of the altar can be free to be a background to the clear and meaningful interpretation of the play."

Even the play at times breaks from the complexities of the modern theater and allow the actors to speak to the audience as themselves.

On the production staff assisting White are Jim Pfaff as Stage Manager; Rufus Russell in charge of lighting; Susan McCotter as mistress; and Tommy Taylor as house manager.

The cast includes Bob Ketler as Jonah; Art McDonald as the Judge; Betty Rhodes as the Queen of the South; Bobbie Hicks as the Woman in the Street; Darwin Solomon as the Man in the Street; Herb Drinnon as the Merchant; Craven Mackie as Michael; Doug McDermott as Gabriel; Bill Smith as Raphael; and Jane Townend as the Prompter.

Recent Chicago Fire Causes Check Into N. C. Institutions

By ROBERT H. BARTHOLOMEW

In view of the recent Chicago school fire that claimed the lives of some 90 people, it is worth noting what is being done by North Carolina instiutions to prevent such a tragedy here.

A recent visit to N. C. Memorial Hospital here brought out some startling facts. These facts are startling because the average visitor to the hospital has no idea of the complex and complete plans that are in effect to protect the patients, the staff and the property of the taxpayer.

A giant modern hospital may very well be compared to a ship traveling through a combat area. In the case of an attack, no person needs to be told where to go or what to do. These actions have been drilled into the people through long months and years.

This is the system at N. C. Memorial Hospital. In the case of a fire, every person knows what he should do. This is not a new system, it has been in operation since the hospital first opened in 1952.

Monthly fire drills are held, both day and night. These drills do not consist simply of a bell ringing and each member of the staff taking his station. Often fires are lit on the hospital grounds and the staff, including nurses, actually use fire-fighting equipment. Also, from time to time, special motion pictures on fire prevention and fire control are shown the staff.

At Christmas N. C. Memorial Hospital is as well decorated as any private home. Christmas trees are seen on each floor and gay ropes of holly and cedar decorate the doorways. However, no electric lights are used in these decorations, with one exception. A lighted tree is in the main lobby, but its lights are disconnected when the information desk closes at night. Dry foliage and hot lights have proven to be hazardous.

A large hospital such as N. C. Memorial has a sizeable group of maintenance men, such as plumbers, guards, electricians, painters and mechanics. These men are the first line of defense against fire. Once a hospital alarm is sounded, this group immediately swings into action with all available equipment. When the fire department arrives, these men retire to a labor pool and await any call for help the department may make.

The labor pool is made up of all persons not needed to fight the fire. If the fire department needs help or patients need to be moved, the labor pool goes into action.

There have been a few fires at N. C. Memorial Hospital, mostly bedding catching on fire from a smoker.

Weather Bureau Indicates Possible Heavy Snowfall In Store For Tar Heelia

The U. S. Weather Bureau at the Raleigh-Durham Airport last night isued warnings of posible heavy snow for the already snow-covered eastern part of North Carolina.

According to the Chief Forecaster, a storm center located in the Gulf of Mexico had failed to develop but that it was highly probable that North Carolina might be dumped with upwards of six inches of snow.

According to the Forecaster, the weather pattern now being formed is unlike that of Thursday morning which positively indicated heavy snowfall.

Snow began late yesterday afternoon in Alabama nad Georgia, with snow beginning in the mountains of western North Carolina about 3 p.m. and extending out as far as Charlotte.

An 8 p.m. Associated Press weather advisors stated that snow was falling as far north as Columbia, S. C., with the note that N. C. was heavily threatened with accumulations of six inches of snow.

The threat of snow, or snowfall, depending upon further storm developments, should be over Sunday night with the temperature expected to drop very low, according to the weather bureau.

Persons have been asked to keep in contact with latest weather advisory as they will become more specific as to the areas and amount of snowfall to expect.

FOUND GUILTY OF MANSLAUGHTER

Fitz-Simons Gets Term In Jury Guilty Verdict

Mrs. Marion Fitz-Simons was sentenced Friday night to a two to three year sentence in Women's Prison at Raleigh for manslaughter in the slaying of Miss Diana Johnson on Dec. 7 during the Playmakers' production of "Look Homeward, Angel."

Judge W. Reid Thompson handed down the sentence after a jury convicted Mrs. Fitz-Simons of manslauhter during the annual mock trial sponsored by Phi Alpha Delta legal fraternity.

Defense Attorney Stan Gertzman said that in consideration of the overwhelming evidence against his client "we were well pleased" with the two-year sentence, but added he planned to appeal.

A packed courtroom waited in silence for 20 minutes before the jury filed in to give its verdict.

Mrs. Fitz-Simons showed no emotion when the verdict was read.

Gertzman, obviously shocked at the manslaughter conviction, immediately made a motion that the jury be polled. One by one the jurors stood and pronounced the verdict individually as the crowd watched in silent anticipation.

During the lengthy trial the prosecution dwelt no the fact that Mrs. Fitz-Simons' diary was discovered after the killing and that in it was a notation in Mrs. Fitz-Simons' hand writing to the effect that she intended to kill Miss Johnson if ever an opportunity were afforded her.

Florist David Evans testifying for the state told the jurors he recognized the flower pot used in the slaying as one which he had sold to Mrs. Fitz-Simons. This evidence given by Evans was considered by Gertzman as the most damaging to his client's case.

The prosecution called witnesses who testified to the fact that Mrs. Fitz-Simons prior to the slaying had threatened Miss Johnson's life with a foot-long hatpin. Mrs. Walter Spearman testified that Mrs. Fitz-Simons told her that she would kill Miss Johnson. Betty Green also testified that Mrs. Fitz-Simons had made similar threats against Miss Johnson's life.

Bob Ketler testifying in behalf of the state said he had heard the defendant threating Miss Johnson.

In a surprise move the defense prdouced witnesses to prove that these incidents prior to the death were not connected in any degree with the slaying itself.

Harry Davis and Foster Fitz-Simons testfied that these threats Mrs. Fitz-Simons made toward Miss Johnson were planned by them in order to help Miss Johnson "get into character" for her role in the Playmakers' production of "Look Homeward, Angel."

Mrs. Fitz-Simons took the stand and testified that the entire affair was "extremely unfortunately" and that the incidents prior to the accident had no connection whatsoever.

"We were only trying to help her," Mrs. Fitz-Simons said.

The defense apparently proved to the satifaction of the jury that the assertions of the prosecution

Dr. Howell Fills Five Difficult Positions; Has Gained Distinction In Each Of Five

By ANN A. SMITH

Professor of English, secretary of the faculty, author of a prize-winning book, world traveller and adviser to foreign students—five people?

No, one person at UNC lives each of these roles. Dr. Almonte C. Howell, a member of the University faculty since 1920, has been noted for his accomplishments in these five areas.

It is impossible to say in which field Dr. Howell has gained the most distinction. He is a man devoted to carrying out the responsibilities of each position. One of his duties as advisor to foreign students is a relatively new job, and Dr. Howell was eager to discuss the challenging task.

At the University there are 108 foreign students at the graduate and undergraduate levels in addition to about 18 people from other countries with whom Dr. Howell is concerned. Thirty-one nations are represented in the UNC student body.

"I want to help these students feel at home and to help the faculty understand the problems of the foreign students," Dr. Howell said.

Asked about this kind of counseling, Dr. Howell told of a young student from Italy who of his own volition came as a freshmen to UNC. He worked 27 hours a week at a job in order to remain in school and made a high scholastic average.

The boy, however, realized that he was doing too much: he couldn't keep on working and continue making good grades. He came to Dr. Howell with his problem. Dr. Howell in his capacity as adviser to foreign students secured for the ambitious student a scholarship which enabled him to work less outside and give more time to his books.

Dr. Howell cited other examples in his dealings with foreign students since he took over the position this fall succeeding Dr. Sturgis Leavitt.

Another achievement this year on Dr. Howell's part has been the establishment by the YW-YMCA of classes in English for foreign students. It was he who suggested the idea which was promptly put into effect.

Foreign students, he explained, read English fairly well but have difficulty in following class lectures. The course is designed to help these students understand spoken English and take notes.

Dr. Howell has learned much about foreign customs in his trips abroad. The recipient of three grants from the Department of State, he has taught in Guatemala, San Salvador and the Honduras.

In 1955-56 he was visiting professor of English literature in the National University of Seoul in South Korea.

At UNC he has two secial fields of interest: teaching English composition to science students and teaching literary aspects of the Bible. Both courses are unique in certain respects.

SSL

Unless somebody does something soon, the weather may have succeeded in doing what the Governor of this state has been unable to do — to make the youth of this state refrain from speaking.

The State Student Legislature has been postponed due to the snow of the past few days. Postponed indefinitely were the words used, but to some postponed indefinitely means cancelled, and that would be something that shouldn't happen.

There is plenty of time between now and the General Assembly meeting in February for the SSL to meet, and nothing should deter the chairman, a student at Duke University, from making sure it does meet.

The capitol may not be available, although since the schools have gone through with the task of getting their presidents' signatures there should be no obstacle in getting the capitol, but if it isn't another place must be found.

If the SSL does not meet, it has a good chance of never meeting again, and an even better chance of the public saying that students don't really want to speak out on issues.

Not only must the SSL meet, but it would be advisable if the chairman would send an inviation to Wake Forest. Apparently the only thing that is holding them back from coming is the fact that the Interim Committee has not issued an invitation. This ought to be done post haste.

The student bodies of many Universities and colleges in the state await with some concern the results of the activity that the Chairman must pursue at the present time. January may be a cold month, but there will be some warmth in consolation if SSL does meet.

University Party

Up until now, the editor has saved his scathing comments for the Student Party, considering that the University Party is almost hopeless, and that any chance for better student government must come either from the Student Party or from a third party not as yet on the scene.

However, there must be a commentary made on the complete neglect of duty the University Party delegation, with the exception of three, showed they were capable of in last Thursday's meeting.

At that time rather than voice their opinions on the Levy Bill, brought up for reconsideration, and with a chance of losing, the University Party delegation walked out of the room, thus making the legislature lack a quorum.

If the University Party cannot bring its membership in full strength to meetings, then it just will have to take its medicine. But the University Party does not seem to have the courage to do that.

The University Party will no doubt have its full membership there at the next legislature meeting, and most of them will be armed to avoid the issue of student responsibility toward higher education, and to vote "no" in a block. Yet, maybe the campus will get wise before too long, and cease electing people who will make a farce out of student government, and perhaps do something to clean up the University Party, and for that matter the Student Party, which needs a little airing also every now and then.

The campus with the most elaborate form of student government in the nation has a long way to go before it has a good, courageous, honest effective student government. Maybe, the student body will exert a little pressure.

Mock Trial

The annual Mock Trial has been held, and the verdict is in. Many, however, were disappointed in the verdict. They wanted to see a "mock hanging".

The World News In Review

Ron Shumate

Possibly the biggest news to those of us here was the snow and the bomb scares.

The heaviest snow in over 20 years in the Carolinas covered much of the two states. Traffic was paralyzed, schools were closed and many people were caught with their summer pants on.

On the local scene, we had 7 inches of the white stuff. The largest accumulation in the Carolinas was recorded at Southern Pines, where 15-17 inches fell. The largest city in the two states had a mere .01 of an inch.

The bomb scares at UNC stirred up no little confusion but no buildings were blown sky-high.

Bingham and Saunders halls were "supposed" to be blown up, classes were suspended temporarily, but no bombs were even found.

Prominent foreign news came out of Communist China, which is manifesting intense interest and activty in the affairs of Africa and the Middle East.

The Peping government seems to be vying with the Soviet government in efforts to influence economic and political development in Arab and Negro countries.

In Communist China itself, a delegation of the provisional and self-declared Algerian government has been received with great fanfare.

Sudan and Communist China have recognized each other and will most likely establish diplomatic relations. This will give Peiping a diplomatic mission deep in the heart of Africa.

The Chinese Communist deputy minister of foreign trade returned at the end of November from a tour of North Africa. He visited both Morocco and Tunisia with a trade delegation and signed trade agreements. During his visit, Morocco and Communist China established diplomatic relations.

Communist China seems to be tryng to establish a big beachhead in Africa and the Middle East.

U. S.-Russia Conflict

The United States Thursday night served notice on Russia and the world that it "will not be deterred by threats" from defending its rights in protecting West Berlin.

The same night, Krushchev said that a western attempt to break through to Berlin by force would bring on a war and the use of Russia's most powerful weapons. But he said he did not think such a war is coming.

He told an independent newspaper in Munich that some hotheads among western military leaders had suggested the use of tanks and troops to open a way to Berlin if necessary.

Krushchev had previously declared that the Soviet Union would stand by East Germany if the United States, Britain and France committed an "aggression" against East Germany. Therefore, his statements in the Munich newspaper's interview only elaborated his previous threats.

Friday, Secretary of State Dulles, after a conference with President Eisenhower, accused Soviet leaders of "contemptuous disregard" for their now pledged word, He appealed for allied unity to defeat hostile threats such as the Communists are making over Berlin.

The U. N. general assembly condemned the Soviet Union and Hungary for repressing the people of Hungary. The two Communist nations said they would ignore the action, just as they have done in the past.

The assembly adopted a resolution sponsored by the U. S. and 36 other nations that also denounced the executions last June of former premier Imre Nagy, Gen. Paul Maleter "and other Hungarian patriots."

Soviet deputy foreign minister Zorin charged at a news conference that the United States brought up the issue only to inensify he cold war.

Hungary served notice it would not enter into coalitions with him on U. N. resolutions stemming from the revolt. Moscow took the same attitude.

Nationwide Accidents

A Navy tanker plane, attempting an emergency landing smashed two houses Tuesday. Its four-man crew and two babies in one of the homes died in the wash of flames from the fuel-filled tanker.

Two others suffered burns and shock.

Wednesday nine persons died when a bomb blasted the headquarters of a religious cult's ranch in the Chatsworth Hills in California. Two of the dead were children, Krishna Venta, leader of the Fountain of the World cult, was one of those killed.

Two members of the cult were responsible for the bombing. Both men died in the explosion.

New Speed Record Set

Wednesday a Pan American 707 jet transport flew from New York to Paris in the record time of 6 hours, 16 minutes. The flight chopped 37 minutes off the previous record set by the Boeing jet two weeks ago. The plane carried a crew of 12 and 101 passengers.

Tail winds, with gusts up to 160 m. p. h. pushed the giant plane on its way. Once it touched a ground speed of 712 m. p. h. Its average speed for the 3,550-mile trip was about 600 m. p. h., including the climb at takeoff and slow down for landing.

The Wall Street Journal published a two sentence editorial to assure Virginia that, indeed, there is a Santa Claus.

"The United States government is estimated to have given away more than 60 billion dollars in foreign aid since World War II.

"Now then, Virginia, what was your question?"

Virginia was the child who wrote a letter to the old New York Sun many years ago asking if there is a Santa Claus. In an editorial now historically famous the Sun assured here there is.

Finnish Communists

The Finnish Communist party is putting on a show of reasonableness in the current political crisis, but President Kekkonen sounds as though he fears the Russian sickle will cut off the little country's independence.

Kekkonen has called on the middle of the road Agrarian party to replace the resigned rightist government.

Communist party leaders have said they will be satisfied, for the time being, just to get the Rightists out, although they do not renounce heir intentions of ultimate control.

Kekkonen has hinted to the West not to try to intervene.

The U. S. has carefully avoided any provocation in Finland at anytime.

The moon probe Pioneer III reached a height of about 65,000 miles before falling back to earth. It never got up quite enough speed to escape Earth's gravitational field.

The rocket was not termed a failure, however. Space officials of said information about the deadly zone of radiation surrounding the Earth would be highly valuable.

Goldfine Indictment

Bernard Goldfine was indicted Tuesday on a charge of contempt of Congress.

Goldfine is scheduled to be arraigned in Federal Court in Washington next Friday morning.

The 18-count indictment was based on Goldfine's refusal to answer 22 questions put to him last July in a sensation-filled House investigation. This inquiry turned up, among other things, evidence that he paid over $3,000 in hotel bills and did other favors for Sherman Adams, who was then serving President Eisenhower as his No. 1 aide. Adams and Goldfine, Boston millionaire born in poverty in Russia 67 years ago, were friends of long standing.

The House voted 368-8 on Aug. 13 to ask for Justice Department prosecution.

Under the indictment now voted by the grand jury, Goldfine could be fined $1,000 and sent to prison for an much as a year if convicted.

He is also under Federal court orders at Boston to turn over books and records of five of his corporations for Federal tax investigation. Another controversial figure in political labor circles, James F. Hoffa, was threatened Thursday by a Federal court. He was told that he may be removed from his office of president of the Teamsters Union unless he and other bosses of the giant union quit blocking and obstructing recommended reforms.

F. Dickinson Letts, 63-year-old U. S. District judge, directed Hoffa and other Teamsters chiefs to obey orders of court-named monitors to accomplish a general housecleaning of the 1½-million member union.

Judge Letts threatened contempt punishment if Hoffa and other Teamsters officials thwart the monitors.

French Walk-Out

Earlier in the week France walked out on a U. N. debate on French-ruled Algeria. Diplomats said eight African countries were working on a resolution to have the General Assembly recognize "the right of the Algerian people to independence."

Five French delegates left the room when the General Assembly's political committee took up the question of what to do about the four-year-old Algerian rebellion.

France had announced the boycott in advance. She contends that Algeria is her domestic matter and notes that the UN is forbidden by its charter from intervening in domestic matters.

Turning to the journalitte field, millions of readers in and around New York City went newspaperless as major metropolitan dailies were shut down in a deliverymen's strike.

Newsstands have been bare of papers for several days now. Ordinarily 5½ million papers are sold daily in the nation's largest city.

The strike was the first in New York City in five years.

New York Cty is the third largest newsaper publishing city in the world. Tokyo leads with a daily circulation of 17 million copies and London is next with 12 millon.

Airlines Strikes

Pilots of American Airlines were expected to strike against the airline, which is the nation's largest in passenger miles flown annually.

At present, Eastern Airlines is the only major airline shut down by a strike which began Nov. 24. Both the International Machinists Union and flight engineers are striking against Eastern, but the Union has said that it has reached agreement in principle with the company on some issues.

In Rome, the council of the Rome Medical Association expelled Prof. Riccardo Galeazzi-Lisi, personal physician to Pope Pius XII, for selling newspaper articles on the Pope's last illness. The verdict means the 67-year old doctor may no longer practice in Italy.

Letter On Student Responsibility

To The Student Body:

THE STUDENT HAS A RESPONSIBILITY NOT ONLY TO HIMSELF, BUT TO HIS FELLOW STUDENTS, AND THE EDUCATIONAL COMMUNITY AS WELL. I maintain unwavering confidence in the student's ability to fulfill that responsibility. This is a belief in potential, though; action must prove what I say is true.

Throughout the past ten years, the United States National Student Association has been steadfastly directed towards stimulation the student to an awareness of his own potential. There exists now a project approaching a logical step in the progression towards the fulfillment of that goal—a project of which UNC should partake to the utmost degree.

USNSA action to improve current educational practices comes as a result of a series of events that has underscored the need for active concern. The White House Conference on Education of January 1956 where USNSA represented and voiced student opinion on proposed educational reforms provided the stimulus for initial exploration into problems confronting American education. In 1957, delegates of the Tenth National Student Congress, recognizing the need for positive action, mandated the national staff to review the present educational system with a view to seeking out mediums for effective student action.

Last year the National Executive Committee of USNSA declared that USNSA activity for the 1958-1959 school year would center on the project theme —the students responsibility—a declaration that we might well think of repeating concerning the goals of student activity on UNC's campus both for the forthcoming semester and for the year 1959-1960. I earnestly urge this be given careful thought by the student body.

This project could be an experiment. We at UNC stand on the borders of a frontier. The potential that exists here in organizing and utilizing latent student resource to increase the student's responsibility for his own education and further for the uality of education on his campus is one that has gone relatively unexplored.

This project could be an attempt to intensify the educational impact of the college experience, to develop in the "average" student, because he is the center of education, a feeling of personal involvement in the processes of education.

Toward this end, student resources must be mobilized to help meet the need for improvement and expansion in higher education. We, in the eyes of USNSA, are one of fifteen pilot campuses selected, where student governments in cooperation with faculty and administration can undertake programs aimed at:

—increasing the number of college teachers.

—increasing the effectiveness of instruction and improving student attitudes.

—increasing the effectiveness of counseling services.

Let's take part in this project! Not trying to "make like" Karl, but I can honestly say—Arist students! all you've got to lose is the "chains" retarding your education. After al,, you're paying for what you get here—let's make what we get here better!

Stagnation

Rita Hinden

(The following is a continuation and conclusion of an article taken from the most recent issue of the Nation.)

It is, then, this problem of size which is bedeviling our modern societies—size and the concentrations of power which are its corollary. If inequalities of wealth were at the root of nineteenth-century discontents, inequalities of power are at the root of our present-day frustrations. Yet in none of our democracies have political parties succeeded in giving tongue to these frustrations and analyzing them effectively, let alone showing what could be done about them. Polities still deal, for the most part, with the problems of twenty or fifty years ago, not with the problems of today. Politicians still talk as if the most important need were to put yet more money in people's pockets. Whatever injustices there are, are seen in measurable, monetary terms —too little spent on this, or too much on that, too low wages or too high profits, too few schools or too many expense allowances. But none of this reaches down to the real sources of the present malaise. None of it talks simply and clearly to the common man, helping him to understand the frustrations which he finds too complex to express and showing the possibilities of a different content to his life.

Why is there this blockage in ideas? Why have our radicals failed so signally to push thought out of its established ruts at a time of such rapidly-moving social change? The trouble is that they have become imprisoned in the past; in Britain—but not only in Britain—we have the strange phenomenon that the more "Left" people have considered themselves, the more unremittingly they have fought against the emergence of new attitudes. Whether they call it by that name or not, whether they accept or reject it, the Marxist analysis of society has cut deeply into their thinking. Their eyes remain fixed on "the economic system," the productive process and the distribution of the product. They seem unable to outgrow the nineteenth century.

But there is another reason. We have all become hopelessly imprisoned in material values. The great Moloch to which all bow the knee is money—the commonly-accepted ideal is more and more production and then more and more consumption. The result is a refusal to confront the problems of size and power honestly, because the Moloch, so it is believed, can be served only through massive concentrations of industry and population and power. To humanize, to decentralize, to put a brake on the machine, would mean "setting the clock back," reducing efficiency, producing less, consuming less. Our concern is not with the content of men's lives, but only with the "standard of living." And as long as this is so, there is nothing to pit against the forces of materialism which now dominate the greater part of the world. So the sociologists and psychologists write their painstaking books, telling us just what is wrong in our societies; but the politicians do not read them, or if they do, they cannot see how to put the findings into political focus. The language is alien to them.

How this impasse is to be broken is one of the great problems of the twentieth century. How can we give people "the sense of participation and the sense of significance" which, inarticulately, they yearn for—in their work, in their neighborhood, in the organizations they would join if only they were made attractive to them? How can we offer them entertainment which will excite the best and not the worst in them? How can some point be given to their lives now that, by and large, they have money enough? These are the most challenging social problems of today. It is only when we recognize them as such that we will muster the determination to find the solution. In the meantime, we will wallow among all the goods and gadgets which wealth can bring, while the fiber of our society disintegrates.

A lingering sensation: rain, but where is it? A consistent tantilization, yet no sight. Bitter frost: a horrid, hypocritical world. Then, slowly at first, and with successively renewed vigor, it comes. From above, the earth appears metamorphosed; soon, muck and mire. From below, millions of pennyflakes — dancing, twirling, dropping, blinding, sloshing.

An invasion. Yet the intruders are reluctant. Still, they come, screeching and screaming. Silly creatures, death comes to us all soon.

The savage world smashes the virgin white crystals; children, cheerful and gay, grind the tiny vestals as they faintly flutter downward, ever downword. A sudden pain, and all is done. The lace-like frame is destroyed; an indiviual dies; the mass reigns.

And still it comes. A whitest sheet of wondorous magnitude cloaks all. Sin is hidden by the white. The dying, dainty petals veil a living world.

The world remembers — Hannibal, Napoleon, Hitler, Washington. Where are the snows of yesteryear? Who stands now in the backwash of Nature's artistry?

But there is no concern. The peaceful starlets, eveloping death and smothering fear, spread their pseudo-tranquility. Snowballs, snow-clothes, snow-white, snow. Barren trees gleefully lift up jagged arms; soon will they pay the burdened price of greed. Creeping autos cringe from the omminous specter of wreck; some will not escape. Even the oft-scampering squirrels have sought retreat; nature's bedclothes do not suit them. Buildings are disguised; their faults have taken on a tender hue. people smile.

Winter has officially come. Loud sing . . . . .

that Mrs. Fitz-Simms killed Mrs. Johnson because of her attentions to her husband were groundless.

In his charge to the jury, Judge Thompson said that they might return a verdict of guilty of murder in the first degree, guilty of murder in the second degree, guilty of manslaughter or a verdict of not guilty.

The jury apparently believed that Mrs. Fitz-Simons was not guilty of malice of premeditation in the murder, but on a negligence theory returned a verdict of manslaughter.

Witness for the prosecution were: Nancy Adams, Betty Green, Bob Ketler, Mrs. Walter Spearman and Eunice Simmons.

Witnesses for the defense: Marion Fitz-Simons, Foster Fitz-Simons, Harry E. Davis and Nancy Aubrey.

Students Still Sought To Aid Finances

Students are still being sought to "carry the gospel" of the University's financial needs to members of the North Carolina General Assembly over the Christmas holidays.

Volunteers for work in 13 counties have been asked to contact Norman Smith, chairman of the Committee of State Affairs, or call 9460. A meeting of all workers has been set for Monday at 7:30 p.m. in Carroll Hal.

Counties with no student representative include: Graham, Swain, Mitchell, Avery, Ashe, Allegheny, Alexander, Yadkin, Davie, Anson, Tyrrell, Hyde and Camden.

The work during the holidays will mean: getting in touch with General Assembly members and telling them about the financial needs of the University.

To assist the student volunteer workers in their task, a special brochure, "Our Growing University," has been prepared. This publication outlines all the financial needs of the Univesrity: the A and B budgets and the capital improvements budget.

Under the capital improvements budget, the need for a new student union and for alleviation of the self-liquidating dorm plan are gone into in detail.

Also included in the brochure are several graphs illustrating, for example, the rise of UNC room rents over that of consumer rents this year.

The brochure was prepared by members of the Committee on State Affairs, which is organizing the student workers in North Carolina counties. Members of the committee, in addition to Chairman Norman Smith, are: John Brooks, Pat Browder, Bill Porter, Wayne Venters, John Whitaker, Bob Pierce, Harold O'Tuel, Al Goldsmith, Rudy Edwards, Jim Crownover, Raymond Taylor, Paula Quick and Dwayne Lowder, art director.

Howell Secretary To Faculty

UNC is designed to meet the needs of students in the sciencs through practice in writing explanations, descriptions, business letters, professional papers and reports.

Dr. Howell started this course in 1920, and in a 20-year span he taught about 1,000 students. Beginning in 1940 he conducted this class for only one semester, alternating the teaching duties with another professor.

His average teaching load in the past 38 years has been 21 students per semester. That brings the total number of students taking Dr. Howell's scientific writing course to about 1,800. One other interesting fact: papers submitted by Dr. Howell's students in this one course through the years total about 54,000.

The other course which commands Dr. Howell's interest is the study of the Bible as literature.

He feels that the Bible is the greatest work in our cultural tradition" and that colleges should provide opportunities for Bible studies. He remarked that 92 per cent of the non-sectarian colleges in the United States offer elective courses in religion but that only a small number of students participate in them.

Dr. Howell's duties do not stop with advising foreign students and teaching—he is also secretary of the University faculty, a job with more duties than meet the eye.

As secretary of the faculty, Dr. Howell conducts by mail each year the election of members to the Faculty Council, the Faculty Advisory Committee, the Executive Committee and the Committee on Honorary Degrees. Every three years he is in charge of the election of a chairman of the faculty.

Dr. Howell also performs other routine secretarial duties including taking minutes of proceedings at faculty meetings. This, one concludes, is not so bad. But these minutes, according to Dr. Howell, range from eight to twelve typewritten pages.

Why so many? Well, the meetings of the UNC Faculty Council as recorded in the minutes are preserved in the Southern Historical Collection of the library for the sake of posterity. The minutes will be useful, for instance, to someone many years from now who writes a history of the University—all faculty actions will be permanently recorded. In addition to policy statements and resolutions of the faculty group, the minutes contain biographies of deceased faculty members.

Dr. Howell noted that a Memorial Committee is set up for each faculty member who dies; the merorial is read at the general faculty meeting, and of course, entered into the minutes.

The faculty secretarial post, incidentally, is an elective office of indefinite tenure. Dr. Howell has served in this capacity since 1941.

Another major undertaking as secretary of the UNC faculty was the writing of a book entitled "The Kenan Professorships" published by the UNC Press in 1956. Done at the request of University officials, Dr. Howell related many little known facts about the professorships fund which has enabled the University to secure and to keep outstanding professors.

The book wich received a Certificate of Special Merit as an outstanding example of printing displayed at the 16th exhibition of printing in New York City in January, 1956, took Dr. Howell about two years to complete.

Cincy Favored In Classic

By REESE HART

RALEIGH, Dec. 13—(AP)—For the first time since the Dixie Basketball Classic began in 1949, an intersectional team, Top-ranked Cincinnati, will be favored to win the three-day tournament which opens here Dec. 29.

Host team North Carolina State has won the Classic six times, North Carolina twice and Duke once. Carolina's Tar Heels made it two in a row by defeating N. C. State's Wolfpack in a battle of the "deep freeze last year 39-30.

The Tar Heels and Wolfpack have come up with good teams again this season, but pre-tournament betting will be riding with Cincinnati, led by towering Oscar (Big O) Robertson, who has been averagng 43 points per game.

Cincinnati meets pesky Wake Forest in the opening game at 2 p.m. in Reynolds Coliseum. In other first round games, fifth-ranked N. C. State plays Louisville at 4 p.m., Duke takes on fourth-ranked Michigan State at 7:30, and Carolina meets Yale at 9:30.

N. C. State Coach Everett Case said, "This year's Classic is going to be terrific, the best we've ever had."

Bill Hensley, tournament publicity director, said a record total attendance of 75,000 is expected. Only about 2,000 tickets are available for the first two days and only a few for the final day, he added.

Cincinnati, N. C. State, Michigan State and Carolina will be favored to move into the semi-finals. This would match Cincinnati against N. C. State in the second round.

Coach Frank McGuire's Carolina team, loaded with talent, looked impressive in bowling over Clemson and Virginia. The Tar Heels have two of the best sophomores in the nation in sharp-shooting York Larese and Doug Moe. Case saw the Tar Heels rout Virginia 83-61 and said "They looked terrific in the second half."

Case's team is unbeaten in four starts, but despite this he said "Our shooting has left a lot to be desired.

He added, "only in the Maryland game, when we hit 51 per cent of our shots, did we look like a good ball club."

TRACKIN' THE TARHEELS

by RUSTY HAMMOND DTH SPORTS EDITOR

The place of the athlete on scholarship in the University is a question that arises time and again, drawing varied comments and opinions from the student body. It really shouldn't, because it is not that.

The student body in the past has had a tendency to regard the athletes, especially the football players, as "animals." Nothing could be further from the truth. The football team, as any other organization, has its cut-ups. But proportionatly they are no worse than any other group.

Five members of this year's football team had B averages. Two of them were Morehead Scholars. They live, on the whole a quiet life, and there is constant pressure on them. Most of the pressure comes from their positions on the team, but much of it comes from the students.

Another feeling many students harbor about the athletes is that of alienation. Some students here feel that the players aren't really a part of the campus way of life, that they are seperated and segregated from the everyday guy.

A football player's typical day starts at 8 o'clock with classes. All of his classes are jammed into the mornings so he will have time to practice in the afternoon. Very soon after lunch he has to practice. At night, he must study. Thus the athletes are of necessity somewhat apart from the average student simply because they rarely have time to just goof off.

Classes, practice, and studying aren't the only things. There are movies of opponent's games, squad meetings, meetings with the trainer, and so on down the line. Perhaps they are lucky to get to take trips to places such as Notre Dame and Southern Cal. But when they get back they are way behind in their work and this Univerisity is not noted for being easy.

The football players play and practice in the fall. But that isn't the end of their year. There is spring practice which begins early in the year and lasts almost until school is ont.

In spite of all this, most of the players make a determined effort to fit in with the campus. Most who do suceed. If the average student realized how busy the players stay, they would appreciate it more when the players take time out to appear at a pep rally. Usually this happens at a pep rally where about 100-300 students are present.

A large percentage of the players would not be able to come to school if it weren't for the grants-in-aid they receive. So they do owe something to the students. They do their best on the field, and they try to be a part of things.Some feel this is not enough.

Many resent the athletes because they believe they get special academic consideration. This is rarely true. A goodly number of athletes have been sent home by the dean's office, and by the honor council.

But, some may retort, they do have tutors. Sure they do. It would be impossible for them to pass their work if they didn't. Try missing classes for four days and see how far behind you get.

Screams of "paid athlete" and charges of "animal" will always be heard wherever a college considers it essential to give grants-in-aid. They could be much reduced, however, with a better attempt at understanding the situation.

Deacs Led By Chappell

BURLINGTON — Wake Forest's Baby Deacs handed the Carolina freshmen their first defeat of the season here last night as they built a 3 point halftime lead into a 19 point margin of 84-65 by the final gun.

Wake Leads At Half

Carolina led for most of the first half and at one time enjoyed as much as a nine point lead. This margin began to shrink as the first half came to a close, and by halftime the Deacons held a 39-36 advantage.

The winners were led in the scoring column by 6-8 center Len Chappell who was high man for the night with 23 points to his credit. Right behind Chappell with 19 points apiece were Gene Loeffler and Gene Compton.

Hudock And McComb

The Tar Babies were once again plagued by fouls, and this time it proved to be their undoing. For the third straight time center Jim Hudock failed to finish a game. Ken McComb also was not around at the end, and with the loss of their two big men the Carolina frosh were virtually helpless against the taller Deacons.

Although the Tar Babies had more men in double figures than did the winners they failed to produce as many points as the top Deaclet scorers. Donnie Walsh and Billy Hubbard each had 14 points followed by Hudock and McComb with 10. Yogi Poteet just missed double digits and wound up with 9 points and 4 fouls for the evening.

The Scoring

Carolina — Hubbard, 14; Hudock, 10; McComb, 10; Walsh, 14; Poteet, 9; Callahan, 4; Phillips, 4.

Wake Forest — McCoy, 8; Loeffler, 19; Compton, 19; Cappell, 23; Packer, 9; Penland, 2; Wiedeman, 2; Davis, 2.

Carolina Named Host School For Model U. N. Assembly

Noted United Nations personalities and around 300-400 students from colleges in six Southern states are expected here for a Model UN Assembly the weekend of April 9-11.

As the host for the Assembly, the Y's UN Education Committee, headed by Betsy May and Rober Foushee, has already made operational plans for the meeting.

Committee chairmen for the Assembly are currently working with a tentative program for the three-day sessions, but they have a great need for student workers, Betsy May said yesterday. Volunteer workers may contact the Y or ma even stop by the Y when the UN committee meets every Tuesday at 4 p.m.

Cynthia Grant and Belinda Foy, co-chairmen of preparations for the Assembly, are patterning plan so that the Assembly will be as similar to the UN as possible.

As in the United Nations, resolutions will be introduced and caucusing will be held during the Model Assembly. At the conclusion of the three-day Assembly, a news letter will be publishing, containing the resolutions passed and other activities during the weekend.

Liz Howell, chairman of the Rules on Procedure Committee, will be in charge of seeing that UN procedure is followed as much as possible during the Model Assembly.

KEEPS CLOSE TO REAL UN

In keeping close to the operations of the United Nations, the Model Assembly will be working within its goal of helping college students to understand the United Nations through active participation.

As yet, the main speakers for the weekend Assembly have not been secured, but two prominent UN workers will be here for a key note address April 9 and the main speech April 10.

Most of the Assembly sessions will be held in Carroll Hall. A section for UN "delegations" will be roped off, and a special place for spectators will be arranged. Flags of all UN nations will be placed on the stage in Carroll Hall.

FIVE MAN 'DELEGATIONS'

Each "delegation" will be five representatives from colleges in Kentucky, Virginia, West Virginia, South Carolina, Georgia and North Carolina. Each college will be one "delegation." To give a real international flavor, foreign students on campus will assist in the Model Assembly.

Although the real work on the Model Assembly is being done through the Y UN committee, the sponsoring group is the State Collegiate Council for the United Nations (CCUN). The state chairman is Bill Sugg, who is also president of the local YMCA.

AAUN IS CCUN AFFILIATE

Affiliated with the CCUN is the American Association for the United Nations (AAUN), which will assist in preparations for the Model Assembly — primarily through housing arrangements for delegates — through the Orange County AAUN chapter.

WORK UNDERWAY

Already at work for the Model Assembly are: Jack Doug, in charge of physical arrangements; Judy King, housing chairman; Nancy Smathers, treasurer; Jane Gardner, chairman of the Secretariat; Molly Wiley, historian; Belinda Foy, recording secretary; Margaret Ray, corresponding secretary; Jeannie Aldige, publicity chairman; and Joyce Farris and Joanne Baker, hospitality co-chairmen.

Melissa Osborne is in charge of orientation of eight and ninth grade boys who will serve as pages during the Model Assembly.

Botany Search Yields Data For Book

One of the world's most intensive and complete searches for scientific botanical data has just been completed at Chapel Hill, the end of a three-year's exploration for a book on the "Flora of the Carolinas."

Included in the 150,000 plant specimens gathered from all parts of North and South Carolina are more than 3,000 different species of plants.

About 200 species were not known to exist previously in the Carolinas.

Botanists report discovery of two species which were heretofore unknown to science!

The biggest part of the Flora project is over — that is, gathering the specimens. In the three years remaining in the program, the scientists hope to write the many descriptions needed to produce the book.

Three years ago botanists at Chapel Hill set out to answer the common question: "How many kinds of plants grow in North and South Carolina?"

The three-year collecting program designed to furnish an answer to this question has been completed on schedule. The work deals primarily with the kinds of plants and their distribution in North and South Carolina, but the work will also serve as a complete and up to date survey of the plant resources of the two Carolinas.

First Playbill Due In Spring, Says Editor

The first issue of Playbill will appear early in the spring semester, Gary Arzt, Playbill business manager, said yesterday.

Playbill is a newly established publication that will program the events of campus organizations and that will also include features and editorials. Copies of Playbill will be distributed at varous events on campus, such as Playmaker productions and concerts.

Other than the programs in the center of the publication, the features and editorials will be changed bi-monthly. The programs will, of course, be changed for each new event.

One other feature of Playbill will be its section on coming events. Arzt said yesterday any organization desiring coverage in the coming events column or wanting programs included should contact him by writing to Box 1313, Chapel Hill.

DEBATE TEAM FINISHES SECOND

Debaters Leave NYU Undefeated

By RON SHUMATE

The UNC debate team, which finished the New York University Hall of Fame debate undefeated, was second in a field of 43 teams.

The debate, which was held last weekend, was represented by such schools as Princeton, Harvard, Yale, the Naval Academy, Boston College and Washington and Lee University.

Teams defeated by the UNC squad included Loyola University, Brooklyn University, Manhattan and the American School of Diplomacy.

The tournament was won by St. Joheph's of Philadelphia, also undefeated. St. Joheph's placed ahead of UNC on the basis of individual point records.

Princeton, Dartmouth and Georgetown tied for third place with 7-1 records.

The debates were judged on the basis of originality, analysis of argument, logic, rebuttal and delivery.

Each debater had ten minutes for instructive speeches and five minutes for the body of his talk. The debate consisted of four rounds.

The topic of debate in the tournament was "Resolved: That the further development of nuclear weapons should be prohibited by international agreement."

The UNC affirmative team was made up of John Brooks and Tom Long. Members of the negative team were Clay Simpson and David Evans.

Long, a senior in his second year of debating, took second place honors earlier this year at the Emory University Peach Tree Tournament.

Brooks headed the Debate Squad last year and is currently president of the Forensic Council, the control body for all debate organizations. He is now in his fourth year of debating.

Simpson, the incumbent president of the Debate Squad, is a junior and has had over two years of debating experience.

Evans has had over two years of debating experience and is a junior.

The team left for New York by train Thursday morning and arrived late the same afternoon. They stayed at the New Yorker Hotel, attended a symposium Thursday night and a banquet Saturday night. They came back Sunday.

The symposium was attended by many prominent persons, including Merril Eisenbud, the head of the New York branch of the Atomic Energy Commission; J. Anthony

(See DEBATORS, page 3)

More Snow Is Possible This Week

Carolina students slipped and slid their way to classes after the weekend's snowstorm faced with the possibility of more of the same.

The United States Weather Bureau reported yesterday that Carolinians can expect more rain or snow Wednesday night or Thursday. Freezing weather until then should keep roads and walks icey.

The high temperature today is expected to be in the middle 30's with the low tonight put at 12 degrees. The highest temperature yesterday was 32 degrees.

Major highways throughout the state are clear but there are some icy spots on secondary roads. U.S. 441 in the Smokies still requires chains.

Chapel Hill Choral Club To Present Bach Tonight

Bach's "Christmas Oratorio", the annual Christmas concert to be performed by the Chapel Hill Choral Club, will be presented tonight in Hill Hall at 8 o'clock.

Sponsored by the UNC Music Department, the program is a part of the Tuesday Evening Series and is open to the public without charge.

Dr. Joel Carter, associate professor of music here, will direct the concert. Seven members of the group will appear as soloists in the first thre parts of Bach's or- will perform the soprano recitatives.

Tenor Robert Melton, staff member at Duke University Hospital, will sing the role of the Evangelist. Betty Jean Smith of Chapel Hill will perform the alto solos.

Bass recitatives will be presented by Dr. U. T. Holmes, Kenan professor of Romance Languages. Barbara Peacock of Chapel Hill perform the soprano recitatives.

"Mighty Lord," the bass aria, will be sung by UNC graduate student Marvin Tatum from Richmond, Va. The soprano-bass duet, "Lord, Thy Mercy," will be sung by Beth Diaz of Durham and David L. Vaughn, graduate student from Salem.

Accompanying the soloists will be Lee Bostian, graduate assistant in the Music Department and regular accompanist for the 35-year old organization.

A two-piano arrangement of the orchestral accompaniments for the choruses will be performed by Bostian and Kay Knight, an English major from Osceola, Mo.

Don Furtado Names Six To Offices

Six members have recently been added to the attorney general's staff, according to Student Body President Don Furtado.

The members, subject to the approval of Student Leislature, are Bob Baynes, George Boss, Graham Adams, Paula Quick, Mary Bahnsen and Jenny Elder.

Furtado said the reason for the additional members to the staff is that "we envision an expainsion of the attorney egneral's investigatory duties to Campus Code cases, as well as Honor Code cases."

The new members will be primarily concerned with investigating any Campus Code or Honor Code violations which arise and with serving, at times, as the defense counsel for students on trial by the appropriate court.

"All six have illustrated a sincere desire to assist in the administration of the attorney general's duties, and I'm sure they will be excellent additions to the staff', said Furtado.

The members were selected last week, after a discussion betwen Furtado, Dick Robinson (the attorney general) and Dave Biren (the assistant attorney general).

QUARTERLY COVER, FALL-WINTER '58 — The cover drawing for the new Quarterly was done by Feliks Topolski. Topolski was awarded the International Fine Arts Council's gold medal of honor in 1955. The campus literary magazine prints the drawing by courtesy of Topolski's Chronicle, London, England.

New Carolina Quarterly Has Variery Of Writers

This year's first copy of the Carolina Quarterly, which appeared Monday, represents writers from Reno to Chapel Hill.

A UNC senior honors candidate in creative writing, a graduate student in English and a professor of philosopny are the local contributors to the magazine.

Other contributors include a graduate student at UCLA; a resident of Reno, Nevada; the editor of Coastlines; a Virginian who graduated from New York University in 1926; and a graduate student in English at Yale University.

The Quarterly contains four short prose fiction articles, five poems, four reviews and one article entitled "The Liberal View of Man and Society."

The short prose fiction includes such stories as "A Walk on the Stepped-on Side with the Man with Golden Hair Growing out of a Golden Toe."

The front cover drawing of the Quarterly was done by Feliks Topolski, the 1955 winner of the International Fine Arts Council's gold medal of honor.

The 82-page magazine is the eleventh volume published.

University Finds Space For Storing Of Supplies

The University has obtained space to store supplies replacing those recently destroyed in a fire on the campus, and officials are investigating the possibility of building new storage facilities, preferably off-campus.

The supplies were destroyed the morning of Dec. 5 when a fire swept through a middle section of the University's storeroom. Other sections were not damaged, but the interior of the section—holding varied household items ranging from iron piping to toilet tissue—was gutted. The fire was believed to have started from a malfunctioning electric motor.

Webb Evans, director of the UNC Office of Purchase and Stores, said that for the present combustible items are being stored in a quonset hut near the filter plant in Carrboro.

Non-combustibles, he said, are being stored in the basement of Aycock Men's Dormitory on the campus. Aycock is a relatively new structure. Some other items are being stored in sections of the storage facility not destroyed by the fire.

Mr. Evans said that no decision has been reached on whether to build back the present structure, located on the campus near Phillips Hall, or to build an entirely new building on a new site.

"We hope to build a new one off the campus some place," he said. He noted that the present stores are in a "congested" area.

He said that accountants are still working on the records to determine actual loss in the fire. A report is due this week, he said. Early estimates placed the loss at around $80,000.

Decoration Judging Planned Tonight

Judging for the GMAB sponsored Christmas decorating contest, originally scheduled for last night, will be held tonight at 7 o'clock. The judging was postponed last night because of bad road conditions.

Edna Faye Pugh, chairman of the Special Events Committee, said engraved trophies will be awarded winners in these two divisions: 1) fraternity and sorority and 2) men's and women's dorms.

Several residents of Chapel Hill will serve as judges. Decorated doors of dorms and fraternities and sororities will be judged on originality of the decoration, neatness and appropriateness.

Y Court Site Of Carol Sing Around Yule Tree Thursday

Y Court will be the scene Thursday night of a carol sing around the Christmas tree. The sing, to begin at 9 o'clock, is being sponsored by the Y and the Grail.

Bill Sugg, YMCA president, said Dr. Joel Carter of the Music Department will lead the singing. The Glee Club will also be present and will probably sing one number alone.

"The idea behind the sing," Sugg said, "is to get the various groups on campus, such as sororities, fraternities, dorms and other organizations, to do their caroling early in the evening and then come and join in a campus wide sing."

Sugg said hot chocolate and donuts will be served afterward.

Those working with the caroling, besides Sugg, are Charlie Huntington, in charge of the sing for the Grail, Denton Lotz, Sophie Martin, Betty Kay Johnson, Ben Taylor and John Hunnicutt.

MISS LILA SCOTT
. . . Sugar Bowl bound

NAMED TO QUEEN'S COURT

Coed Going To Sugar Bowl

Lila Scott, senior from Shreveport, La., has been named to the 1959 Sugar Bowl Queen's court.

Miss Scott was chosen to represent the University at the Jan. 1 game in New Orleans by a committee chaired by Ralph Cummings. Other committee members were Jackie McCarthy, Spencer Dormitory counselor, Miss Julia Staples, secretary of the student government, Assistant Dean of Student Affairs and Mrs. Sam Magill and Luanne Thornton, personnel adviser to women.

Each school whose football team has appeared in the bowl in recent years is asked to send a representative to the court. Carolina last played there in 1949.

In choosing Carolina's representative, the committee interviewed all seniors having served in the Yack Beauty Queen's court. Selection criteria were beauty, personality, poise and similar qualities.

Miss Scott is a member of Pi Beta Phi Sorority. In addition to her Yack Court Membership, she has been named to the Beat Dook Parade Queen's court.

Two Visiting Lecturers Schedule Talks Here

Two visitors are scheduled to lecture at the Department of Psychiatry of the University School of Medicine.

Dr. E. James Anthony will speak today on "Sleep Disturbances." He is acting director of the Child Guidance Clinic of the Washington University School of Medicine in St. Louis.

Dr. Fred P. Robbins of Chicago will speak before the department's Monthly Scientific Meeting Thursday at 4 p.m. His subject will be "The Problems of Consensus."

Important

The Levy Bill to send telegrams to Governors Faubus and Almond denouncing their closing of the public schools in Arkansas and Virginia is perhaps the most significant piece of legislation that the Student Legislature will be called upon to decide during this entire year.

It is important because of its introduction in a southern student assembly. It is important because of the effect that it might have in adding a small voice in changing policies. It is important in that it is the right thing to do.

The problem that is being dealt with is the question of education and its denial to many southern students so that one governor can use demogogic tactics to prove a point. Students who are in an educational institution who have the right currently being denied to other youth because of their geographic location, have an obligation to speak out so that all students can have the benefit of public education in a democracy.

It is very true that those who favor integration are more likely to be for Levy's blli, and those opposed are most likely to disfavor Levy's bill, but there are an overwhelming number of students on this campus who both believe that integration is not to be considered good and that the tactics of Messrs. Faubus and Almond are bad.

There are many constitutional means whereby the Governors of these states can voice their disapproval of the Supreme Court decision and try to get the decision revoked, but one of these is not closing the public education facilities for children in this democracy. It is to this point that the Student Legislature must speak.

One cannot forget that UNC, Little Rock, or Richmond are no longer in a vacuum. One connot forget that Russia makes great capital on American discrmination with the colored peoples of Southeast Asia and Africa. One cannot also forget that at the same time that Russia can boast that it is eliminating its illiteracy problem to a fraction of 1%, there are students who are forced from school in the United States. This again makes good propoganda.

Furthermore, the Russians can truly boast that one segment of the United States of America, the south, seems unwilling to even speak out against the actions of the two Southern demagogues, Fubus and Almond. Thus, by the South's inaction in stopping Faubus and Almond it gives the world ipso facto proof that the Russian claims are true.

UNC has had a reputation of being the first in the South, and of being a liberal institution. Contrary to what someone said in the Student Legislature last week, it is this very forwardness and liberality of UNC that has earned its respect and approval throughout the nation and abroad. A change from this might do the University serious harm.

As far as any harm coming from student leaders speaking their mind and telling two demagogues that they are out of line, the situation might occur in the Soviet Union in a system where criticism is not allowed, but it should not happen in the United States. If it does, then it is this also which must be fought — a tyranny in which silence can be interpreted to be opposition.

It must be southerners who take the initiative to bring about a peaceful solution or the segregation problem. It must be southerns with the courage to stand up to people like Faubus and Almond and tell them that they are doing irreparable harm and making for violence such as that in Little Rock not too many months ago.

UNC can take a position of leadership in the fight for a rational solution of the integration problem. A telegram or registered letter might just show that it has at least a token interest.

Debators

A team which will never make national headlines, is worthy of national commendation.

The UNC debate team which placed second in a national field of 45 at the New York University tournament is worthy of some of the highest praise that can be bestowed on any UNC team.

Forensics may not be dead on the campus at least on the intercollegiate level.

Neither Black Nor White... Mostly Shades Of Gray

Norman B. Smith

Miss Bangs tolds us we could go home an hour early that day. A report had come over the radio that a blizzard was on the way — a storm more severe than the six to eight inch snowfalls which we usually had.

By the time I had finished a Tootsie Roll at Ted's Store and had thrown a few snowballs it had begun. The greasy clouds reached the nausea of dewpoint and the very heavens seemed to fall as they vomited their dense discharge of powdery snow. It came driving down.

I could barely see my feet and I walked my way home by guess work. Each time I blinked my eyes open they were filled with stinging specks of cold. Mother was relieved when I came stamping into the front entry-way.

Yet it was thrilling to be out there. I was almost sorry to get home. It was as though the countless stars of the skies had descended cataclysmically to the earth and proved that stars were really just specks of hard, cold, shining white suspended up there not too far above. Suspended only temporarily and that the earth was indeed the center of creation and that there was indeed a God who on some divine whim or for some divine reason would will that the stars come hurtling down. And though the stars almost blinded me with their density, speed, and coldness an though my ears tingled in the frosty air, and though my feet were numbed despite layers of socks and shoes and overshoes, I could still exist, could move could triumph over it all and could reach my goal. For I was of man, of the chosen species that are given all nature to rule over.

The next morning the sun shone timidly down to where the fallen stars had formed an ocean of white. The ocean was pure — no evil could there exist; no divergence and strife could be found. All submitted to the purity of the snow. The mighty Norway pine out back bowe huumbly under its load of purity and the most brash hardiest winter bird kept the silence. Gone were the sharp lines of struggle and disagreement and the harsh, austere colors of the desolate fields of the day before the snow. They were clothed in the universal purity, were made geometric and simple. The hillocks and holes alike lost their identity under the tranquil white. Gone were the raging grass fires of the spring, the gaudy colors of clover and wild raspberries of the summer, and the spicey scent of goldenrod in fall.

I walked alone up to the hill. I could feel all around me the purpose, the ordered end of the storm of yesterday. I could look for miles and see that all was undespoiled, untrampled, even unloooked upon. It was as though I had discovered a great new continent and that my single set of footsteps to the hill was proof that no one else had ever been to this land before.

But more people came out and walked on the snow. Soot from the chimneys desecrated the purity. With disdain the trees and dried weak stalks forgot their humility and spuring back upright, dumping their tailored cloaks of white carelessly on the ground. Dogs left the yellow stains. The ashes from the furnaces were strewn on sidewalks. Snowplows grunted angrily along, baring ugly patches of asphault and gravel.

When I walked home that day there was slush. Damn slush. Dirty, grimey, gray, wet slush. It wasn't a challenge like walking through a blizzard. It wasn't an inspiration like walking out on the new snow where no one had walked before. It was only a wet drudgery. It was the inevitable return, whether it comes in a day or a week or a season to the day before the storm when there was divergence and strife and austere colors.

Idealists — young people in years and heart — welcome the storm. They brave the elements pitted against them knowing they can somehow reach their goal. They do reach their goal. They find the symmetry, the accord, the purity of the day after the storm. They don't believe they will be sucked sooner or leater into the ooze of the slush that follows, but they will. It always happens that way. The older people, who have seen the slush come many times or the weaker people who have seen it come just once, don't challenge the storm and don't marvel at the purity. They crowd closer to the stove, shivering, and moaning about the slush to come.

Student Intellect

Russell Eisenman

"According to the vast majority of psychologists, the basic reason why people marry is to satisfy the sex drive." This statement was made before a gathering of students from various colleges. There were three reactions. "That's just a generalization," said a boy from Lynchburg College. A UNC student commented, "That's Freud, not all psychologists." A very religious bo fyrom the University of Louisville challanged the first statement by asking, "What do Christians say?" This immediate reaction against a true statement is indicative of the low level of thinking done by a very great per centage of college students.

I asked an intelligent student on campus if he would vote for an atheist for president of the United States. His answer was no, and his reason reflected his failure to understand the situation. He said that an atheist might do something the American people don't want, like dropping some hydrogen bombs somewhere and killing a lot of people. When he was informed that many philosophers who were atheists had a very strong feeling for humanity, he said he wasn't aware of this.

Believing an atheist to be some horrible person who would just as soon kill people as not seems very prevalent in this country. People only differ in degree about the repulsiveness of an atheist; this stupid concept exists. It is often used by politicians who shout of the horrors of "atheistic Communism" thus condemning people for their religious beliefs. Unfortunately, the college student, who is in good position to think for himself, often accepts what he has been told, and strongly resists gaining new knowledge in intellectual fields.

Sex and religion are the two examples that are cited here to show examples of intellectual decadence on the part of college students; however, this anti-intellectualism exists in almost everything. To notice it, just keep your ears open, or try to discuss something of profound importance with the "average" college student. This problem doesn't exist with college students only.

People in general are guilty of refusing to think deeply. Nevertheless, the students are the future leaders of our country, and it is important that they have a good understanding of contemporary affairs. Comedian George Gobel once said, "The future of our country is in the hands of our youth. So, head for the hills." His joke contains too much truth to be really funny.

On The First Snow

Ron Shumate

Snow Scenes:

People with mouths agape. They've never seen real live snow.

Others who struggle across the snow-ice-covered walks to reach the comparative safety of clear brick—only to stumble and fall flat.

The less fortunate who never make it to the brick.

The wonderful topics for conversation the snow brings to the ones who can never think of topics. Such as: "How d'ya like the snow?" or "I HATE snow." or "Now back home . . . . ." But there are still the ones who will venture to say: "I just can't think of anything to say."

The man standing in his front yard—watching his wife shovel the walk clear.

The ones who never make it to the brick.

The snow-ball fights on the campus—and in the halls of Joyner dorm.

The eerie sound of tire-chains pounding on the snow, ice, and pavement.

The weird patterns the snow makes on buildings, trees and cars.

The professors who had to stoop low and eat in Lenoir because they couldn't motor home to the safety and comfort of their wives' cooking.

The dogs and squirrels who padded barefoot through the white stuff.

The birds who wonder where in the name of &$%?/*(&) the worms are.

The ones who never make it to the brick.

The busted radiators, engine blocks and (anatomically) the busted posteriors.

The ones who listened prayerfully to hear that there would be no more snow.

The photographers taking pictures of the campus.

Policemen plowing wearily back to Bingham Hall.

The squirrel with the frozen tail and the dog with the frozen fur.

The phone calls to the Daily Tar Heel to ask if classes would be held Thursday.

The ones who griped because the accounting quiz was called off and the chemistry quiz wasn't. There's just no justice, is there?

The ones who were (and still are) worried about a ride home if the small tabular and columnar crystals of frozen water formed directly from the water vapor of the air when its temperature at the time of condensation is lower han 0 degrees C (32 degrees F) was still on the terra firma.

The ones who never make it to the brick.

The ones who discuss the fact that snow belongs to the hexagonal system of crystallization, is white or transparent, and in the unconsolidated state, weighs 5 to 12 pounds per cubit foot, but compacted it may weigh 15 to 50 pounds per cubit foot.

The snow-blind squirrel outside Graham Memorial.

The boy walking around campus Thursday in a summer jacket.

The near-empty class rooms.

The girl in my economics class who made it when two big, husky he-man type of football players didn't.

The reporters who scurried through the blizzard to "scoop" everyone else on the bomb scare story.

The reporters who failed.

The red noses, red ears and red . . . . (of the ones who never made it to the brick.).

The ones who cut classes but still managed to make it to the Free Flicks.

The ones who cut the Free Flick but still managed to make it to classes.

The big break given us by the administration — No classes Sunday!

Those poor unfortunates who never made it . . . . . .

The fact that ten inches of snow yields, when melted, about one inch of water. (Water, water everywhere, but nary a drop to drink.)

University Party

Editor:

In the past, I have refrained from writing to the Tar Heel, knowing fully well that the majority of the campus pays no attention to your editorials. Now, however, because of the unjustfied editorial on the "University Party", which appeared in the Sunday paper, I feel it is my duty as floor leader of the U.P., to defend the actions of the party concerning Ed Levy's telegram bill.

While Levy's bill was directed at education, anyone with common sense can see the underlying motive is integration. On the topic of integration, the University Party has certain strong beliefs. These beliefs arise from the fact that most of the U.P. members are people born and raised in a segregated community. While we believe integration is something that must eventually come; we also believe the problem can only be handled through moderation. Only until Southerners have been convinced that intgration is good, will the problem be peacefully solved. Forced integration, letters or telegrams of condemnation, and other hasty moves will only tend to make a bad situation worse. By your constant radical editorials on this point, you have left no room for this moderate viewpoint. In your eyes, a person must be an ultra-liberal or he is classed as a useless segregationist. People who have lived with the problem understand it much better than one who has spent most of his life outside a Southern community. While I realize you have succeeded in converting certain members of the Student Party to your radical beliefs, I am proud I am a member of a party that has had the guts not to be a complete turncoat on the people of the South.

A week from last Thursday, the Legislature, at full force, spent two and one-half hours debating Levy's bill. It was clearly defeated 27-17 and yet the University Party was condemned by you for "not having the guts to speak out." What about the large number of Student Party members that also voted against the bill?

However, I was fully aware that you and your puppets would not accept the decision of the Legislature. This past Thursday night, when weather conditions were terrible and when many legislators thought the meeting had been postponed, reconsideration of the Levy Bill was moved. The largest number of legislators present at any time during the night was twenty-eight, only two over a quorum. At the opening of legislature, Speaker Cummings urged the body to table all controversial measures because of the unrepresentative group present. Consequently, the spring election bill was sent back to committee. Before legislature ended, I, along with the Representative Wood, had to leave; but believing reconsideration of the bill would be moved, I left instructions with Rep. Street to perform the walk-out in case the bill was brought up. When reconsideration was moved, our small delegation of five people and one Student Party member walked out. The only reason Rep. Street and Rep. Harvey didn't leave was that the former had to call for the quorum, and the latter was the clerk of the legislature. This was purely a counteracting political move to defeat a bill which we considered detrimental to the entire race problem and probably start a race problem at the previously peaceful UNC.

Just because the UP doesn't introduce a pro-integration bill every week, you call us a useless party. We will never be a tool for your beliefs. We believe the purpose of the legislature is to solve problems, not to create them. I only hope that in the future the sensible people of the Student Party; namely Jim Crownover, Bob Thompson, and others, will rise up and overthrow the radical element that now rules the party. Then, along with the U.P., Carolina will have mature student government.

Charlie Gray

Southern Liberal

Norman Cousins

This is a report of a visit to the home of a college president in the Deep South. Following the lecture before students and faculty, I was invited to meet with a small group at the president's house. Almost inevitably, the polite conversation soon gave way to the big subject—dark skins and light skins and a world that is cracking because there doesn't seem to be enough emotional room in it to contain the two.

The wife of a prominent local physician and a community leader in her own right addressed me from across the room.

"You might as well know it," she said. "This little meeting has been prearranged. We didn't want you to return to your office in New York without our having a chance to say some things to you about the color problem. Here in Alabama, the problem is no abstraction. Maybe our knowledge of it suffers because it is too intimate, but we though it might be useful to tell you exactly how we feel."

I expressed my appreciation and an eagerness to hear more.

"Several members of this group have asked me to make the presentation," she resumed. "The reason for it perhaps is that I used to live in the North. The group here didn't want you to feel that what you were hearing reflected only the views of someone whose family had Deep South traditions going back to the Revolution.

"Now, the first point that ought to be made is that almost everyone you see here in this room tonight has been engaged over the years, in one way or another, in working for better race relations in the South. In fact, if you had to draw up a list of two dozen names most prominently associated with improving race relations in this area over the past ten or fifteen years, at least six of the people here tonight would be on that list. In this room tonight is a college president who has led the fight to provide high caliber postgraduate professional educational facilities for the Negro. Sitting next to him is a woman who has been effective in expanding hospital and medical facilities for the Negro. Several of us have been working in the field of low-cost housing.

"All this by way of credentials. Now, you may gather from what I have said that this is no hard-bitten segregationist group. Yet we have the feeling down here that there's no real interest in the North in our problem, the problem of the liberal Southerner, that is. You see, he's caught in a cross fire. And he's lost his effectiveness. In fact, the entire race relations movement in the South is stalled

"Consider what has happened here in Alabama. Only four years ago we had a promising race relations council. It was a mixed group. Some of the people here were on it; helped to found it, in fact A number of Negro leaders were part of the group. When we met it was on a non-segregated basis, of course, and we got the support of many of our important business and local government people.

"Those activities were concerned not only with the education of the Negro but many of the more insistent economic and social welfare needs of the Negro. It's important to be concerned about what happens in the schools, of course, but too many people in the North seem unwilling to do any hard thinking about other problems that are just as pressing. What about food, health, doctors, hospital facilities, jobs, salaries, decent housing? These are survival problems, not abstract questions.

"And these are the problems that our race relations council tried to cope with. Please not that I said 'tried,' not 'try.' It's all past tense now. The race relations council no longer exists. The Southern liberals who organized it and manned it are no longer a force. In fact, the liberal Southerer is on the run. We've lost the cooperation of many of the community and business leaders. Today there is no interracial council or anything like it here. In the present temper, it would be impossible to start one. We couldn't hold a mixed meeting; it would be extremely risky even to try to bring a mixed group together in one's own home. In short, there is no longer any real or effective leadership for bettering the condition of the Negro in the South.

"External and internal pressures have just about put the Southern liberal out of business. There is very little sympathy in the North for our position. There is very little understanding of the conditions and circumstances in which we have to work. Instead, we get a lot of advice about what we ought to do and even more criticism because we don't put the advice into effect within the hour.

"What do we suggest? We're not sure we know what to suggest. A few years ago we thought we were making some marks. Specific things in medical care, jobs, housing were being done. We had time on our side. Now time is working against us. Demands are being made to achieve certain objectives on a deadline basis. Meanwhile, a wall of resistance has been building up against any change. A showdown psychology is being created. If such a showdown comes, it won't be healthy for anyone, white or black.

"What do we want you to do? Just think about what we've said. Think about the Southern liberals you know — in public and private life — and ask yourself whether you have made any real attempt to see our problem in our own terms. Don't condemn us out of hand. We're in a big fight and we need help. Most off all we need time to regroup our forces. Don't think we've lost our souls. And please don't think that the only thing that is keeping us from being effective is an insufficiency of moral judgments from the North. That is all."

I thanked the lady and the group; and said I would pass their report along to the readers of this magazine for their consideration, which I have now done.—The Saturday Review

PLANTS

Additions Double Plant File

In the three-year period just ended, A. E. Radford, Harry E. Ahles, and C. R. Bell, all of the UNC Department of Botany have colected over 150,000 plant specimens. An additional 25,000 specimens have been contributed to the project by graduate students and botanists at other institutions.

These plants will have a total value of approximately $175,000 when they have been identified and filed with the collections already at Chapel Hill.

Previous plant collections on file at Chapel Hill number approximately 150,000 specimens.

The addition of the specimens from the past three years' work more than doubles the size of the plant file at Chapel Hill and makes it the largest collection of its kind in the southeast and the most complete collection for two states in the United States. The project has been financed by Mrs. W. C. Coker, by the University's Alumni Annual Giving Fund, and by a grant from the National Science Foundation.

All of the plants have not yet been identified. But, even so, about 200 species have been found in the collections which were not previously known to grow in the Carolinas. In addition, two plants, previously not described and not known to science, have been discovered.

Additional state records and probably more new species of plants may turn up as the remaining material is identified. When the identifications are complete, five members of UNC Department of Botany, J. E. Adams, H. E. Ahles, C. R. Bell, A. E. Radford and H. R. Totten, with the collaboration of Dr. H. L. Blomquist of Duke University, will put all of the information so far gathered on these plants, including descriptions, drawings, and comments on their distribution into a manual of the plants of the Carolinas, the first such book in the history of the two states and the first attempt at any cataloguing of our plant resources in the last 100 years.

The completeness of the collections of Carolina plants at Chapel Hill has made them of general scientific value and botanists in other states, and even in other countries, have begun to borrow parts of the collections to use in their own special research.

Panhel Votes Approval To Sorority Projects

The Panhellenic Council voted Tuesday night in favor of the plan to have each sorority work a designated time at Robbins to make money for their annual contribution to charity. This project plan is to be submitted to J. B. Robbins for his approval.

The council also decided to investigate the possibilities for having a sorority "swap night" by which the pledges and the actives would exchange beds, the actives moving out into the dorms and the pledges taking over the sorority house for the night.

The Council has announced that there will be no sorority workshops or exchange dinners during December.

Tax Form Training Is Planned

While Christmas spending occupies the minds of most North Carolinians, officials of the UNC Extension Division are thinkng ahead—to income tax time.

For the second year a short course will be given to teach laymen the most economical methods for filing personal income tax returns.

Beginning Tuesday, Jan. 13, the class will meet one night a week for two hours during a 10-week period. Dr. Harold Q. Langenderfer, associate professor of accounting at UNC, will provide instruction.

Overflow registration in last year's course necessitated setting up two sections to handle the number of interested persons.

Extension Division officials have urged those interested n the course to pre-register, although applicants may sign up at the time of the first class meeting Tuesday night, Jan. 13, at 7 o'clock in Carroll Hall.

In addition to hearing lectures and examples of tax principle applications, those in the course will prepare typical income tax returns. Subjects to be covered include exemptions, tax rates, methods of computation, capital gains and losses, deductions, depreciation, tax withholding and Social Security taxes.

Langenderfer is a certified public accountant and holds a Ph.D. degree from Indiana University.

Carolina Tar Babies Whip Campbell Junior College 79-70

Hudock Paces Attack With 24

LILLINGTON—Carolina's basketball Tar Babies bounced back from their first setback two nights ago here tonight to whip Campbell Junior College 79-70 with 6-8 Jim Hudock leading the way.

The frosh jumped off to an early nine-point lead, only to see it disintegrated to 41-39 at the end of the first half. The scoring stayed about the same until late in the last half when the Tar Babies hit a hot streak with 8 minutes left to pull it out.

Jim Hudock was high man in the scoring department with 24, but each of his four mates were in double figures. Don Walsh got 18, Bill Hubbard 13, Yogi Poteet 13, and Ken McComb 11.

The Tar Babies owned the boards all night as the three big guys, Hudock, McCombe and Hubbard, hauled down 43 rebounds among them. Hudock had 17 rebounds, McComb grabbed off 16, and Hubbard pulled in 10.

The Carolina frosh had to adjust to the Camel offense in the second half. Earlier they had been in a zone but the hot Campbell shooting from the outside forced them into a man to man which proved effective.

The Tar Babies hit well from everywhere, both inside and out. After shifting their defense, they stopped the Campbell attack quickly.

The win brought Carolina's record to 3-1, their first loss of the year coming last Saturday night against Wake Forest.

The five starters played the entire game without a substitution, and for the first time since the season began nobody fouled out. Hudock, before tonight's game, had fouled out in every single contest. When the final horn sounded, none of the Tar Babies were in serious trouble by way of the foul situation.

The Scoring

UNC FROSH—Hubbard 13, Hudock 24, McComb 11, Poteet 13, Walsh 18.

CAMPBELL—Quick 21, Adams 6, Wyles 19, Atkinson 10, Baker 5.

Budget Given Fencing Team

The Carolina Athletic Association, in its recent meeting, took positive action toward Carolina's fencing team on two issues.

The CAA ruled in favor of the fencers in that they granted a budget to them for this year, but at the same time refused the fencing team varsity recognition.

This has been one of the primary issues for the past few years, as the fencers have been seeking varsity recognition for some time.

The budget granted them will allow them to carry out this year's 9-meet schedule, but no provisions were made for the future.

At present, Carolina is the only school in the ACC to field a fencing team, so all of the Tar Heel opponents come from outside the league.

The CAA has granted money to the team sporadically in the past, but this is the first time definite amounts have been accessed.

The last time a Carolina fencing team received varsity recognition was in the 1930's. Under the present NCAA fencing committee rules, Carolina is eligible to send individuals to the National Championships, but not as a team.

At present, Carolina students who participate in the fencing program do not receive an athletic monogram for their participation.

Duke Wins

DURHAM —(AP)— Duke's Blue Devils won their first game in four tries Monday night, outlasting South Carolina's Gamecocks 68-61. They were paced by sophomore Howard Hurt with 22 points.

Duke jumped to a 10-4 lead after five minutes of the Atlantic Coast Conference game, which was South Carolina's ACC debut. The Devils kept on building the lead to 41-24 at halftime while the 6-3 Hurt tossed in 18 points.

The Gamecocks, in a full-court press opening the second half, dazed the Blue Devils momentarily and closed the gap to 45-36 after six minutes of play. But Duke, sparked by 6-7 soph Fred Kast, steamed to a 53-38 lead in the next four minutes.

The Gamecocks, working up an on-and-off comeback until 25 seconds were left, narrowed the gay to 67-61. A free throw by Duke's Carroll Youngkin in the last 10 seconds finished the scoring.

Tar Heels To Have Busy Christmas

While most of the student body of the University will be home for Christmas, the Tar Heels will be just as active as ever during the holiday period.

Carolina is entered in two big tournaments over Christmas, one in the home state and one in distant Kentucky.

Next Friday, Dec. 19, they disembark for Louisville to take active part in the Blue Grass Invitational tourney. Entered with them are Notre Dame, Northwestern, and Lousiville.

Carolina's foe in the first round is rugged Notre Dame, who last year handed the Tar Heels their worst beating in two seasons in Chicago. The potent Irish return to haunt the Southland again this season, and bring along with them Ace Tom Hawkins, one of the top players in the nation. Last year Hawkins collected 31 points against Carolina, and this year he has been equally tough.

Notre Dame and Carolina meet again just before the holidays end when they tangle in Charlotte Colliseum in a single game on Jan. 3.

Lousiville is always a threat, especially on their home court. Northwestern may be the class of the big Ten and the Wildcats already own a victory over last year's ACC champ, Maryland.

Following the Blue Grass event, the Heels return to North Carolina to defend their Dixie Classic championship against some of the finest in the land.

In addition to the always tough Big Four, Cinciniatti, Yale, Michigan State and Louisvile are entered. Cinciniatti, featuring everbody's all-American Oscar Robertson, will be the favorite in spite of the fact that no out of state team has ever copped the Classic. Michigan State has a player Carolina fans remember from the National Championship of '57 — John Green. Green, then a sophomore, was a thorn in the side of the Tar Heels who eventually went on to win the national corwn.

Carolina's first-round foe is Yale, said to be weakened considerably by graduation. Last year's fine Eli Star Johnnie Lee is among the missing.

So, while the students are eating Christmas turkey the Tar Heels will be hitting the tournament trail, playing in six contests before school starts again in January.

Scoring Averages

With the opening two games of the young season gone by, Carolina has managed to place five men averaging in double figures.

Leading the parade is Dick Kepley, hitting at a 17.0 clip. Tied for second are the guards, York Larese and Harvey Salz, each with a 14.5 mark.

Kepley has also had the hottest night so far, pouring in 24 against Clemson.

Kepley	34	17.0
Salz	29	14.5
Larese	29	14.5
Shaffer	25	12.5

Quizzes, Other Conflicts Stop Student Legislature

By DEE DANIELS

Student Legislature will not meet Thursday night because of several conflicts, including quizzes, Ralph Cummings, speaker of Legislature, said yesterday.

They will meet in a special session Thursday, Jan. 8, though no Legislature meetings are usually held after Christmas holidays until the second semester.

Coming up before the governing body at the special session will be reconsideration of Ed Levy's (SP-UP) bill to send telegrams stating the Legislature's disapproval of segregation actions to Governors Orval Faubus (Arkansas) and J. Lindsay Almond (Virginia).

They will also discuss a bill, introduced by Norman Smith (Ind.) to establish a single annual Legislature election in the spring. The bill was sent to Rules Committee last week.

A bill to approve the Graduate Club constitution, presented by Janie Walters (SP), will also be up for consideration.

Also on the slate for approval are the by-laws of the Medical School Honor Council. A bill for this was introduced by Gary Greer (SP) for the Med School.

Under new business, the solons will consider extension of the attorney general's staff to Campus Code offenses.

A VERY OLD WELL

The Old Well, the campus' much-photographed landmark, hasn't always had shiny white columns. A picture of the structure is on page 3 of today's Daily Tar Heel.

George Harper, assistant dean of the College of Arts and Sciences, said that no student may apply for the grant directly; he must make his application through the college.

To be eligible, a student should have majored as an undergraduate in a subject taught in the high schools. He should not have majored in education. Persons having already begun graduate work or who have been employed as teachers are ineligible.

Candidates must be able to enroll at Peabody in September, 1959.

Preference is given to candidates with a strong liberal arts background.

Word also came this week that 10 articles by Prof. Harland are contained in The Interpreter's Dictionary of the Bible, to be published in 1959 by the Abingdon Press.

In connection with the Athens-Rome representation, Dr. Harland has spent four years, off and on, in archaelogical excavations in the Athens area.

Individual 'Luck' Wires Are Planned

"TO: Coach Frank McGuire and the University of North Carolina Basketball Team, Sheraton Seelbach Hotel, Louisville, Ky."

This will be the beginning of each of the individual team telegrams sent by the University Club on behalf of the dormitories, fraternities and sororities to the Tar Heels when they play in the Blue Grass Holiday Basketball Tournament Friday and Saturday night.

The University Club has sent blanks to each campus organization with a space for an individual message from the organization which will be sent for the group by the club at no cost, and with space for signatures which will be sent for ten cents each.

Messages will be composed by organizational presidents, who with their University Club representatives will collect the signatures and turn them in to Ray Jefferies' office.

The team will stay at the Sheraton Seelbach Hotel and the telegram will be sent there in time for the members read the greetings before the game.

In order to be transmitted by Western Union without hiring overtime personnel the messages, signatures and money must be into the Student Affairs office by 3 p.m. Thursday.

South Building A New Tenant, Housing Office

Are you looking for the University Housing office? If so, don't go to New East annex.

Housing director James Wadsworth and his staff have moved to Room 3 in the basement of South Building.

The office's new location was formerly an old vault that had been renovated when plans for establishing a permanent place got under way.

The office was moved Monday after Director Wadsworth returned from a two-week Navy cruise.

The Geology Department will use the vacated room in New East annex for a classroom.

Mangum & ADPi Win Trophies

Mangum and Alpha Delta Pi last night took first place trophies for their Christmas decorations, according to Edna Faye Pugh, chairman of GMAB's Special Events Committee.

Honorable mentions went to the Pi Phi's in the fraternity-sorority division and to Alderman in the dorm division.

The winners will receive trophies.

Legislator John Umstead Speaks To Faculty Club

North Carolina now has sufficient new buildings which provide enough hospital spaces for the care of the state's mentally ill, it was said here Tuesday by John W. Umstead, a member of the State Legislature in a speech to the UNC faculty club.

However, there are not enough facilities for the mentally retarded children in the state, and Umstead expressed his intention to strive to get 800 additional spaces in the state for these children.

Representative Umstead spoke of the need for money to support necessary educational, health, and other services of the state, and he said he is reluctant to have to pay more taxes.

Yet, he added, if it is necessary to raise taxes in order to prvoide for the same standard of services plus needed additions which can be justified, the taxes ought to be raised.

Umstead is against a sales tax on food, but he is not prepared to say just what taxes ought to be levied, in the event new taxes be come necessary.

He also declared himself in favor of a witholding tax on the state level, similar to the federal withholding tax.

In reply to a uestion about selection of trustees for the University of NoNrth Carolina, Umstead said he is opposed to a suggestion that the governor appoint some of them.

He reaffirmed his position of two years ago for selection of 100 trustees as follows: seven trustees from each of North Carolina's Congressional districts, to make a total of 84 from the districts; plus three each from Orange, Wake and Guilford counties, the home counties of each of the institutions in the Consolidated University; and seven additional members chosen on a basis of population.

'Promotion' Of UNC 'Needs' Is Discussed

Eight members of the University administration discussed financial needs of UNC Monday night with a group of students who will be "promotion" agents during the Christmas holidays.

Representatives to the General Assembly of North Carolina will be contacted during the holidays by students who will discuss with the legislators the University's financial needs.

Monday night the Committee on State affairs (headed by Norman Smith) had members of the administration go over technical aspects of the financial needs, as the A and B budgets and Capital Improvements budget.

Chancellor William B. Aycock introduced to the group Dr. S. B. Alexander of the Division of Health Affairs, who spoke briefly on division needs.. These needs were virtually omitted from a special brochure ("Our Growing University), which will be given to General Assembly members by student workers over the holidays.

Detail of the A and B budgets were gone into by Dr. James L. Godfrey, dean of the faculty. A new students union and alleviation of self-liquidation of new dorms (in the Capital Improvements budget) were discussed briefly by Fred Weaver, dean of student affairs.

Other University administration officials present included: Sam Magill, assistant dean of student affairs; Dr. Alexander Heard, dean of the Graduate School; J. A. Brach, business officer; and Charles Shaffer, director of development.

BULLETIN

University Professor Peter A. Nash was fined $100 and costs on two charges of trespassing early this morning in Chapel Hill Recorder's Court. An original charge of peeping secretly was changed on motion of the prosecution. The trial, finally completed at 1 a.m., ended the longest court session in history here.

IFC And Panhel Council Planning Blood Drive

The Interfraternity Council heard a representative of the Panhellenic Council explain the procedures concerning a blood drive which the two organizations will conduct in February and March.

Miss Phyllis Wall of Panhellenic explained that it would be necessary for minors to get their parents' permission. It is planned that the blood drive will be co-ordinated with some heart operations on children.

The operations require around 15 pints of blood given no later than two hours before the operation. The fraternities and sororities will be divided into groups. Each group will provide the blood necessary for one child.

It will be necessary for the donors to get physical examinations and have their blood typed prior to the operations. The blood will have to be given around 8 p.m.

The IFC voted to hold Greek Week during the week preceding the second weekend in March. After some discussion the IFC decided to ask the various chapters if they would be in favor of having a concert in conjunction with Greek Week.

The concert will probably be on either Friday or Saturday afternoon. There would be no dance; the concert would be held in the gym because Memorial Hall is too small to hold all fraternity mem-of the concert, "It is going to be good, or we aren't going to have it." The concert will supplant the usual pledge banquet held in the spring.

The IFC student government quiz has been prepared and will discussed at the next meeting Jan 12. The quiz is to be taken by all the fraternity pleges.

IT STILL PAYS TO MAIL EARLY

N. C. Mail Service Is Speedy - Usually

By DAN ANDERSON
The Chapel Hill News Leader

If you send a letter from one place in North Carolina ot another, it's likely—but not certain—to arrive the day after you mail it.

That's the main point proved by a test of Tar Heel postal efficiency made by The Chapel Hill News Leader with the help of 25 other newspapers across the State.

In all, 41 letters were mailed, and it took them an average of just above 26 hours to get to a residential address in Chapel Hill.

The longest delivery time was 49 hours 15 minutes for a letter mailed at 10:30 a.m. December 11 in Winston-Salem and received at 11:45 a.m. December 13 in Chapel Hill. A letter each from Kannapolis and Henderson tied for the shortest delivery time—17 hours 30 minutes.

The Winston-Salem laggard led a list of six — 14 per cent — that took two days instead of one to arrive.

In addition, two mailed in Lumberton, and one each from Elizabeth City, Lenoir and Raleigh, failed to arrive until the second day after they were posted. The late one from Lenoir, though, was mailed on a Saturday, and its lateness very likely was due to the Sunday mail holiday before its arrival.

CHRISTMAS QUESTION

It's a question whether the Post Office can keep up to this mark when the Christmas rush gets heavy, and early mailing certainly would be wise. But the results, based on deliveries early in the month, may be taken as typical of the regular run of the mail.

The News Leader sent envelopes to the cooperating papers, asking that they be mailed, with slips inside to tell when this was done. All were stamped and clearly addressed to the home of a News Leader staff member in Chapel Hill. A residence address was used so that the results would be like those of most people's ordinary mail.

ONCE A DAY

One effect of this, of course, was to cause seeming delay in some deliveries. Mail comes once a day, late in the morning, to the house, and a letter that reached the Chapel Hill Post Office at, say, 11 a.m., when the carrier was already on his rounds, had to wait until the day after. But the point of the survey was to find out how common mail gets delivered, and the same thing would happen to any letter.

The second longest a letter took to arrive was 48 hours; one mailed at 11:30 a.m. in Lumberton December 1 came in to the Chapel Hill mail box at 11:30 a.m. December 3. The other Lumberton letter took 43 hours, and latecomers from Elizabeth City, 43 hours 30 minutes; from Lenoir 42 hours 30 minutes; from Raleigh 46 hours 45 minutes. Those were elapsed times from when enclosed slips said the letters were mailed to when they were delivered in Chapel Hill.

Though the Post Office, which encourages mailing early in the day as well as early in the season, may not like this, it didn't seem that a letter mailed in the morning was likely to do much better than one mailed in the afternoon. Several pairs were mailed and did as well though one was posted early, the other later. For instance, one sent from Hickory at 9:30 a.m. arrived at 11:30 a.m. the next day, but so did another mailed from Hickory at 4:15 p.m.

WHO'S TO BLAME?

Proof that mail delay isn't always the fault of the postal service was found in one enclosed slip; it had been marked with a certain date, but that had been crossed out and another, three days later, was substituted. Without embarrassingly naming the place where this happened, it still may be said that people who mail letters may err as much as the service that carries them.

U. S. Supreme Court Agrees To Review Junius Scales Case

WASHINGTON (AP)—The Supreme Court Tuesday agreede to review the second conviction of Junius Irving Scales, of North Carolina, under the membership clause of the Smith Act aimed at Communist party activities.

Scale appealed to the high tribunal after the U. S. Circuit Court in Richmond upheld his second conviction in federal court in Greensboro, N. C. The Circuit Court affirmed a six-year prison sentence given Scales.

The Circuit Court said there was evidence that Scales engaged in "advocacy of concrete action, as distinguished from the promulgation of a theory" in his support of the Communist Party.

The Supreme Court in a decision in another case had said the Smith Act requires more than the teaching and advicacy of an abstract doctrine that the government should be overthrown by force and violence. There must be a call to action toward overthrow, the court declared.

In appealing to the high court to overturn the Circuit Cour,t counsel for Scales contended the Communist Party membership clause of the Smith Act is unconstitutional on its face and as applied to his case.

Scales, first conviction was reversed by the Supreme Court on Oct. 14, 1957, because the government had declined to produce pertinent statements made by informers to the FBI. Several months later Congress passed a law prescribing the procedure for such production. The law says the materiality of FBI reports requested by the defense, fi challenged by the proscution, is to be determined by the trial judge in his chambers.

In the second trial of Scales, the trial judge withheld portions of freports requested by the defense. This procedure was upheld by the Circuit Court, but was protested by counsel for Scales in the new appeal to the high tribunal.

Higher Education Board Makes Recommendation

GREENSBORO — (AP) — The State Board of Higher Education said Tuesday it will recommend the spending of almost 90 million dollars for college capital improvements between 1959 and 1969.

The board, holding its December session here, also said it will recommend that state funds rather than federal funds be used for building new dormitories and that college "A" budgets be made more flexible.

The recommendations will be made in the board's biennial report to the governor, the general assembly and the higher institutions of learning.

As a spokeman for the group headed by D. Hiden Ramsey of Asheville Maj. L. P. McLendon of Greensboro said the board will ask that the "bulk" of the 90 million dollars be authorized by the first legislature in 1959.

The sooner funds are alloted the sooner colleges can plan and construct necessary buildings, he explained.

In that way, he continued, colleges will be able to meet students enrollment as it increases. The peak enrollment is expected in 1965, Maj. McLendon said.

The board's recommendation to use state funds instead of federal funds for construction dormitories should keep students rents from rising any more and may, in some cases, result in lower rents, he said.

The recommendation will specify that the state pay one-half of all dormitory construction costs and put the other half of the costs on a liquidating basis by applying rents to costs.

Under the federal act providing plans for college dormitories all rents from all dormitories (whether built with federal money or not) must be ledged to repay the loan, pay interest on the money and pay the cost of maintenance of the buildings until the loan is repaid.

More flexibility in the "A" budget will be sought through a recommendation whic would permit transfer of funds within the budget item to another (as long as funds remain in the "A" budget) where needed without delay.

Robert Getty Will Head Philologians

Dr. Robert J. Getty, Paddison Professor of Classics here, will become President of the American Philological Association when it meets at Cincinnati, Ohio, Dec. 28-30.

Dr. Getty, who joined the faculty of classics here last summer, coming from University College in Toronto, served this year as first vice president of the international learned society. His installation as president will be held Dec. 30.

Dr. Getty is a world-distinguished Latin scholar. He was chosen as the first Paddison Professor, a position created in the University by a bequest by the late George Lucas Paddson of Burgaw, who declared in his will his intention of aiding UNC to build up and maintain at Chapel Hill "a faculty of great scholars and great teachers."

Prof. Getty is a native of County Londonderry in Northern Ireland. He holds a B.A. degree from The Queen's University of Belfast, Scotland; a B. A. degree and a M. A. degree rom Cambridge University in England. He has taught at Cambridge, at the University of Liverpool, the University of Aberdeen and University College in Toronto.

Students Picket Hill Hall— Protest Performance Of Bach

By CHARLIE SLOAN

The Music Dept. was picketed last night by a group of disgruntled music lovers.

Yesterday was Beethoven's birthday. Last night The Chapel Hill Choral Club presented Bach's Christmas Oratorio.

A group of students protesting the playing of Bach on Beethoven's birthday paraded up and down the walk in front of Hill Hall displaying signs saying "UNC Music Dept. is Unfair to Beethoven," "Go Home, Bach, Go Home," "Happy Birthday Beethoven," "Three Cheers for Ludwig," and, finally, "Good Grief."

Cortland Edwards, a grad student in sociology and anthropology explained, "we just think it's unfair that on such a great man's birthday they are playing someone else's music."

Edwards admitted that the idea for the picket line was inspired by the comic strip "Peanuts."

The picket line broke up after the concert started.

INFIRMARY

Students in the Infirmary yesterday included:

Ann Buche, Brenda Jean Bryan, Andra Hedmeg Ivey, Joseph Thomas Judd, Larry Thomas McCoy, Ray Davs Fennell, William Chandler Price, Joe Paul Hurt, Diana Josephine Strachley, William Parry Dinsmoor White, Robert Chester Enbanks, John Chalmers Eagle and Paul Anthony Guiles.

Voting

Perhaps the founding fathers of the United States were too aristocratic to think in terms of formulating a democracy. However, through the years American democracy has evolved more and more towards a democratic state.

It is a shame that the founding fathers did not have the foresight to see the future evolution of American democracy, for if they had, the right to vote for all citizens would be accorded in the Bill of Rights.

Despite this in most of the states of the nation the right to vote has been accorded all citizens regardless of race, creed, or national origin. And throughout the nation it has generally been agreed to that the right to vote is a property of citizenship in the American democracy.

It is a wonder that states such as Alabama have failed over the years to realize that democracy exists in the United States, and that American citizenship extends further than white protestants..

Yet this is the case, and it is a case that must be rectified before the United States can lay claim with any authority to be a democracy.

The current resistance that Alabama has to the mere mention of surrendering election and registration data for the past several years is indicative that things have not been quite up to par in Alabama.

Surely a certain amount of the vested interests will suffer if the Negro is accorded his right to vote, as he should be in the state, but a Democracy should never purport to be a democracy if it is in reality a government of the vested interests.

The upshot is that the Civil Rights Commission should proceed with all possible speed in order to erase the inequity which has created a second class citizenship in many states of the union.

It is the fond desire of many who believe democracy the best form of government that in the future all people, not only some, will be allowed to vote in all elections.

The Walls

Preceptibly, despite the present victory in Berlin, the walls are closing in on American democracy and the rest of the western powers.

The present chink in the armor of the west is Iraq which is falling and with it is going the Baghdad Pact. This is the now present overt rumbling in the world situation, for troubles are latent in the Far East, where poverty and sickness still promise the extension of Red Chinese hegemony over a greater and greater area.

The situation as present is indicative of the lack of appeal the United States has in the world. It is not an emergency as dire as the situation created this summer in Lebanon, but it is an everpresent danger that needs fresh constructive thinking to avert.

It is all too probable that the present situation will worsen, and if it does, it is doubtful that the State Department has the mental resources to cope with the problems.

A Letter

Editor:

Hurrah! The snow is here and the ground is covered with a white blanket. In other words, conditions are just great to make a student with the 8 o'clock class feel awful.

To all I say keep face and hope, for not too far in the future will be a brighter day. There will come a day, to give Saturday as an example, when all UNC students will be free to blunder on their own.

Christmas is the word. That is the day when chemistry students will get a book filled with completely balanced equations, education majors will receive a film called "Skippy and the Three 'Rs' ", medical students will get a handsome kidney packed in pure appie cider vinegar. There are many other things I could mention, but I think I have named enough to give a picture of how many and varied the presents will be for people this Christmas.

Christmas also has its warm aspects: Boy meets girl and thy go sleding down the path of love and what have you. Song singing is carried on under the windows of many, and sometimes the person who is being sung to awakens and hears the singing. Parties, new dresses, mistletoe and Christmas wrapping all deck the season with beauty, and Frankie tells a joke, but none listen, for their lips are chapped be the freezing wind. It's cold outside.

At the Christmas season the blue bird is gone and a new bird is here to stay. You may see this new bird if you care to. He sits on telephone wires along the highways—he looks cold too.

All holidays are wrapped in greatness. There have been great events on holidays, for I would have only to show you that Abraham Lincoln, George Washington, and others were born on holidays to prove my point.

"Where are you going" shouted the cop!

"Home from a newsh yearsh eve party" replied the drunk.

"New year's eve was two weeks ago" stormed the cop!

"Yeah" said the drunk, "That's why I thought I'd better be getting home."

Are we like the drunk? Why ask such a question? I simply want to know if your supply will last two weeks, for it could be that you might be passing my home over the holidays, and, if you do, I would like to have you stop in at my place and have a drink. While you're there, you might pour me one too.

If you drive home for the holidays, be careful. If you are flying home for the holidays, don't give the stewardess time to buckle you down after she asks "What would you like to have?"

As a second line of thought, do I hear a motion to stay at school over the holidays so we can catch up with Russia? U.S.S.R. has the atomic plane you know. Oh, well, we have tripple-colored tooth paste.

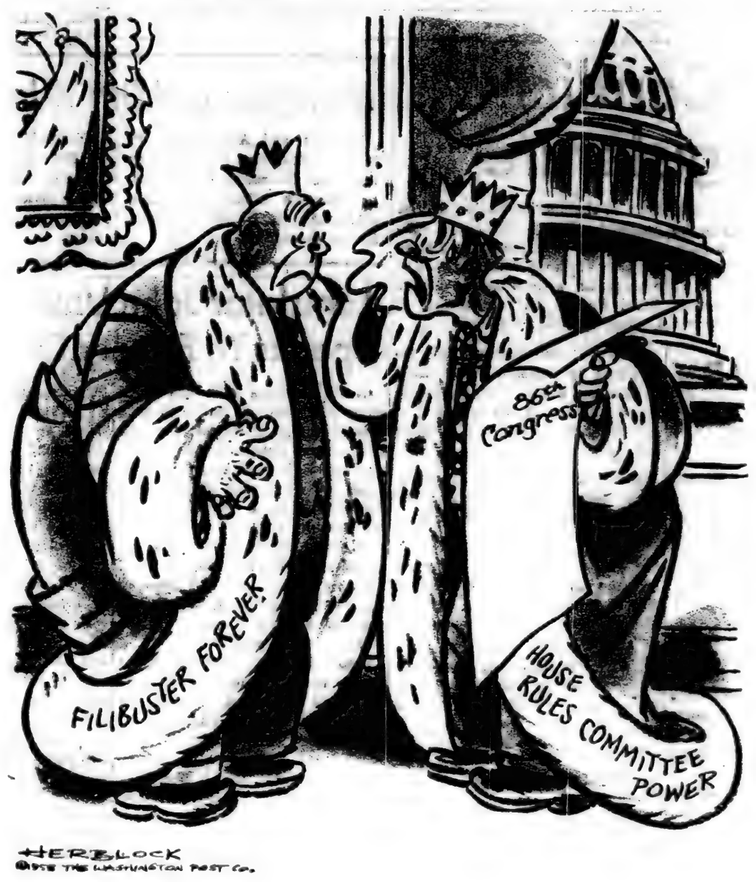
"Some Of These Democrats Seem To Have A Dangerous Belief In Democracy"



A United States Approach To Berlin

Max Ascoli

Thanks must be rendered to Nikita Khrushchev: he has stirred up a major crisis not at the periphery but at the core of our system of alliances. Our diplomacy is wrestling with Soviet Russia's, face to face. It has been freed now from the humiliation of contending with real or fancied proxies. Casuistry had made Mr. Dulles inclined to consider the minor officials of that most synthetic Soviet stooge, the so-called government of East Germany, as Soviet "agents." But for the defense of free Berlin we must contend with Soviet Russia — diplomatically if possible. It is reassuring, however, to know that in West Germany we have redoubtable military forces in constant readiness.

For months the power of our nation has been constantly on the move, like an overtaxed fire brigade rushing to answer too many alarms all over the world. The notion has got abroad that our scurrying diplomats, paratroopers, and Marines are a major disturbance to the peace. Invariably, after a crisis has subsided somewhere, our government has been so busy taking care of the next that it has had no energy left to deal with the causes of each specific commotion or overhaul the network of alarm signals. Khrushchev undoubtedly must have had rather a hilarious time, particularly when, as in the case of Lebanon, the alarm was set off by panicky Levantines. Recently he must have been delighted to see that our noise-making proclivities are accompanied by an inclination to economize on our armed strength and then spread it thin.

For a long time, Soviet diplomacy has been accustomed to practice the slogans we preach—from brinkmanship to unleashing—while filling the air with the verbiage of peace-lovingness. With his new Berlin policy, Khrushchev has signified his determination to start his own Operation Rollback. It is we, the West, who are to be rolled back.

"We will bury you," Khrushchev has lately been telling his American visitors, adding that there was nothing in his intention that could be considered as a deviation from peace-lovingness. His warning is not to be taken personally, we are told, for what in his mind is slated for burial is only the democratic and capitalistic system we live by. The genial mortician makes it clear: he is not a killer. The death of both democracy and capitalism is bound to be natural and speedy.

Among the recent visitors to the Kremlin, Adlai Stevenson seems to have been somewhat reassured by Khrushchev's declaration of nonviolent intention. "Mr. Khrushchev," he wrote, "envisages the further expansion of communism as a peaceful process. No hint of war or the old fire-and-brimstone rhetoric ever entered the talk." He also added that he took heart at Khrushchev's "obvious eagerness to talk"—a surprising statement, since he produces no evidence of Khrushchev's willingness to listen. Yet Mr. Stevenson too, like Walter Lippmann later, keenly analyzes the peculiar notion Khrushchev has of the status quo on which the peaceful coexistence of the two major powers can be established. His status quo means acceptance on our part of the existing level of Communist power with built-in multipliers of accretion.

On the Soviet determination to make the multipliers of accretion work, the recent Berlin move is the most persuasive evidence. For if the three powers that share the defense and the occupation of West Berlin consent to discuss leaving the city, or if they consider that it makes little difference whether the cops who patrol the highway between West Germany and West Berlin wear Russian or East German uniforms, then the Bonn government will know that we have let it down. It will not take long before the two sections of Germany are reunited according to the conditions that Russia will impose. If this happens, there is no more NATO.

It may be said that there is little sense in attaching too much importance to the Western powers' recognition of a de facto government, and that the futility of the non-recognition of China should already have taught us only too clear a lesson. Actually there is no similarity whatever between the situation of China and that of Germany. There are two Chinas now, both born of the civil war. But there was no civil war in Germany at the time that country was partitioned. Neither was there a civil war in eastern Europe at the time when the countries where Russian divisions were stationed were made into People's Democracies.

NATO was the answer the nations of the West gave to Russia's betrayal of its wartime pledges, and to the crushing of whatever freedom was left in eastern Europe. In these eastern European countries our government had diplomatic missions that stayed on after Communism took over. It is good that our missions remained. They can see and be seen. Even if their activities are immensely reduced and their influence outlawed, they are a constant reminder of broken promises and of a bond of friendship that Communism cannot break.

Germany was not liberated, and nothing was promised the Germans. Germany was defeated and conquered. At the end of the war, the heads of the three governments that had crushed Germany met in Potsdam and declared: "President Truman, Generalissimo Stalin and Prime Minister Attlee leave this conference, which has strengthened the ties between the three governmnts and extended the scope of their collaboration and understanding, with renewed confidence that their governments and peoples, together with the other United Nations, will ensure the creation of a just and enduring peace."

It was not the fault of the two Anglo-Saxon powers that the peace which followed the end of the war was neither just nor enduring, nor in fact much of a peace. But while Russia created a condition of neither peace nor war, what our country did in Germany, and in cooperation with the Germans, was unprecedented both in scope and significance. It proved that there is no such thing as a wayward nation. The two sections of Germany, divided between West and East, became the unsurpassable evidence of the West's creativity—and of what Communism does for people of the same nation who fall under its rule. Since the partition in 1945, three million people have fled from the People's Democracy into the Federal Republic.

The greatest of all miracles, the supreme evidence of the redeeming power of freedom, was West Berlin. The capital of that guilt-ridden country, under the leadership of Ernst Reuter, became a manifest proof of the resolution and endurance that free men can impose on themselves. West Berlin gives us not only hope but certainty that the people of the eastern part of Germany have not seceded from the civilization of Europe and of the West. But this hope will be destroyed, this certainty erased should we give up the responsibility of defending the freedom of Berlin. As long as the three Allied Powers are there, the peoples of eastern Europe can have hope. West Berlin has become the living evidence of how abhorrent, arbitrary, and ultimately ephemeral is the division that has split asunder the Europe of the West and of the East.

No wonder Khrushchev wants to have this profoundly disturbing thing—free Berlin—at long last brought to an end. His exansive, dynamic status quo demands it. If free Berlin goes under, then the Bonn government will have to accept unification on Soviet terms. It was Walter Lippmann, reporting on his interview with Krushchev, who wrote: "He left me with the reasonable certainty that if the Western powers proposed a free negotiation by the two Germanys, the Soviet government would not be willing to accept it." If Mr. Lippmann is correct, the recent move of the Soviet Government means that "free negotiation by the two Germanys" must be conducted according to conditions dictated by the Soviet government. A few days later Mr. Lippmann took it upon himself to announce that such a solution would be not too distasteful to a large number of West Germans. This seems to assume that the leaders of West Germany, from Willy Brandt to the men around Konrad Adenauer, may, for the sake of unifying Germany, become inclined to sacrifice the freedom of their nation and their own honor. We greatly respect Mr. Lippmann, but this assumption we refuse to make.

Yet West Germany may well be forced to move toward Russia if by action or default our government leaves it no alternative. Will we really be so insane as to let this happen? There has been much idle talk of Munich in connection with Quemoy, but the Munich of 1938 would pale into insignificance were Berlin's freedom entrusted to anyone but the Western powers. Yet there are, in our own and in the allied countries, honorable men who, driven by hatred of war or by so-called realism, are inclined to accept as inevitable the unification and the neutralization of Germany—under the not too reliable auspices of Soviet Russia. For, it is said, a solution must be found, and is there any other realistic solution available?

To this question the only answer is: there are situations for which solutions cannot be found—at least for long periods of time. We have to endure such situations and so do the Russians. It is not pleasant for Khrushchev to have a free Berlin in the midst of a country he rules. The sight of freedom is not particularly educational or the Soviet troops and agents stationed in the eastern part of the city. It is a tragedy for Germany to remain dismembered, but it would be an even greater tragedy if East Germany ceased to be Communism's open wound that free Berlin keeps purulent. This Khrushchev cannot stand, and he said it.

In another respect Khrushchev is not wrong. We have been accustomed to think of Communism in terms of war, as if we could kill it, or in terms of peace, as if we could live with it, and we are inclined to forget that a political order usually dies by committing suicide. At present, Khrushchev has high hopes for us. We have high hopes for Communism, particularly now that it has entered into what is purported to be its final stretch leading into the withering away of the state.

We stop here and refuse to follow Khrushchev in his grisly Marxist metaphors about grave digging, burial, and the like. The most we can say is that when its time is up, Communism may just as well remain unburied. —The Reporter

On Statistics

Sidney Dakar

Today I was interviewed by a representative of the cigarette industry. After being bombarded for years by the press and radio with every type of poll results imaginable, I was finally interviewed for one of them. This was a rude awakening for me; I have never thought that people were actually interviewed before it was determined by advertisers that 3 out of 4 people prefer a certain product over another.

It is still a little confusing to me when I read that 3 out of four dogs prefer Dr. Jones' dog food. Maybe the advertisers have trained dogs that interview other dogs. I will probably never known in that I do not have a dog that can be interviewed about his preferences.

Mark Twain once remarked that there are three kinds of lies: lies, dam lies and statistics. He was probably saying this partly to produce laughs, but he seemed to have had a piercing insight into the present state of modern polling statistics. Statistics are being used more and more by the advertisers to sell everything from baby diapers to Boeing 707's.

One of my friends works for a large advertising company in New York. He is an expert in statistics. His sole duty is to produce the necessary "facts" in a statistical form to "prove" anything the client wishes. My friend laughs at the gullibility of the American public when they are presented with the "facts." "It is a job, and if I didn't do it someone else would," he says.

Of course not all statistics are deliberate distortions of the truth. There is little reason for doubting some statistics. Statistics can tell us how many people died last year, or, how many cars or yo-yo's were sold and at what price. But, even in these things we move into the realm of the unknown and conjecture when we start assigning reasons for these deaths or sales.

The statistics which are the most misleading, hence the types that are used most frequently by the advertisers, is in the field of interviews and questionairies. To get objective answers about things that are, by nature, subjective is a very difficult, if not impossible, task. Beware of the hundreds of public opinion polls which prove this or that. The manufacture is not trying to prove anything; he is trying to sell his products.

The next time you have anything "proved" to you with statistics it will behoove you to take a long look at the proof before laying out your hard earned cash for what you have been told is a superior product. The highest mathematical analysis of data that is subjective in nature is no more accurate than the common horse sense opinion given by a farmer while sitting on his rail fence.

Statistics in some of the physical sciences are very accurate, but we will do well to remember that "statistics in most fields is a means of being precise about matters of which we will remain ignorant."

Education In The South

The schools are still closed in Little Rock and Norfolk. Some of the children, the luckier and richer ones, are going to private schools or have been packed off to live with relatives and friends in towns where the public schools are still open. The rest are simply killing time, wasting the energy and curiosity of youth, waiting for somebody to do something. But nobody does anything—neither the local governments nor the national government—and the only change in the situation that seems likely is the closing of more schools.

The week before Thanksgiving, 309 clergymen representing seventeen Protestant and Jewish denominations in Atlanta issued a long statement that did no more than describe the impasse realistically when it declared: "The choice which confronts us now is either the end of enforced segregation in public schools or no public schools whatever."

It seems to us that there have been a lot of ludicrously loose definitions of the "moderate" position all during the school crisis, but one paragraph in the clergymen's statement struck us as an admirable summary of Southern moderation:

"There are some areas in which some integration in schools at this time would be possible without insurmountable difficulty, as has already been demonstrated in certain sections of the South, while there are other areas where such integration would involve needless hardship and grave danger. We have the hope that, if our leaders will offer evidence of good faith toward providing constitutional rights for all citizens, the Federal Government will be willing to leave the working out of details in local hands. We believe it is possible, under the ruling of the Supreme Court, for a state to take reasonable steps to comply with the law of the land and at the same time give due consideration to local situations and avoid an indiscriminate desegregation of the public schools."

What reasonable man coul quarrel with this conclusion? Well, apparently one of the most reasonable men in the U. S. Senate could. Senator Richard B. Russell (D., Georgia) had this to say about "the ministers' manifesto":

"It would be cowardly to surrender when the people of Virginia and Arkansas, who have been expected to be soft' on this matter, are still holding out.

'If we acquiesce in this movement, which, in my opinion, would result in mongrelization, there is no power on earth that can restore the white race to Georgia."

And Georgia's senior senator concluded, "I don't think the colored people would be willing to deny their chilren education for twenty years." Mr. Russell, on the other hand, is apparently quite willing to purchase compulsory segregation at the price of compulsory illiteracy for both races.—The Reporter

University Volleyball Ends

University Volleyball

The University Volleyball teams rounded out their regular season play for the fall semester Monday, with captain Pete Mullis leading his Green team to the victory.

The Green team had a season's record of 9 wins against only one defeat, which was good enough to take the top position in the league. They were followed closely by the White team, which boasted an 8 and 2 record. In third spot was the Blue team with a 6 and 4 record.

Came From Behind

In the final game the Green team had to come from behind to take the top position away from the Blue team. In this game the Blue team walked away with the first game taking a 15 to 5 margin, but the strong Green team bounced back to take the final two games with scores of 15 to 10 and 15 to 8.

Outstanding players for the Green team were along with Captain Mullis, Gus Johnson and Don Skakle.

Along with the honors of winning the final game the Green team was awarded a handsome trophy, which is evidence of their fine work.

The University Volleyball League is at rest now, but plans are being made for the league to resume action in the Spring Semester.

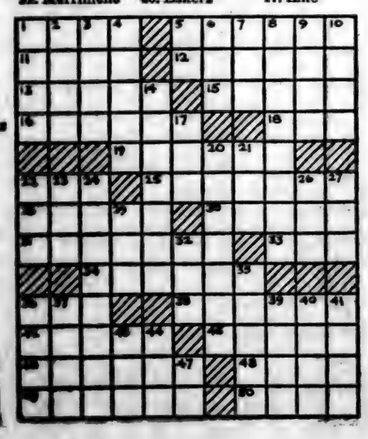
Yesterday's Answer



The first road trip of the season, a week-long event, got under way yesterday for Carolina when the Tar Heels left Chapel Hill for Columbia, S. C. where tonight they meet the Gamecocks of South Carolina.

After the Gamebird contest, the Tar Heels roll right on into Louisville, without returning to Chapel Hill. There they face Notre Dame on Friday night in the opening game of the Blue Grass Invitational Tournament.

The young Tar Heels have two earlier victories under their belt, and now emerge fromm a week's lay-off into a rash of games. After the Louisville affair the Heels will hardly have time for Christmas before they return to North Carolina to enter the renown Dixie Classic.

Even this early in the season, there are certain conclusions that can be drawn: 1—That McGuire's boys are much better than anyone figured they would be. 2—That they can beat any team in the country on a given night. 3—That Dick Kepley has come around as everyone hoped. 4—That Larese and Moe will be great, if not this year, then next.

5—That the conference race may not be so much a dog fight as everyone figured. 6—That Carolina has a compact team that plays together. 7—That the Tar Heels are better defensively than last year. 8—That this crop of sophomores has more finesse than anybne hoped for.

A few significant figures: Dick Kepley, in the first two games, has hauled in 22 rebounds. That makes an average of 11, which was high in the ACC last season. Doug Moe has 16 recoveries.

Two players, both sophs, have 100% shooting averages from the foul line. York Larese has hit 9 of 9 and Lou Brown has connected on 4 out of 4.

Carolina's average points per game total is 83 compared to the opponents 64. The Tar Heels have hit on 48% of their shots from the floor.

Tonight's game with South Carolina shapes up as a breather, in spite of the fact it's being played on the SC home court. The Gamecocks haven't looked too good thus far, losing 2 of 3 games. The two they lost were close, but to Duke and Georgia.

New Gamebird mentor Harvey Hambrick may have gotten more than he bargained for by signing on with South Carolina. The Gamecocks just haven't had the horses since Grady Wallace left, and they face stiff competition all year long.

Speaking of stiff competition, how about Virginia beating West Virginia? That made Carolina look good, since the Tar Heels had little trouble with the Cavaliers. West Virginia had been ranked in the top 5 nationally until the upset verdict to Virginia. The funny thing is that the night before, West Virginia had massacred Duke by 101-62.

Another ACC team holding its own, although losing, is Maryland. The Terps forced tough Kentucky into an overtime before bowing 58-56. Yes, the ACC is tough.

Tar Heel fans can keep an eye on another contest tonight. Notre Dame, Carolina's opening round foe in the Louisville tournament, and Michigan State, an entry in the Dixie Classic, will be mixing it tonight. Both teams are rated among the best around.

Unbeaten Tar Heels Meet South Carolina Tonight

By RUSTY HAMMOND

Carolina's undefeated Tar Heels are off on a week-long road trip today, the first stop being tonight in Columbia, S. C., where they meet the South Carolina Gamecocks.

The Tar Heels in their first two outings bowled over Clemson and Virginia with hot second half play.

After winning its opener from Wofford, South Carolina has bowed in two close games to Georgia and Duke.

5 In Double Figures

The Tar Heels enter tonight's fray with five players averaging in double digits. Center Dick Kepley leads the pack with a 17 point average, while Harvey Salz and York Larese are second with 14.5 each.

Pericola Stars

Returning star Cookie Pericola, one of the best guards in the league, is the man on whose shoulders the Gamecock hopes fall squarely. Pericola had a 15.1 average last year.

A renovated Dick Kepley, soph flashes Doug Moe and York Larese, and old standbys like Lee Shaffer, Ray Stanley Danny Lotz and Harvey Salz make the Heels a tough aggregation for anyone to face.

Kepley Big Surprise

Kepley's enthusiastic play has surprised the most ardent of Tar Heel supporters, and his improved shooting and rebounding is the talk of the league.

Last year the Tar Heels had it all their own way against the Gamecocks, sweeping both regularly scheduled lontests. In the game at South Carolina, Carolina ripped up the floor for 115 points and their high total for the year.

The Tar Heels do not return home after the contest but go directly to Louisville where they take part in the Blue Grass invitational tourney, meeting Notre Dame in the opener Friday night.

ACC Scoring

GREENSBORO — (AP) — Virginia sophomore guard Jay McKenzie and senior guard Ray (Cookie) Pericola of South Carolina have jumped into an early scoring lead in the Atlantic Coach Conference, with North Carolina center Dick Kepley a close third.

McKenzie, in six games through last Saturday night's upset victory over West Virginia boasts a 17.5-point average. Pericola, in two games, also is averaging 17.5 points and Kepley,in a pair of games, is averaging 17.0.

Rounding out the top five according to ACC Service Bureau figures, are John Richter of North Carolina State at 16.2 points a game and sophomore Howard Hurt of Duke at 16.0.

A pair of Carolina Tar Heels, Lee Shaffer and York Larese, and South Carolina's Mike Callahan are leading in ACC in other fields of efficiency.

Larese has hit nine for nine from the foul line in his two outings, while Shaffer has hit nine of 13 shots from the floor for a shooting percentage of .692. Callahan is averaging 15.5 rebounds.

Trespassing Charges Net Professor Fine, Court Costs

By JIM JONES
Chapel Hill News Leader

A 37-year-old University professor was fined a total of $100 and costs on two charges of trespassing early Wednesday morning. Earlier charges of peeping secretly were amended on the motion of the state.

Chapel Hill Recorder's Court Judge W. E. Stewart fined Peter H. Nash $10 on the charges he allegedly trespassed at the Hillsboro St. apartments on the night of Sept. 19 and Nov. 23.

The trial, which began at 2:30 p.m. Tuesday, continued until shortly after 1 a.m., and court attaches said it marked the longest court session in recent memory here.

Nash, an associate professor in the Department of City and Regional Planning, pleaded nolo contendre to the Sept. 9 charge of trespassing and guilty to the Oct. 23 charge as amended.

Eric P. Elliott, a senior religion student at the University and a resident of the apartmets, testified that he saw a man whom he identified as Nash about 11:30 p.m. Sept. 19 near the door of an apartment occupied by Mrs. Lois Saute. He claimed he saw the defendant again about 10:30 p.m. Oct. 30 "looking into two bedrooms."

Mrs. Lavert Hooper, another resident of the apartment, claimed she saw Nash on the night of Oct. 23. Her husband said he saw the defendant the night of Sept. 19.

Nash testified that he was not near the apartments on the night of Sept. 19 and instead attended a faculty showing at the Ackland Art Museum. He admitted being at the apartment during daytime hours Sept. 28, the day after losing his dog, looking for the animal. He said the apartment area was suggested as a place to look for his dog by a neighbor, Ralph Ashworth.

He also admitted goin gto the apartments to search for the dog at 10:30 p.m. on Oct. 9, at about 11:11 p.m. on Oct. 23, and on Oct. 30 at about 9:45 p.m.

He said his sole purpose in going to the spot was to look for the dog and said he had also searched other places, including the University campus. Durham and Chapel Hill newspapers were introduced to show that he advertised for the lost dog after it disappeared Sept. 27.

Nash was arrested Oct. 31 by Chapel Hill police after a license number, supplied by Mrs. Hooper who said she got it from a car parked at the apartments was identified as belonging to the defendant.

Capt. Coy Durham of the police said he questioned the defendant Oct. 31 and was told early in the conversation that Nash had not been near the apartments. He later admitted that he was here Oct. 30, Durham testified.

Asked about the conversation later, Nash told the court he hesitated to tell of his appearance at the apartments because he was "afraid of the police." He said his fear could be traced to adolescent experiences in Germany.

Nash said he never went by the apartments "specifically, but was always just driving by" when he stopped.

"I've never done anything that could be construed as dishonest or immoral," he said.

Victor Bryant, Sr., of Durham and Emery Denny, Jr., Chapel Hill, were attorneys for the defense. Solicitor John Tapley was assisted by Attorney James Farlow of Chapel Hill, as private prosecutor.

New York Still Aim Of 'Y' Group

"Never give up."

That's the cry from the Y: After cancelling one trip to New York City due to transportation difficulties, they are now scheduling a trip for the weekend of the semester break—Thursday through Saturday.

The cost for the big city fling is estimated at $30. All interested persons should sign up no later than Jan. 15 at the Y. More information about the trip will be announced later.

However, some of the present plans are to visit the United Nations, the main purpose of the trip, and visit delegations in their embassies or rooms in the UN. Last year the group heard a speech on the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and visited the Russian embassy. Plans are also on the agenda as well as dinners with such well known persons as Frank Porter Graham.

Meetings will be held later to give more details of the trip.

There may be another New York trip in the spring. That one or the upcoming trip may be made with State College.

Playmakers To Present Experimental Production

The Carolina Playmakers will present an experimental production, "An Evening of Mime," in the Playmakers Theatre Thursday and Friday at 8:30 p.m.

Russell Graves, visiting professor of dramatic art, is directing the production, which will include several sketches in pantomimic action.

"Mime," says Graves, "is possibly the oldest of the performing arts. It has manifested itself in primitive ritual, worship, the silent film and stage performance. Most recently it has experienced a renascence throughout the world due to the devotion of those demarkable Frenchmen, Marcel Marceau, Etienne Decroux, and Jean-Louis Barrault."

The experimental production grows out of an informal class in pantomime, which Professor Graves is conducting.

Admission to the production is free.

Two Openings Available On GMAB

Two chairmen of Graham Memorial Activities Board committees have resigned, according to a report yesterday from Bob Carter, president of GMAB.

Louis May resigned his post as chairman of the Current Affairs Committee because of a heavy schedule. The other resignation came from Graham Adams, former head of the Drama Committee. He resigned because he will not be in school next semester.

Carter said any student interested in applying for the chairmanship of either committee should fill out an application blank in the GM Information Office.

Plans already made by these committees will not be affected by the change in chairmen, Carter said.

Phi Defeats Bill Favoring Reunification

A plan for the reunification of Germany was defeated by the Philanthropic Literary Society in its meeting Tuesday night.

The bill proposed the reunification of East and West Germany under a peace treaty between the occupying powers similar to the one agreed to for Austria in 1955. The main feature of the 1955 treaty was the guaranteed neutrality of Austria.

Rep. Bob Morley argued that a united Germany would fill the power vacuum in Central Europe and at the same time provide a buffer state between Russia and the West. He said that a united Germany would please the Russians in that it would be neutral, rather than half heavily armed by the West and half by the Russians themselves reunification could hardly be unpopular among the German people themselves, after twelve years of division and occupation, he said.

Speaking for the bill, Rep. Bill Jackson said that he felt that reunification of Germany on a neutral basis would not affect their friendsihp with the West, as there exist strong anti-communist feelings in West Germany.

He added that Russia would stand to lose face, since she would naturally disapprove of reunification with free elections.

Rep. Johnson attacked the idea of German neutrality. The Germans have been the strongest suporters of NATO in Europe, and their withdrawal would noticeably weaken the alliance. He felt that the Russians stand to gain more than the West by the reunification of East and West Germany. Rep. Johnson also brought out possible French objections to a strong, reunited Germany.

The bill was defeated by the margin of one vote. Rep. Bill Jackson ing.

Tar Heels Beat South Carolina By 70-57 Count

COLUMBIA, S.C.—Carolina's oncoming Tar Heels made it three in a row here last night by racking up South Carolina 70-57. The Tar Heels led most of the game and were never in serious trouble after they led at 16-0 midway through the first half.

Carolina's "Magic 5" (Shaffer, Moe, Kepley, Larese, and Salz) did most of the damage. Even South Carolina's hot-shot guard Cookie Pericola was not enough to make even a close game of it.

From here Carolina disembarks for Louisville, Ky., where they meet Notre Dame in the first round of the Blue Grass tournament..

Carolina hit only 40 per ecnt of its shots from the floor, but controlled the ball most of the game on the rebounding of Dick Kepley.

Four Tar Heels hit the double digits, with Larese (17) and Moe (15) leading the way. Harvey Saltz and Kepley had 12 apiece.

Carolina led by nine at the half at 34-25. Just at the beginning of the second half the Heels poured in five straight buckets without a miss. Their longest lead of the night came with 6 minutes to go when South Carolina was fouling desperately; at that point the Tar Heels led by 17 at 63-46.

Cookie Pericola led the Gamecock attack with 21 points, most of them scored from the outside as he was unable to drive against the Carolina defense.

Dick Kepley and Bob Frantz were given the heave-ho by the refs in the second half for mixing it a little over a loose ball.

Rhodes Group Selects Furtado As Finalist

Don Furtado is one of two North Carolina candidates for a coveted Rhodes scholarship.

The other candidate from this state is Landon Rowland, a student at Dartmouth College.

From a field of 12 North Carolina college and university men (four of whom were from UNC), Furtado and Rowland were announced as candidates to the regional finals by a Rhodes Scholarship Committee at Guilford College yesterday.

Furtado and Rowland will compete with 10 other candidates from five states for the four Rhodes scholarships from this region. The regional competition will be held in Atlanta, Ga., this weekend.

Other UNC students competing for state representation to the regional finals were: Al Goldsmith, Curt Gans and Don Gray.

Furtado, student body president here, is a senior English major from Garner. Among the various honors Furtado has received include: membership in the Grail and Old Well. His fraternity is Phi Gamma Delta.

Last year Furtado served as vice president of the student body and before that was a member of Student Legislature.

Last Concert Tonight

The last record concert before the holidays will be held this evening at 7:30 in the Main Lounge of Graham Memorial and sponsored by Graham Memorial Activities Board.

Jazz is the order of the day, and an album entitled "Jazz Mainstream" will be heard. Artists include Oscar Pettiford, Red Mitchell and Erroll Garner on the piano.

Administration Requests Removal Of Loyalty Oaths

CHRISTMAS—Christmas is coming and to help usher in the spirit of the season on campus, (and to help kill time until the longed for vacation) the YMCA is conducting its annual Carol Sing tonight in Y Court. Shown practicing are, from left to right, Betty K. Johnson, Bill Sugg and Dr. Joel Carter.

'Y's Annual Carol Sing Gets Y Court In Seasonal Mood

By BEN TAYLOR

Y Court will echo with the strains of familiar Christmas carols tonight when the annual Carol Sing is held from 9 to 9:30.

Action will center around the tall cedar now standing in the center of the Y Court. Dr. Joel Carter of the Music Dept. will be on hand to direct the Men's Glee Club in one special number, "The Christmas Song," and also, the expected hundreds of students in most of the familiar carols.

YMCA President Bill Sugg yesterday categorized the sing as an opportunity for numerous campus groups to attend and make the event one of considerable campus-wide participation.

The sing will be stationary—that is, everything will take place in Y-Court—as opposed to past years when large numbers of students scattered throughout the campus caroling.

As an added attraction, Sugg said hot chocolate and donuts will be served to any and all to make the occasion more attractive and more comfortable.

"And if the weatherman goofs and we get another coating of white flakes, we'll probably extend the menu to include snow cream," Sugg said.

Alford May Be Denied Seat In House

WASHINGTON — (AP) — A House committee recommended 3-2 yesterday that Dr. Dale Alford, Little Rock segregationist, be denied his House seat next year until an investigation is made of his election.

Alford, a write-in candidate, defeated the veteran Rep. Brooks Hays (D-Ark) by about 1,200 votes after a campaign that had echoes of the Little Rock school integration problem. Hays took what he called a moderate stand on the integration issue.

The committee, with its two southern members strongly dissenting, recommended that when the new house convenes next Jan. 7 Alford be asked to stand aside and not take the oath of office until an investigation is made into charges of irregularities and fraud in the election.

The House itself will decide whether Alford shall be seated.

The majority committee report said that evidence presented established a prima facie case of fraud and irregularity in the conduct of the election.

Signing the majority report were three northerners—Republican Reps. Kenneth Keating (NY) and Dennisson (Ohio) and Democratic Rep. Thomas O'Neill (Mass).

Chairman Clifford Davis (D-Tenn) and Robert Jones (D-Ala) submitted a minority report.

They said there was no percedent for denying a seat to a certified winner of an election. On the other hand, they said, it is established procedure, in such cases, to seat an election winner pending an investigation.

Information Offices Yields Many Services For Area

By LEFTY ROWLETTE

"When will classes resume after the holidays?"

"Has anyone turned in my sunglasses?"

"I'd like to check out a chess set, please."

"Could I reserve the Rendezvous Room for next Friday?"

"Wonder if you could mimeograph some letters for our club?"

"Could I have some change for the cigarette machine, lease?"

These requests and hundreds more are asked by students, faculty and even townspeople at the Graham Memorial Information Office every day. They are handled as more or less routine by Mrs. Douglas Fambrough, office manager, and her five student staff members, Larry Anderson, Paul Belanga, Joe Creekmore, Larry Graham and Brooks Wicker.

Although supplying information about nearly everything from students' addresses to the weather consumes a large part of the staff's time, they also perform many other services.

They reserve rooms in GM for parties and meetings; take requests for music to be played in the lounge and check out material for games such as chess, checkers and cards.

They run a lost and found service where, according to one staff member, anything from "sunglasses to almost anything" can be found.

They take orders for mimeograph and embossograph work to be done for campus organizations.

Organizations with offices in GM look to the Information Office as a post office and staff members sometimes feel like human clocks after ansering "What time is it?" several times a day. (They point out that there is a clock on the wall, but people still ask the question.)

Because of its numerous services many people (especially the staff) feel that the name of the office should be changed from Information to Nearly Anything.

Frosh Girls Get Minor Rule Changes

The Woman's Residence Council enacted a series of minor changes in freshman coed rules at a meeting Tuesday night.

Laurie Gard, president of the WRC, pointed out that the changes were made after a discussion with freshman coeds in Spencer Dormitory.

The activities fund, to which all coeds pay $1, has been put under WWRC so that excess money can be used to establish basic reference libraries in the women's dorm.

According to freshman rules, coeds will be given four weekends of not more than eight overnights in the future during the first semester. The second semester will give the girls unlimited weekends.

During the first semester the freshmen coeds may not stay in fraternity houses after 8 p.m. No change has been established in closing hours.

The WRC considered only freshman rules Tuesday night.

Proposal To Be Noted By Trustees

RALEIGH, — (AP) — University of North Carolina officials have decided to eliminate from job application form a question related to Communist Party membership.

Approval of the Consolidated University's board of trustees will be necessary to delete the question which has required job applicants at UNC since 1949 to state whether they have ever had any connections with communism.

Consolidated University President William C. Friday, in reply to questions, said Wednesday that discontinuance of the question on communism as part of the personnel form had been recommended by University Chancellor William B. Aycock.

"Acting under the authority granted the administration by the board of trustees in 1949," Friday said, "I shall report to the executive committee at its next meeting my approval on Chancellor Aycock's recommendation."

Discovery of an avowed communist on the University faculty in the late forties led to demands some trustees that faculty members be required to take a "loyalty oath."

Hwoever, the Trustees voted unanimously on May 24, 1949, to leave the University's Communist problem in the hands of administrative officials. William D. Carmichael Jr., acting president of the Consolidated University at the time, and chancellors of the University at Chapel Hill, State College and Woman's College urged such a course.

A loyalty oath was never required. University officials at Chapel Hill put this question in their job application forms:

"Are you now, or have you been at any time in the past, a member of, or in anywise affiliated with either the Communist Party or with any organization or association controlled, to your knowledge, by Communists? If so, please explain fully."

This is the qutstion which would be dropped from the job application form.

Fire Damage At $40,000

The damage to contents in the University Storeroom fire Dec. 5 was estimated yesterday at about $40,000, according to Webb Evans, director of the UNC Office of Purchase and Stores.

The estimate was made jointly by UNC Office of Purchase and Stores and by the UNC Accounting Department.

J. S. Bennett, director of operations said yesterday that the Office of the N. C. State Insurance Commissioner, Raleigh, had not yet given an appraisal of the damage to the Storeroom building.

"The building roof has been damaged and cannot be replaced," Bennett explained. "The question is: Are the walls safe enough to remain?

"We hope to get another building off the campus to replace the whole present building. This is right in the center of the campus, an area which should look beautiful. The storeroom is much used and will always have a factory-like appearance."

Responsibility

The question has been raised in connection with the Levy Bill of where and to whom an individual owes his responsibility. The answer is simple.

A person owes his responsibility to no one else but himself. He owes a responsibility to that which he believes good and true. He owes no responsibility to the beliefs of others.

A person's responsibility in any society is limited by the farthest horizons that he can see. From the widest, not the narrowest, perspective he must make his judgments, and on the basis of his experience and the beliefs he has come to adopt, he must make his decisions.

This is no less true of an elected officer. He has the sole obligation to present what he believes to the electorate. On the basis of his the electorate should cast their ballots. The sole obligation of the elected officer is not to compromise those beliefs during his term of office.

A leader is a person who can do this honestly, courageously, and effectively. All others are followers. A representative would have to take a poll on each issue in order to be truly representative, and then he would cease to be a man, but would be a composite of men in terms of numbers.

The primary obligation is to the self. Too many of the legislators, both student and adult, seem to forget this.

Mao

Those who would expect any great change in the Red Chinese government as a result of the departure of Mao-Tse Tung are going to be sadly disappointed.

Mao has built up too sound an economic plan for China to be discarded by any successor. Moreover, China has moved into a position where it can call about as many plays as Russia, and will probably do so in the future.

The decentralized economic plan of the Chinese, features small self-sufficient manufacturing communities, which will be before too long strong enough to withstand outside attack, and may be the one way to alleviate some of the poverty that permeates China.

That China has grown strong under Mao is evident, but regardless of whether Mao had stayed in or left, China will not separate from Russia in the near future. Due to the ineptness of American foreign policy, China's near future is tied in with the Soviet Union, almost as much as Russia's long range future is dependent on China.

Rumors to the effect that Kruschev eased out Mao and policy changes will result, should be discounted. Besides the alternative would not be much of an improvement.

Why?

Why is it that sorority pledges can gain points by going to fraternity parties, but not accumulate points toward the Pan Hellenic Council's best pledge award by going to dormitory parties?

It seems that the dorm boys are getting a bad deal. Perhaps the Pan Hel in the future might be less prejudiced toward the independent.

Notes In Review

Arthur Lessing

Admittedly it was a wonderful and inspiring idea to have the Chapel Hill Choral Club perform the first three parts of Johann Sebastian Bach's Christmas Oratorio in this week before Christmas. The results in last Tuesday evening's concert in Hill Hall, however, were so disastrous that even the diea and its good intent were erased in the realization of it.

By not using the orchestra which is called for in Bach's score and replacing it with an organ and two pianos, immediately half of Bach's music was removed from the performance. The orchestra provides a solid base for the chorus, is active in obligato parts throughout all of the solo arias, and brings to the choral sound the excitement of individual instruments, especially the tympany and trumpet parts in this particular score. Instead of the beautiful interweaving of singer and instrumental parts, we were given the voice with a background of a clanking piano. Instead of the passion and brilliance of kettle-drums and trumpets we were given the dry sound of two pianos, which, caught in-between the luscious choral lines, sounded as ludicrous as two mouth harmonicas in the Boston Symphony. A large choir was used in this performance. Six soloists, and the organist rounded out the large number of performers.

The opening chorus, "Christians, be joyful", was more or less representative of what was to come. Instead of the dramatic kettle-drum beats followed by trumpets in one of the most glorious moments in music, we were presented with the sound of the pianos playing as if they didn't really care what came across as long as all the notes were there. The result was pitiful and about as exciting as a Clementi piano sonata. The choral entrance was devoid of all expression and although the diction was excellent (one could understand the words perfectly) this only served to make noticeable that there seemed to be little to no connection between the words and the music they were singing. To sing that Christmas should be joyful takes joy. The entire choir seemed absolutely unprepared, emotionally or psychologically, to either give or take joy. The director must be held responsible for this. So, it was dullness from the start, as Bach undoubtedly would have turned in his grave knowing that his passionate love of Christmas and the birth of Christ expressed in music did not even get the slightest of chances to being brought out.

The tenor recitatives, sung by Robert Melton, were almost all sung too slow. Apparently Mr. Melton seems to have the idea that expression is created by singing his Evangelist lines in the most dragging of dragging tempos. Actually, it created the very opposite: his words sounded foolish and boring rather than the glorious declaration of the Greatest of All News. Tempo-wise, the arias fared a bit better. I have mentioned already the lack of obligatos. But there is really no excuse for the unimaginative and inflexible playing of the piano accompaniment. Bach is neither Czerni or Salieri but a composer of vigor and guts and imagination who makes his obligato accompaniments as important musically as his voice lines. Barbara Peacock, soprano, Betty Jean Smith, alto, Beth Diaz, soprano, David Vaughan, baritone and Marvin Tatum, bass, all sang without apparent concern for either the words or musical sense of their arius. Only in the duet, "Lord, Thy Mercy", did I find myself touched, if not moved, by the performance. Here, again, the piano's insensitive playing ruined whatever was of value. In all the solo parts of the oratorio there was too much stiffness of expression, lack of sensitivity toward the fusion of word and music, no passion to speak of, and, most important, no glory and joy that came across. Only in Mr. Holmes's brief appearances (in two bass recitatives) did I find genuine drama; the bass really seemed to be "in it." And his genuine involvement with what he was singing made the music true to its intent. In his first recitative, with the chorale, I think the organ should provide more dramatic emphasis in the harmonic change between the bass part and the women's part, by either playing the preceding (the chord that changes the "mood") chord that "introduces" the bass with more accent or with a louder tone value. Mr. Watkins' playing of the "Symfonia" that opens part II of the work was, however, quite adequate if not particularly interesting.

In the choral "Break forth, O beauteous heavenly light," fofr the first time during the concert, did I find joy in the choir's singing. But a little later, in the "Glory to God in the highest", the "glory" was turned into the wailing "o" of an aching toothache—at least, that is what it sounded like. In that number too, the ending was particularly poor by not enough proper preparation for the final cadence.

The chorales were sung with proper regard for their sensuous phrasing and shifting harmonies. The variations on the harmonic framework that provided Bach a means to express through essentially the same music different emotional ideas should have been brought out more. One chorale did not sound different enough from the next.

But enough. I realize there are great limitations in performing with people who are not professional musicians but have given their time and energy to sing some great music together. I was not really disappointed with the technical quality of the performance; that one can expect. But the spiritless direction, the lack of emotional insight into the message of this work, and the inability of the conductor to stir his performers to that pitch of excitement and involvement that is so desperately necessary for the execution of Bach's religious works made the evening a complete disaster. Certainly it could have been possible to use an orchestra (with a university orchestra of over seventy members right on campus) and to restore that which rightfully belongs to this music. Certainly, the soloists could have been guided to sing with a little more "give" and drama. Certainly, this able group should be able to bring to Bach's music a sense of joy and glory. But all this is a matter of inspiration which Mr. Carter did not seem to have created among his performers.

Christmas means only as much as what is brought to it in spirit. So it is with Bach's music. It has to be brought out, and in the bringing out one discovers his passion and joy with this season of Christmas—.

A Letter

Editor:

I have read your publications on many occasions; sometimes with disgust, many times with unconcern and rarely with amusement. I have read condemnations and slanderous satire of everyone and everything from Richard Nixon and the Episcopal Church to Billy Graham and Carolina football drinking habits. The opinions expressed in the DTH are usually so prejudiced and Puritan it isn't funny. Puritan did I say; I have read things in this paper I wouldn't read if it were printed on toilet paper so I could promptly flush it. I have read Anthony Wolff's "literary gems" till I have become ill. His attempts at intellectual criticisms and reviews remind one of the child who tries to imitate his parents by "dressing up" in their clothes. The mantle he drapes around his column no more makes a critic out of him than does the clothing make a grownup out of the child. With the exception of your front page, I have found your paper a combination of opinions and commercialism. I would like to know who gives a happy damn about the A & P store weekly specials? I have yet to see a church directory in the Saturday edition. And God forbid that news should be published! The object of any good newspaper is to go and seek news; not try to create it in an effort toward useless controversy.

This paper has sloughed off every responsibility to the students of this campus. In the place of literary standards it has substituted "garbage.' Drive on DTH, drive on toward oblivion!!!

On The Hungarian Revolt

Sidney Dakar

I was rather amused the other day when I read a description of the reasons of some students at another university when they were asked to support a drive to send arms to the Hungarians who were then in armed revolt against the Rusians. Let's explore this a bit further. It is ironic that many of the "spineless" and politically naive students of the legislature described used the best judgment, without knowing the reasons, and refused to send arms.

The writer mentioned, rather matter of factly, that we encouraged the Hungarians to revolt. Burst of all, the "we" is extremely ambiguous. Does he mean we the press, we the people, we the official U. S. government, or we what? Of course we don't censor the mails that go from people in the U. S. to relatives in Hungary. There certainly might have been some encouragement in this manner without our knowledge. However, it is doubtful that a person with the welfare of his relatives in mind would make such a suggestion, knowing the letters might be censored in Hungary and point the finger of suspicion at the receiver.

What about the matter of official U. S. encouragement for a revolt? Of course it is very difficult for the U. S. government to realize the full context of all the Hungarian broadcasts over the "Voice." Hungarian language experts, usually refugees, read these broadcasts and they might at least try to hint of revolt, even if there wasn't any hint in the written script. Most people of our State Department, who have worked on this problem, maintain that there was no conscious policy of the U. S. government that encouraged open, armed revolt by the populous in Hungary, or in any other country.

If one stops and considers, even lightly, the problems of a revolt of this nature, it should be apparent that the U. S. government would not maintain such a policy. Suppose the U. S. had officially sent tons of arms to the Hungarians. This probably would have been a declaration of war with Russia, as she was determined to hold Hungary at all costs. I for one, would not have been happy if the U. S. Government would have recalled me into the service for such a noble cause.

Suppose private groups had sent tons of arms into Hungary. The Hungarians would have been encouraged and would have renewed their efforts. The results would have been two or three times as many dead Hungarian patriots today. No thoughtful person believes that Russia would have failed to kill as many people as was necessary to put down the revolt. What is the difference to the Rusians if they have to kill 10,000 or 100,000? And so in problems such as this we must always ask ourselves which is better, to have a dishonorable peace and live, or to die honorably? A good many people still prefer the former.

Everyone agrees that peace, freedom, and equality and motherhood are good—even the Russians. But, these things are only words which have as many meanings as we have people. Our State Department must deal in reality, not fantasy and moralistic platitudes. Pity our poor diplomats who must work under the constant blasts of the powerful American press. His Russian counterpart has an enviable position in comparison.

On Santa Claus

Neil Murphy

Just who does believe in Santa Claus any more? Has our modern age of science crushed Saint Nick with Sputnik?

The inquiring reporter took the question "Do you believe in Santa Claus?" to 17 people met at various places in Chapel Hill. Ten came out in support of Santa while six refuted him. One declined to comment.

Those queried about the question which is asked by all children responded in many ways.

"Yes, I believe in Santa Claus," said Ken Byerly, professor of journalism. "We can't always see or hear him but he is with us in spirit."

"It's a lot of bunk," said Chuck Flinner, a junior in journalism. "I don't believe in anything."

Watson Morris, a sophomore in the General College, said, "This requires some thought. No—of course."

Barbara Justice, a freshman in dental hygiene said "Yes, I believe in Santa."

Allec Deaken, a sophomore physicist, said "I guess not."

Curtis Gans, editor of The Daily Tar Heel, gave a blunt and flat answer. He looked up from his "blue-pencilling" and said, "No!"

"If you believe in the spirit of Christmas, there is a Santa Claus," said Eleanor Allen, a freshman in dental hygiene.

Ron Shumate smiled and said, "Yes, Agnes, there is a Santa Claus."

Kemp looked up from his piles of records and yelled, "Sure I believe in Santa Claus. Don't you? Every customer is a Santa Claus to me."

Ann Frye looked up from her copy of "A Night Before Christmas" which she was reading in journalism lab and said, "I've always believed in Santa Claus and all of the reindeer."

"No, I don't believe in a little fat man who rides reindeer, but I believe in the spirit of Christmas which is probably the same thing," said Jim Bilsoly, a senior in premed.

"Me" Barker finished his letter to Santa and said, "Yeah, I believe in Santa." Mo is a sophomore in the General College.

"I've no reason not to," said Barbara Smith. "If you believe there's one, there is," added Sandra Laws. Both are freshmen in dental hygiene.

Allen Thomas, a sophomore in physics, said, "Of course!"

"Goodness gracious no," remarked chemistry major Bill Harrington.

"I don't know why you Americans bother with all of these silly questions. I'm personally too busy this time of year to spend my time so foolishly," said a transfer student from Tufts University, Kris Kringle.

The students and townspeople in this poll came out for Santa by a six to six vote. One student didn't give his opinion. He was very busy, however, opening and sorting millions of letters.

Levy Speaks

Editor:

In the weeks since my Telegram Bill was first introduced the air has been clouded by the billowing clouds of controversy. In the last few days these clouds have become the dark, ominous signs of petty bickering, vicious name calling, and malicious misrepresentation. These aforementioned activities have been limited to no particular group or a singular individual.

Mr. Editor, it was ridiculous for you to call December 4 one of the "darkest nights" in the history of the Student Legislature. When the bill was presented to the Legislature it had been labeled "unfavorable" by the finance committee, and neither party was for it. After the President of the Student Body, the Chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, the President Pro Tempore of the Legislature, and others had spoken calmly, sensibly, and clearly for the bill, and others spoke against the bill, it was able to poll 18 favorable votes, 5 short of a majority. The significant thing is that we were able to carry on a long debate on a subject which could not have been mentioned in most Southern universities.

For the moment, I would like to disregard the clouds which are attempting to obscure the issue and would like to make a clear statement about the object of the controversy.

The reason I introduced a bill to send telegrams to the governors of Arkansas and Virginia is that I believe that the attainment of an education is the most important function of the youth of the world. Last year when the Russians sent the first Sputnik heavenward, the United States was shocked and looked around frantically to see what in the United States was so lacking that enabled the Russians to "beat us to the punch." The cry was universal as veryone pointed a menacing finger toward our heretofre sacred institution—the educational system. The Philip Jacob's Report, "The Second Report to the President", these and thousands more attempted to explain what was lacking in our educational system. Though divergent views may have been presented, one point was unanimously proclaimed, there is something wrong with our educational system. The next year, schools in several cities in the United States were closed.

Now what caused a lowly student at the University o fNorth Carolina to want to speak out? The reasons are many and varied. This summer I happened to meet a student from Little Rock who confronted me with these questions: "Is no news of what is happening in Little Rock seeping out to the rest of the world? Or is it that no students give a damn that their counterparts in Arkansas and elsewhere are having to fight to attend a class?"

The student from Little Rock continued by explaining how Faubus and company receive thousands upon thousands of letters a day, the overwhelming majority of which are supporting him. Each student and advocate of a free public school system also are bombarded with letters in favor of private schools.

We in North Carolina, especially we at the University of North Carolina, have, through mature judgment, overcome some of the problems that the people of Arkansas and Virginia now face. As the President of the Student Body, Don Furtado said, "This does not mean that we should sit back on our haunches and consider the rest of the South someone else's problem. We are all students and this is a problem of the entire student community as well as the entire country. It is up to us to demonstrate some measure of leadership."

The students of Russia, in 1870, did not find it petty to speak up and say they believed in education. The stuents of South Africa have been waging a long bitter struggle to preserve their educational system. The Mayor of Atlanta, sitting in the heart of White Citizens' Council territory, thinks education is important enough to keep the schools open at all costs. The children of Little Rock found that they believed in education strongly enough to go before their elders on the school board and tell them that they wanted their schools opened.

Certainly it is not out of place for the Student Legislature of the University of North Carolina to assert their agreement with the statement, "All who meditated on the art of governing mankind have been convinced that the fate of empires depends on the education of youth," stated by Aristotle and believed by millions.

ADVENTURES IN SOCIAL SCIENCE: NO. 1

"The proper study of mankind is man," said Geoffrey Chaucer in his immortal Casey At the Bat, and I couldn't agree more. In these tangled times it is particularly proper to study man—how he lives and works. Accordingly, this column, normally devoted to slapdash waggery, will from time to time turn a serious eye on the social sciences.

In making these occasional departures, I have the hearty approval of the makers of Philip Morris Cigarettes, whose interest is not only in providing young Americans with fine cigarettes, matchlessly blended of vintage tobaccos, grown with loving care and harvested with tender mercy, then cured with compassionate patience and rolled into firm tasty cylinders and brought to you in long size or regular, in soft pack or flip-top box, at prices which wreak no havoc on the most stringent of budgets, but who are equally concerned with broadening the minds and extending the intellectual vistas of every college man and woman!

I, for one, am not unmoved by this great-heartedness, and though I know it is considered chic these days to disparage one's employers, I shall not. Indeed, I shall cry "Huzzah!" for the makers of Philip Morris. I shall cry "Huzzah!" and "Viva!" and "Olé!" and "Ochichoonya!"

But I digress. For our first lesson in social science, let us turn to economics, often called the queen of the social sciences. (Sociology is the king of the social sciences. Advertising is the jack.)

Economics breaks down into two broad general classifications: 1) coins; 2) folding money. But before taking up these technical aspects, let us survey briefly the history of economics.

Economics was discovered by the Englishman, Adam Smith. He published his findings in 1786, but everybody giggled so hard that Smith, blushing hotly, gave up the whole thing and went into the cough drop business with his brother.

For long years after that economics lay neglected while the world busied itself with other things, like the birth of Victor Hugo, the last days of Pompeii, and the Bunny Hug.

Then one day while flying a kite during a thunderstorm, the American, Henry George (also called Thorstein Veblen), discovered the law of diminishing returns, and then, boy, the fat was in the fire! Before you could say "knife" the Industrial Revolution was on! Mechanization and steam power resulted in prodigies of production. For example, before the Industrial Revolution, a Welsh artisan, named Dylan Sigafoos, used to make horse-shoes by hand at the rate of four a day. After the Industrial Revolution, with the aid of a steam engine, Sigafoos was able to make entire horses!

And so it went—factories rising from the plains, cities burgeoning around the factories, transport and commerce keeping pace—until today, thanks to economics, we have smog, recessions, and economics textbooks at $7.50 per copy.

The makers of Philip Morris are no economists, but they do understand supply and demand. Some people demand filter cigarettes, so they supply the finest—Marlboro, of course! Great flavor, improved filter—a lot to like!

Swimmers Meet Duke Today

Carolina's undefeated swimmers face their toughest meet of the year today when they travel to Durham to meet Duke University in the Blue Devils' home pool.

In two starts, Carolina has rolled over Clemson and East Carolina, but has not looked as good as in past years.

Against East Carolina the Tar Heels had to win the last event in order to take the meet. They lost the two top places in both the diving and the 200 breaststroke.

The meet shapes up as a battle of the unbeaten, as Duke has gone undefeated so far. The Devils have had but one meet, but in it they whipped always tough N. C. State.

From this meet the conference champion for 1959 should emerge, as the two teams are clearly the teams to beat in the ACC.

Coach Pat Earey has made no secret of the fact he has been pointing toward the Duke meet as the big one. Carolina lays an unbeaten streak which stretches over two years on the line today.

The close events will probably be in the 50-yard dash, the 100 backstroke, and the 440 medley relay.

Carolina will start its usual team against the Devils today. Bob Hunter in the Backstroke, Harry Bloom in the 220 and 440, Brent Nash in the 50 and 100 freestyle, Randy Dodson in the butterfly, Chuck Wrye in the breaststroke, and Pete Reynolds and Dick Cashwell in the diving will feature the Carolina attack.

Duke's main hopes rest on sprinter Steve Smith, breaststroker Don Schumaker, and butterfly man Bill Weber.

This meet will be a stern test for Carolina's sophomore-studded lineup, a line-up which lost five all-Americans through graduation last year.

Tatum Talks Scholarship

WASHINGTON — (AP) — Jim Tatum of North Carolina offered a bit of advice to fellow football coaches Tuesday.

Don't take a job before going to the president of the university and asking, "What is your objective?"

In other words, find out if you can plan on getting the material to win as often as expected.

"So many coaches take a job and try to improve conditions later," Tatum said. "That is impossible."

Tatum, a fellow who's been around, discoursed on the hazards of coaching in response to questions prompted at a Washington Touchdown Club luncheon by Tommy Mont's "resignation" last week as coach at Maryland.

Reporters wanted to know if Tatum would ever consider returning to Maryland under its present policy on athletic scholarships or recommend anyone for the post. He never did answer directly, choosing instead to discuss his understandings with the presidents of Oklahoma, Maryland and North Carolina during his experience as a head coach.

North Carolina, he indicated, estimates its share of Atlantic Coast Conference titles at one every six years.

Tatum hasn't won a championship since returning to his alma mater in 1956.

"I'll be on a spot if we don't have a good season next year," he said. "I've been telling everybody to wait until 1959."

Tatum repeated his contention that it's wise to have 100 football scholarships covering players in all four classes to hedge against losses through scholastic failures.

He said he understood that among ACC schools Clemson and South Carolina are offering 35 to 50 scholarships a year, Duke is pushing a rule to permit 30 a year, Maryland had 22 and Virginia 20 this year, Wake Forest and North Carolina State a total of 85 for all classes.

Tatum said he awarded more than 40 in his first year and expects to bring in 28 prospects next fall.

Matmen Take On Davidson

By PERRIN HENDERSON

Tonight may tell the tale—whether Coach Sam Barnes' experimental theory of giving the second string wrestlers match experience would improve the first string—when Carolina meets Davidson here in both varsity and freshman matches.

The frosh match will begin at 7 o'clock on the main floor of Woollen Gym, with the varsity match following at 8.

Coach Barnes will mix up his lineup again, this time of necessity. Carolina's first string 130 and 137 pounders will not be present because of vacation jobs.

Davidson, who defeated Preiffer College 27-5 last week, will be out to avenge the 16-12 loss handed them by Carolina last year. In the upper weights they have some very experienced men, including a Southern Conference champ at 167.

Frosh—Mickey Nelson 123, Reggie Brooker 130, Taylor Gilmore 137, Pope Shuford 147, Art Leary 157, Rodney Armstrong 167, Malcom Fields 177, Charlie Davis heavyweight.

Zeta Wins

Zeta Psi won its second volleyball championship in a row Wednesday night by overpowering a good team from the SAE house. The Zetes took the two opening games.

In other championship play, the Medical School also won its second straight trophy by defeating the Law School. Another defending championship team also won their second championship. This was accomplished when Victory Village came from behind to defeat a powerful team from Joyner. In the Fraternity White division Chi Psi, last year's third place team, won a championship trophy by defeating DKE.

This wound up the volleyball season for this year with three out of four teams remaining champions of their leagues.

Make keeping your feet on the ground a habit and you'll never have far to fall.

Carmen Role Added To Fouse Successes

Popular singing and dramatic star, Martha Fouse, will add another to her list of theatrical roles when she sings the part of Micaela in the UNC Music Department concert version of Bizet's opera "Carmen."

As the village sweetheart of Don Jose, Mrs. Fouse will portray a devoted peasant girl in contrast to the fiery gypsy temperament of Carmen.

This role will also be different from some of her previous appearances in opera and musicals staged in Memorial Hall. She made her debut as Cherubino several years ago in Mozart's "Marriage of Figaro." Since then she has been Magnolia in "Showboat" and the bride in Lorca's "Blood Wedding."

Mrs. Fouse is currently a member of the staff at the School of Social Work here. She turned to singing only after getting a degree in French from Ohio State University.

A voice pupil of Walter Golde, the dramatic soprano has given three Graham Memorial recitals and has appeared as soloist with the Community Church Choir, the Choral Club and the University Chorus.

The title of Carmen in the Jan. 13 production will be sung by Claramae Turner, guest star from the Metropolitan and San Francisco Opera Companies.

Other members of the cast include: Dr. Joel Carter as Escamillo, Gene Strassler, Don Jose; Brian Kitz as Zuniga, Morales and El Dancairo; James Pruett as El Remendado, Marilyn Zschau as Mercedes and Rebecca Carnes as Frasquita.

Dr. Wilton Mason, associate professor in the Music Department, will conduct the performance Jan. 13 in Memorial Hall.

Car Damaging Leads To Fine For Youth

An 18-year-old Elizabeth City youth was fined $10 and costs in Chapel Hill Recorder's Court Tuesday as the aftermath of an incident last month when he allegedly went on a kicking spree against two automobiles.

William Elbert Burgess was fined by Judge W. E. Stewart after he noted he had made restitution for damages.

According to the charges, Burgess "bashed in" the convertible top of a car owned by June Zaccone parked on a University parking lot on Nov. 23, the day of the UNC-Duke football game.

He also "kicked and stomped" an automobile belonging to the University, causing, according to the charge, "dents, breaks, and bruises."

McMahon Accepts Position With N. C. Commissioners

Alex McMahon, specialist on county government, leaves his job with the Institute of Government here Feb. 1 to become the first full-time secretary-treasurer of the N. C. Association of County Commissioners. He will also be general counsel for the body.

He takes office in time to represent the commissioners in legislation before the General Assembly which meets Feb. 4.

A Phi Beta Kappa graduate of Duke University and a graduate of Harvard Law School, he has been a member of the Institute of Government staff at Chapel Hill the past 10 years and is also professor of public law and government in the University.

He has teaching and research in the fields of county, municipal and state government and has conducted special schools for county commissioners, county accountants, county attorneys, municipal finance officers.

He has written guidebooks for county officials, including "County Commissioner Responsibility in Budget Making and Administration" and also "Sources of County Revenue."

Other publications by McMahon are "Public School Budget Law in North Carolina" and "Public Welfare Programs in North Carolina."

He is author, too, of "Cooperative Agricultural Extension Work in North Carolina."

It is not yet determined whether the state offices for McMahon will be in Chapel Hill, in Raleigh or elsewhere.

McMahon spent his boyhood in St. Petersburg, Fla., and was a student in Harvard Business School before going to law school. During World War II he enlisted as a private and served in the 20th Air Force with headquarters at Guam. He is presently a lieutenant colonel in the Air Force Reserve and commander of Flight F of the Judge Advocate General's Department of the 9945th Air Reserve Squadron in Raleigh.

Besides his Institute of Government work, he has also taught in the UNC Law School and in the Department of Political Science.

ALEX McMAHON
. . . leaving for new job

The North Carolina Association of County Commissioners was organized in 1908. It underwent a reorganization in the late 1920's, when John Skinner of Warren County became secretary-treasurer on a part-time basis. He served for over 30 years in that office, and during that time the association grew in number of member counties and in the active interest it took in county affairs.

At Mr. Skinner's death in 1950, he was replaced by J. Henry Vaughan of Nash County, who for 18 years had served on the board of county commissioners in his own county, being chairman for ten years. Vaughan served until 1957.

During the past year, the association has given attention to the kind of organization needed to properly represent the interest of the counties, whereever and whenever those interests become involved. At the meeting of the Board of Directors in Asheville Nov. 24, the Board decided that a full-time office and a full-time secretary were necessary to represent the counties and handle the affairs of the association.

The new office will provide a continuity that has not been possible with part-time officers. A full-time secretary will provide continuity in the relationships between the association and the counties of the state on the one hand, and the various state agencies on the other hand. He can provide continuity in the relationships between the association and the North Carolina League of Municipalities, representing the cities and towns of the state, as well as provide continuity in the relationships betwen the association and the National Association of County Officials representing the interests of counties throughout the nation in Washington.

Carolina Impresses Visiting Officers

By RON SHUMATE

Let's face it: Carolina is a pretty impressive place.

At least that's the impression 28 Allied Foreign officers got Thursday in a tour of the campus. Expressions such as "fabulous, very impressive and quite complete" were uttered by all.

Carolina was the only American university the group has visited and the only one they will visit.

The gentlemen were impressed first of all by Morehead Planetarium. They were later taken on a tour of Graham Memorial, Person Hall, Venable Hall, the Naval ROTC Armory, the Air Force ROTC buildings, and were fed at Lenoir Hall.

The officers, most of whom were from the Far East, have just recently completed a Special Forces course at Ft. Bragg. They have been here since October and are scheduled to leave in January.

The "Special Forces" is a continuing course in which the officers are taught such things as unconventional warfare and guerrilla tactics.

The officers represented such countries as Pakistan, Norway, Iran, the Phillippines, Korea, Indonesia, Thailand and the Chinese Nationalists.

Lt. Dumlao, of the Philippines, said UNC is "just like a small town. It is complete in itself."

He said the Philippines' universities are as large as Carolina but they aren't as complete. He said there is not need for improvement here.

He also said the ROTC program here is similar to the programs in the Philippines.

Commenting on the Communists in his country, Dumlao said they are "exterminated." He mentioned that the only important person in the Communist movement who hasn't been captured is "the number one leader." He said he heard, just before he left there, that this "leader" is sick and may die because he can't get medical care.

Another officer, a Chinese Nationalist, said he doesn't think Mao Tse-Tung's resignation will affect Communist China. "He's only getting behind the scenes," he said. "He's just saying to the people: 'I have resigned.' Propaganda you know."

Capt. Yoo, an eight-year veteran of the Korean army, said he flew liason planes during the Korean conflict. He commented the American L-19s are good planes. "You can land them anywhere," he said.

The tour was sponsored by the UNC Air Force ROTC. Capt. W. E. Moore and Cadet Bogdan Zlotnicki were in charge of the excursion.

Thefts Here Being Probed

Chapel Hill Police are investigating the theft of a large quantity of silverware from the Delta Kappa Epsilon fraternity on South Columbia St.

Over 90 pieces of silverware, most of the knives and forks, were stolen from the house Dec. 14, officers reported. They estimated loss at $132.

The larceny of a watch valued at $125 was reported by Jeffery Lowerance of Avery Dorm, and Peggy Bales of Kenan Hall reported the theft from her car parked on Senlac Rd. of a camera and flashlight valued at $29.95.

Parade Climaxes Fall Drill For UNC Naval ROTC Unit

A battalion ceremonial parade last week climaxed the fall drill sessions of the UNC Naval ROTC unit.

At that time Capt. Carl Tiedman, professor of Naval science, announced appointments of freshmen midshipmen. These midshipmen, who have passed aptitude, mental and physical tests, receive tuition grants, books and a $50 subsidy per month throughout the four years of college.

During the summer these midshipmen participate in three cruises and, after graduation, will serve for four years in one branch of the United States Navy.

The appointments as midshipmen announced by Capt. Tiedman include:

Michael S. Lanham, Richard C. Kentopp, Chester H. Wilkinson, Robert A. Beaty, Peter A. Bondi, Curtis M. Brooks, Brent J. Buescher, John C. Dailey, Christopher W. French, John R. Gentry, Charles F. Gonzales;

Lewis S. Griffith, Litchfield P. Huie, William S. Hurt, John L. Johnson, John M. Knies, Garry R. Kwist, Charles Lehmann, Thomas S. Longenecker, Ronald E. McArthur, Thomas C. McSwain;

Joseph R. Meikle, John M. Miller, Henry W. Mixon, Ned A. Moore, Robert D. Nobles, Richard C. Overstreet, Stewart B. Priddy, Frank A. Russell, Michael R. Shar, James B. Sloan, James D. Strickland and Charles G. Wilkins.

Capt. Tiedman also commended Midshipman Dick Cashwell for his leadership as battalion commander of the ROTC unit.

Loyalty Questions For Job Applicants Going Out Here

Welcome Out For Visitor From Russia

By WARREN ROGERS JR.

WASHINGTON—(AP)—The United States today speedily welcomed Anastas I. Mikoyan, Russia's No. 2 man, for a two-week visit to Washington that conceivably could ease the cold war.

The wily, bustling Mikoyan is expected to arrive early in January. Ostensibly it will be an unofficial visit with Soviet Ambassador Mikhail Menshikov.

But the State Department said Mikoyan, who is Deputy Premier under Nikita Khrushchev, will be free to talk to any U. S. official, including Secretary of State Dulles and presumably including President Eisenhower.

"Any one he wished to see would

'Vacation' From Meters Said Coming To End

A "vacation" from parking meters during the past week's snowbound condition for Chapel Hill motorists is apparently ending.

Police officers, who refrained from sticking on overparking tickets during the week period, said they started fining again this morning on Franklin St. and hoped to resume full scale meter observation again tomorrow.

'Star Of Bethlehem' Gets Extended Run

Four additional presentations of "Star of Bethlehem" will be given at the Morehead Planetarium here Saturday and Sunday, Dec. 20-21, in an expanded program schedule announced by Manager A. F. Jenzano.

In addition to the nightly 8:30 o'clock programs, the traditional tribute to Christmas will be presented every hour on the hour from 11 a.m. through 4 p.m. on Saturday and from 1 through 4 p.m. on Sunday.

A total of 12 programs will be given. They have been scheduled, Jenzano said, to accommodate patrons who may have been prevented from attending because of inclement weather during the past week.

The Planetarium will be closed Christmas Eve and Christmas Day, but public presentations will be resumed at 8:30 p.m. Dec. 26.

Trustee Executive Committee Hears Recommendation Soon

By EDWARD NEIL RINER

Questions pertaining to Communist party membership are on the way out, as far as UNC job applicants are concerned.

The elimination of "loyalty oaths" from job application forms will be recommended to the Executive Committee of the Consolidated University Board of Trustees at its meeting Jan. 12.

However, the approval of the trustees is not necessary to delete a question on the forms (required since 1949) asking wnether or not tne applicant has ever had any connection with communism.

The Executive Committee will be given a report by President William C. Friday on Chancellor William B. Aycock's recommendation for removal of the loyalty oath.

AYCOCK MADE RECOMMENDATION

Chancellor Aycock made the recommendation to discontinue the question on communism as part of the personnel form. About six weeks ago it came to the Chancellor's attention that this question is not a ruling of the trustees, and the question does not appear in personnel forms of N. C. State College and Woman's College.

COMMUNIST DISCOVERED IN '49

Discovery of an avowed communist on the University facutly in the late forties led to demands of some trustees that faculty members be required to take a "loyalty oath." A part-time instructor in the Physics Department, Hans Freistadt, native of Austria, acknowledged membership in the Communist Farty. He was at UNC on an Atomic Energy Commission fellowship.

LEFT PROBLEM TO UNC

However, the Trustees voted unanimously on May 24, 1949, to leave the Universtiy's Communist problem in the hands of the administrative officials. William D. Carmichael Jr., acting president of the Consolidated University at the time, and chancellors of the University of Chapel Hill, State College and Woman's College urged such a course. UNC added the following question to its application form in place of an oath:

QUESTION TO BE DROPPED

"Are you now, or have you been at any time in the past, a member of, or in anyway affiliated with either the Communist Party or with any organization or association controlled, to your knowledge by Communist? If so, please explain fully."

This is the question which would be dropped from the job application form.

Brooks Hays Says Cause Is Not Lost

WASHINGTON — (AP) — Rep. Brooks Hays, Arkansas Democrat whose stand on integration lost him his seat in Congress, told a group of well-wishers last night not to conclude "that the cause of moderation is hopeless."

The 60-year-old veteran of 16 years in the House was honor guest at a testimonial dinner.

He was defeated in Nov. 4 election by Dr. Dale Alford, Little Rock segregation leader who ran as an independent and won in a write-in campaign.

A special House Committee recommended by a 3-2 vote Wednesday that Alford not be permitted to take his seat in the House pending an investigation of the election.

In his prepared speech, Hays referred to defiance of laws and court decisions and called for "an appreciation of what the rule of law means in sustaining our liberties and our property."

"The times," he said, "Call for reminders that the Constitution provides a method for change and that, until changed, unpopular as well as popular laws must be respected. Odium does not attach to lawful protests against statutes or decisions. Defiance is another matter."

"The Federal system resents dif-

Furtado Leaves For Rhodes Competition

Don Furtado, president of the student body, left yesterday for Atlanta, Ga., for the regional finals of the Rhodes scholarship competition.

He is one of two North Carolina candidates for a coveted Rhodes scholarship to Oxford University. The other candidate from this state is Landon Rowland, a student at Dartmouth College.

Furtado and Rowland were selected Wednesday from a field of 12 North Carolina college and university men by a Rhodes Scholarship Committee at Guilford College.

They will compete with 10 other candidates from five states for the four Rhodes scholarships from this region.

'Y' Committee Sets Feb. 15 For UN Trip

The United Nations Education Committee of the YMCA has named the weekend of Feb. 15 for a trip to the United Nations and New York City.

Events will include a tour of the United Nations building, a U.N. orientation talk and a visit to the Soviet Mission on Park Avenue. A free tour of tfhe city is also being planned.

Tentative arrangements call for a three or four day trip, including visits with representatives of the U.S.S.R., Israel and the U.A.R.

A group from N. C. State College will also be in New York at the time of the Carolina trip

The cost of the trip, depending on its duration, will be $36 to $43. This includes transportation, meals, room and registration fee. The students will stay in either the Plymouth or Woodstock Hotels.

The delegation will leave Y court either Feb. 11 or 12 and return the evening of Feb. 15.

INFIRMARY

Students in the Infirmary yesterday were:

Jacqueline Mae Kelly, Frances Carolyn Pearson, Maxmillan Robespierre, Andra Hedmeg Ivy, Cornellia Caiberine Carden, Mickey Mouse, Sandra Kelly Umstead, Susan Roacwell Purser, Ebenezer Scrooge, Roy Vernon Land, William Makepiece Thackery, Thomas Angus Powers, David Edward Henson, Frances Crane Walton, William Walker Ecton, Larry Thomas McCoy, William Candler Price, Robert Daniel Fulghum, Charles Brent Dorrity, Donald Duffy Lewis Diana Josepine Stracley, William Parrey Dinsmoor White, Robert Chester Eubanks, Donald Duck, Edgar Gerome Hocutt, Andy Green Woods and Walker Blanton.

The First Hurrah

The University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill took a step forward Wednesday, when the local administration recommended that the loyalty oath section of the application for employment at UNC bedeleted.

The people to do this reside at the present time in the local administration, and Chancellor Aycock has demonstrated his eagerness to have the oath removed. The proposal, however, must eventually have the tacit approval or overt approval of the Board of Trustees, and this approval would be very nice to have.

Chancellor Aycock and President Friday are to be congratulated for their courage in swimming against a stream which has sometimes labeled the University "communist" or "pink." Academic freedom and individual freedom of conscience are important values. Some of these values have received strong support from the administration's stand.

The University is more free and less communist for the decision.

Loyalty Oaths

It has been brought to The Daily Tar Heel's attention that the new federal loan program for educational opportunities for students has as a rider that students, in order to receive these loans, must sign loyalty oaths.

It is unfortunate that the first time the federal government takes a step in the direction of making educational opportunities available to more students, they compromise their position by tacking on something that has no place — loyalty oaths.

Apparently Congress feels no compulsion to respect freedom of conscience. Indeed the entire loyalty security program is but one indication of this. But in the sphere of education, this loyalty program is ridiculous.

It is high time that those in Washington awakened to the idea that no self respecting Communist who wanted to do damage to the American system would answer the oath affirmatively or refuse to answer the oath. It is only those who have a feeling that freedom of conscience should be respected, or those who have been members of leftist organizations, seeing in them a hope for peace that will be burned. These people should not be lost.

Sick

There were 53 people in Carroll Hall Monday night. Out of a student body of 7,500 students there are only 53 students who were interested enough in the future of the University to attend a meeting to find out how students can help the University get as much of its budget request as possible.

It isn't just apathy that is gripping the University. It is downright disinterest, and it is sickening to see this at an intellectual institution that is supposed to live.

The Univerestiy in order to better itself needs the help of each student, not just the help of 53... Maybe, when it is too late, the students will wake up.

Pasternak

Boris Pasternak has been offered the chance to leave the Soviet Union and has refused it. This is a fine decision, worthy of the man and of the high drama in which he is playing the leading part. If he was the person his enemies say he is—a renegade, a "reactionary," hungry for "all the delights of the capitalist paradise"—he could wish no better than for an open gate; on what his books would bring him he could live comfortably and securely in any Western country. Or if he was what some of his admirers outside Russia would like to think him, a kind of Western liberal in revolt against the stifling climate of communism, he knows that he would be welcomed by all his fellow-writers here. He does not scorn their good opinion; the Nobel award gave him "a lonely joy," even though he has been induced now to reject it. Yet he refuses to go. He is a Russian. As he said in his letter to Mr. Khrushchev, published on Saturday: "I am linked Russia by my birth, my life, and my work .... To leave my country would be for me the equivalent of death." It would be wrong to see these as courtly phrases designed to mollify Mr. Khrushchev. It would be equally wrong to think of Pasternak as choosing to remain in Russia in order to "fight from within" against people whom he and the West would alike recognize as enemies. He does not admit, as his detractors charge, that his great novel is an attack on the Soviet regime at all. If they could come to see it as he does, it would be the healthiest thing that has happened in Russia for a generation. If he had quit Russia his would have become an external (and thereby in their eyes discounted as a hostile) influence. Living still in Russia, he keeps the light of his vision alive there. As he says in his letter, in words proud but not arrogant, "I have done something for Soviet literature, and I can still be useful to it." Those are not words of grovelling recantation.

The Soviet reaction has been interesting and in some ways unfamiliar. It is, of course, characteristic of Communist intolerance that it should regard the award of a Nobel Prize as insulting; it is the regime which is exposed by this, not the writer whom it has driven into repudiating the award. And the Writers' Union, which should have tried to protect a distinguished member, has acted as if it was no better than a branch of the thought-police. There are no doubt plenty of time-serving hacks in the Union. There are also some who are genuinely shocked by what they have learned of Pasternak's book, as well as by the way in which it has been greeted abroad. What has shocked them? Mainly, perhaps, Pasternak's treatment of the early years of the Revolution. Many Soviet writers have, at one time or another, written critically of aspects of the regime, particularly of its excesses of bureaucracy. But those early days have always been held as something sacred, selfless, and heroic. Now Pasterak has shown the heroes of the revolutionary days as human beings, less than immaculate. It is not that he was critical but that he ceased to be uncritical; and that was an outrage on Soviet piety. In a harsher time Pasternak might have found himself banished to Siberia, or to the Lubianka prison. That he should be offered freedom to go into exile (a chance which millions now behind the Iron Curtain would seize with both hands, and rightly) is something new. So is the publication by Tass of Pasternak's letter to Khrushchev. It is always rash, with Communists, to believe that there is a touch of spring in the air; there have been so many backslidings. Yet Pasternak himself has looked beyond the present tyrannies. "I have a feeling," he wrote in a letter some time ago, "that a completely new era is beginning, with new demands on the heart and on human dignity, a silent age which will never be proclaimed and allowed voice but will grow more real every day without our noticing it. That is why 'Dr. Zhivago' is the most important piece of work I have been able to do so far in the whole of my life."—

"Lyndon, Could You Say A Few Calming Words To Our Boys Too?"

The African Refugee Problem

Norman Cousins

Most of Africa is now less than a day's travel from the other great continents, but the great issues and problems of the Africans are as remote as ever from the concerns of the world. Wherever one stops in Africa he becomes aware of clamorous grievances and crises.

Consider, for example, the case of the Hereros, a tribe in South West Africa.

The problem of the Hereros goes back more than fifty years, when South West Africa was a colonial possession of the German Imperial Government. The Hereros were the most independent and, in many ways, the proudest and most advanced of the native tribes; they stubbornly resisted the rule of the outsider. General Von Trotha was dispatched from Germany to put down the uprisings. His stratagem was to set a massive trap. He sent word to the Hereo leaders in the hills that Germany was ready to return to them their land, and he bid them return. The native leaders appeared and were promptly massacred. Moreover, Von Trotha declared that 'every Herero, with or without a rifle, will be shot." Von Trotha justified these measures by proclaiming they were carried on in the name of a master race—a doctrine that has come in and out of fashion several times since.

The German army under Von Trotha consisted of 19,000 effectives. The Herero population numbered 80,000. After three years of Von Trotha, the Hereros were reduced to 15,000. Eventually, the massacres stopped, but the beatings and the subjugation continued. The German police were used, not to enforce justice, but to ensure the suppression.

The survivors of the Hereros were driven out of South West Africa, seeking refuge in the Kalahari desert to the East and in British Bechuanaland. A letter from a German soldier to his family presented a vivid picture of the flight:

'How deeply this wild proud sorrowful people had humbled themselves in the terror of death: wherever I turned my eyes lay their goods in quantities, oxen and horses, goats and dogs, blankets and skins. A number of babies lay helplessly languishing by mothers whose breasts hung down long and flabby. Others were lying alone, still living, with eyes and nose full of flies. Somebody sent out our black drivers and I think they helped them to die. All this life lay scattered there, both men and beasts, broken in the knees, helpless, still in agony, or already motionless. It looked as if it had all been trown down out of the air."

Ever since that flight, the Hereros have been trying to secure the return of their lands and to reunification of their tribe. After Germany was defeated in the first World War, informal promises were made to give the Hereros back their land; the promises were not honored. The United States cannot claim detachment from what has happened; this country had a part in the decision to make South West Africa a mandated territory under the auspices of the Union of South Africa. In any event, with the end of the war, the Hereros trickled back to their old territory but were unable to reclaim their lands and their possessions.

The Union is not in any sense to be compared to the German Imperial colonizers; but it is far from being a benefactor of the Hereros. The Hereros are landless; they are reduced economically to the status of migrant laborers. They are retarded in their development as a deliberate act of government policy. They claim that the Union of South Africa has not lived up to the responsibilities of its mandate. They realize they cannot be reconstituted as a separate nation but they believe they are justified in seeking protection under a U.N. trusteeship, remaining inside the geographic confines of the Union but protected by and responsible to U.N. administrators.

The Hereros have found a champion in the person of the Rev. Michael Scott, an Anglican clergyman who takes his religion seriously. He met with the Hereros, studied their problems, assembled an impressive array of documents and brought the case before the United Nations. Each year since 1947, in fact, Michael Scott has made a pilgrimmage to the U. N. to present the petitions of the Hereros. This year he is back again, still hopeful that he can appeal successfuly to the conscience of the men whose job it is to serve the cause of a just world

The evils he seeks to eliminate, in is own words, are not 'evils that confine themselves to lines drawn on a map .... The United Nations is civilization's second attempt to build a rudimentary world order, and the appeal can therefore legitimately be made to that body."

The Rev. Michael Scott, despite twelve years of fruitless journeys across half a world, is still hopeful. In his new book, "A Time to Speak," he says that 'it is difficult to convey a sense of the hectic spirit that prevails at the United Nations where all the postwar problems seem to be too big and too intricate to be dealt with individually, even if there were the will and the faith to do so. Throughout the long sessions of the United Nations, one watches the real problems of our age being immersed in surging waves of words, of propaganda and counter-propaganda, and one is afflicted at first with a terrifying sense of futility—of tragicomedy." Yet he feels that the U.N. is still the best hope. He is finding many delegates who will listen seriously to him, men who recognize that a people who have been deprived of their home and who have neither the means nor the desire to use force have nowhere to turn—except to the U.N.

This is an age which as no difficulty in creating big problems or in being bewildered by them. Even so, it is conceivable that an act of of justice, however modest the scale—as in the case of the Hereros—might be a nourishing experience for the U.N. itself. —The Saturday Review

Alabama

The Civil Rights Act of 1957 embodies a number of Northern concessions. These were justified on the ground that a small but sure step forward was better than a larger one of dubious effectiveness. Results were confidently expected from this Act because it achieved in the Senate a considerable measure of Southern acquiescence. The South, it was widely though, could and would live with it, decently and peacefully.

But that was more than a year ago, before Second Little Rock. Last year's assumptions are not valid in today's worsening situation. When the Civil Rights Commission, taking up its duties under the Act, mildly and civilly undertook to investigate registration of Negro voters in Alabama, it was faced with an almost total refusal on the part of the Alabama offifcals concerned to produce records or five relevant testimony. One of the Southern members of the Commission, former Governor John S. Battle of Virginia, reacting infinitely more in sorrow than in anger, remarked that Southern obstinacy of this sort will give aid and comfort to "our enemies." He was not referring to the Soviets nor to the Communist Chinese nor to others in this small world who are instantly informed of such incidents and only too pleased to sneer. He had in mind the 86th Congress of the United States.

Mr. Battle, to be sure, is a moderate, a man of relative good will, and not to be lumped together with the officials he was addressing. It is all the more shocking that the phrase "our enemies" should come to his lips in reference to the federal government; all the more symptomatic of the danger against which he should have warned, the danger that repeated offical defiance of lawful federal process will turn into a pestilence of general lawlessness, which may in the end engulf us all but which is bound to ravage the South first.

The Department of Justice, acting with commendable promptness, has obtained court orders to back up the Commission's subpoenas. The penalty for continued failure to comply is now contempt of court; and the consequence of that may be jail, as of right it ought to be. Mr. Patterson, the Governor-elect of Alabama who is advising the defiers, doubtless knows that his clients haven't a leg to stand on. There is not even a colorable legal issue involved here. It is about 100 years too late to argue that the quasi-judicial status conferred by local law on election commissioners, jury commissioners and the like can stand in the way of enforcement against them of the 15th Amendment's guarantee of the right to vote or the 14th's assurance of the equal protection of the laws.

So utterly clear and constitutionally well-grounded is the authority conferred by Congress on the Civil Rights Commission that we can only wonder what other lawful, long-established function of the federal government will meet with defiance in the South next. The plague of Little Rock spreads. It is a harsh and unpleasant thing to say, but it is about time someone went to jail.

Harper's Bizarre

The group met in the churchyard after supper.

There were ten, perhaps fifteen of the youngsters, budled tightly in scarves and coats, and they stood in a circle, stamping their feet and blowing steam into the crisp night.

Someone started humming; then, one by one, they picked up the refrain; almost absent-mindely, yet with tender young feeling, they sang: "Oh little town of Bethlehem, how still we see thee lie . . ."

The moon was so very bright the stars could not be seen; it seemed frozen in its place, and with it, all around. Nothing stirred save the voices: ". . . the hopes and fears of all the years are met in Thee . . ."

"Here it comes!" one cried.

"Here it comes! Here it comes!" echoed back.

They all clambered into the truck bed and settled into the hay.

"All here?"

"All here! Let's goop-o-o!"

Off they rumbled: "Deck the halls with boughs . . ."

In the cab this: "Where first; the home? OK."

The group sat in the truck and sang; then they climbed out and mounted the steps; softly now very softly: "Oh come all ye faithful, joyful . . ."

The door cracked a bit, and an old voice said, "Merry Christmas, and thank you."

As they pulled out of the yard they could see an old woman silhouetted in the window, waving to them with her handkerchief.

The hospital roof appeared snowy, aseptic white under the frozen moon.

Again they sat first and sang; then on the steps, again softly; "Silent night, Holy night. All is calm . . ."

As they walked back to the truck, one glanced in the window of the emergency room. An intern was bending over the table, carefully picking glass out of a man's eyes. —J. Harper

Editor:

The University Party defense in Tuesday's paper was according to all just interpretation, filled with falacious name calling, propaganda, and confusion of issues and truth. As I am not eager to defend any party, but to point out the misinterpretations and misconceptions of both, I will proceed to point the finger at Charlie Gray's article.

I believe, contrary to Mr. Gray, that Ed Levy's bill was directed at the danger of closing any public schools for any reason, whether it be integration or the price of silk in China. It was primarily Mr. Gray and his associates who misinterpreted the bill. This may have been a just misunderstanding because of immediate situations concerning the denial of education to part of our populace due to political ends desired by the deniers. It could have also been an attempt to evade the immediate question (education) and to take no stand on the issue. If this latter pre-supposition is correct, certain of these persons would best profit by a strong leader or in Mr. Gray's words, "a puppet show director." Mr. Levy and numerous other legislators tried to clear up this misconception of issues to no avail. This in retrospect takes care of the first two paragraphs of Mr. Grays' article spent in criticizing a newspaper editor and defending the University Party's walkout, but still there has been no stand on the issue of denying an equal opportunity to all American students. Will the stand ever be taken concretely? If Mr. Gray and associates must agree with the so-called 'liberal" viewpoint, I maintain, no.

The remainder of the Tuesday's article was spent in criticizing yourself, Mr. Editor, and those persons with similar ideas. Persons were described as "rag dolls," "tools," and other such vague and ambiguous terms which are beyond reason and discussion. Time and space was also spent in "campaigning for Jim Crownover" as the model legislator.

Now back to the only question in consideration. Should each person be given equal opportunity to education? This is the question which Charlie Gray has yet to answer with an satisfaction. He will be given an opportunity to do so in a future Legislature meeting. An amendment will be provided that clearly states the terms beyond misinterpretation. I strongly urge that the Student Body be alert to the stand taken by Mr. Gray and associates and decipher from within yourselves if the proper answer has been given.

In a word of closing I would like to ask a question to the Student Body. How can a person who has dictated a walkout policy to the entire University Party, present at the last Legislature meeting, call our Editor a director of a puppet show with any clearness of mind?

"We—he (the Negro) and us (the Whites) should confederate: swap him the rest of the economic and political and cultural privileges which are his right, for the reversion of his capacity to wait and endure and survive. Then we would prevail; together we would dominate the United States; we would present a front not only impregnable but not even to be threatened by a mass of people who no longer have anything in common save a frantic greed for money and a basic fear of national character which they hide from one another behind a loud lipservice to a flag."—William Faulkner

I will readily admit that segregation is now a strong institution in the South, and certainly an institution so firmly entrenched cannot be uprooted in a short period of time without serious repercussions. I, like Mr. Gray, favor an approach of moderation in integrating schools, but I am not sure a moderate approach is possible, for any moderate approach toward integration in the South is not moderate enough for most southerners. If the Supreme Court gave the South until 1970 to integrate schools, the problem here in the South would be just as great, or almost as great, as it is in 1958. In the year 2000, integration may be possible in the South with a minimum amount of trouble ,but we cannot wait until the year 2000. It may be too late then. We are fighting for the very existence of our nation now, and our inability, or rather refusal, to give the Negro equal privileges is excellent propaganda material for Rusia in undermining confidence which foreign nations have in the United States.

Mikoyan To Visit

be glad to receive him," Department Press Chief Lincoln White told a news conference.

Mikoyan also is free to visit anywhere else in the United States except in areas declared off-limits to Russians, such as ports, atomic plants and the like. And even in these cases, White said he foresees no problem in making an exception if Mikoyan wishes to visit a proscribed area. The off-limits rules were set up in simple retaliation for Soviet restrictions on Americans in Russia.

Mikoyan applied for a diplomatic visitor's visa Wednesday at the U. S. Embassy in Moscow. Ambassador Llewellyn Thompson forwarded the request to Secretary Dulles, who is attending the Atlantic Pact (NATO) meeting in Paris. The ambassador recommended approval, which Dulles swiftly granted. It all took less than 24 hours.

The Associated Press learned of Mikoyan's request and reported it last night. White confirmed the report today and said:

"Our embassy in Moscow has been instructed to inform the Soviet government that it (the embassy) is authorized to issue a visa for Mr. Mikoyan."

As to why Mikoyan is coming, White said all he knew was what Mikoyan had stated in his request: to visit Menshikov. But White then practically invited Mikoyan to confer with top U. S. officials by saying:

"We have no indication of his desires on matters other than his visit to the Ambassador. He is a member of the Soviet government as Deputy Chairman of the Council of Ministers and presumably will want to pay appropriate calls on American officials as he has on the officials of other countries he has recently visited."

That seemed to throw open the door for man-to-man talks with Dulles and possibly with Eisenhower on all cold war questions. Not the least of these right now is the question of Berlin.

Soviet Premier Khrushchev has given the west six months to negotiate on Berlin's future. After that, he has declared, Russia will consider the four-power occupation ended and will turn over East Berlin to East Germany.

The odds are great that not much will be accomplished by Mikoyan's visit. But officials hope that it may provide some slim possibility of making progress toward lessening East-West tension. Some officials consider it a gain any time any high ranking Russian gets a first hand look at America's unity and power.

Eisenhower sent the Kremlin an open invitation for such eye-opening visits in a note last February. He said it would be one way people like Khrushchev could rid themselves of false conceptions of what America is like.

Mikoyan has been here before. He headed a delegation which surveyed U. S. industry 22 years ago. He said he was impressed then but told reporters a few years ago: "Things have changed."

At 63, Mikoyan is one of the few old guard Russian communists to survive Kremlin purges. Long a trade expert, he now stands in power second only to Khrushchev.

Recently he has been Khrushchev's top troubleshooter, going for example to Hungary during and after the 1956 revolution.

Menshikov is a trade expert also having worked closely with Mikoyan for years in the past. The first speech he ever made as ambassador delivered on his arrival at the airport last February, called for stepped up U.S. - Soviet trade.

Mikoyan will not be the first Deputy Premier to come here from Russia. Viacheslav Molototv, now reduced to Soviet Ambassador to Outer Mongolia, was a Deputy Premier during his 1942, 1945 and 1955 visits.

But the cheerful-looking Mikoyan will have one distinction over the dour Molotov. Mikoyan probably will be the first top-ranking Soviet official to visit America who ever voted for Kim Novak as his favorite movie star, as Mikoyan did last July 4 at the Brussels Worlds Fair.

ficulties," he declared, "But it is the American way and it can be made to work. The greater and stronger power in the hands of the national government must be responsibly and patiently exercised, and the corollary is that grievances of groups or regions must be so phrased that love of country is not obscured. The patriot and the dissenter may inhabit the same heart."

Hays said the public school system must be preserved because without it "the freedom that flowers from an educated citizenry would perish."

Neither, he added, can there be government of and for the people "without government by the people."

For that reason, he said, "Citizens of a racial minority who meet the qualifications prescribed for electors should not be denied a vote because of race. This, too, is basic."

He urged respect for the minority and warned against "the sophistry that the majority's judgment is always wise and best for the people."

The program included brief talks by evangelist Billy Graham, Sen. A. S. Mike Monroney (D-Okla), James Richards of South Carolina, former chairman of the house foreign affairs committee, and Mrs. Oswald D. Lord of New York, a member of the U.S. mission to the United Nations. Colgate M. Darden, president of the University of Virginia and former Governor of Virginia, was master of ceremonies.

Treasury Department Is Trying Gift Wrapping

The United States Treasury Department has a new item to merchandise and is putting it in a brand new package.

Announcement was made by James F. Stiles, Jr., National Director of the U. S. Savings Bonds Division, that in the line of the Savings Stamps, the 25c denomination is about to appear with a new design—the first change in the eighteen years of the program.

For the first time, a Savings Stamp has two-color printing; the familiar Minute Man figure is posed against a background of the Stars and Stripes.

Furthermore, said Mr. Stiles, there is a new folder in which 25c stamps are packaged, and this too is an innovation, one which will appeal to Christmas shoppers. The folder is in small stamp-book form, much like those which contain perforated pages of stamps for ordinary postage, with a gay cover design, for gift-giving.

Uncle Sam, wrapping a star-spangled package, ties the ribbon round a space in which the names of the donor and the recipient may be written. The caption is "A Gift of U. S. Savings Stamps."

Inside the cover, there are either ten 25c stamps, for $2.50, or twenty 25c stamps, for $5.

"Coming at this time of year," said Mr. Stiles in announcing the new stamp and folder, "The gift folder is a Treasury bonus to Christmas givers. Throughout the year, however, they will be available for all types of gifts, to children and to adults. Americans know they must save to give—now they can give, to save.

"The gift folders are to be on sale at Post Offices throughout the country in time for early Christmas shopping. The folders are easy to mail, they can be slipped into a Christmas card envelope, or tucked into a child's Christmas stocking. However they are given, they are certainly easy to receive!"

Today, there are many excellent opportunities for people who are educated in science or engineering. Our country's rapid expansion in industry and business calls for more professionally trained men and women than ever before.

The rapidly expanding electric utility industry offers many opportunities for trained men and women. In the past ten years the use of electric energy has more than doubled. This growth is expected to be duplicated during the next several years bringing with it more opportunities for engineers and other technically trained young people.

Tar Heels Face Notre Dame In Blue Grass Opener

Undefeated Carolina Takes 3-0 Record Into Big Game

By TOM DUNCAN

LOUISVILLE, Ky. —(AP)— Highly ranked Northwestern and Carolina carry unblemished records into the Bluegrass Holiday Festival basketball tournament. But they could encounter trouble in Friday night's first round if Notre Dame and host Louisville suddenly hit stride.

Carolina, 10th ranked nationally with a 3-0 record, faces disappointing Notre Dame 1-3 in the opener in massive Fairgrounds Freedom Hall. Sixth-ranked Northwestern, also 3-0, takes on Louisville 4-2 in the nightcap.

The winners clash for the title Saturday night after the first-round losers meet for third place.

All Northwestern Starters Back

Northwestern has all five starters back from last season-headed by hook-shooting Joe Ruklick. The others are Phil Warren, Willie the Bird Jones, Dick Johnson and Nick Mantis.

And the Big Ten contenders got an added boost this week when key reserves Floyd Campbell and Dick Becker rejoined the team after making up scholastic dificiencies.

Carolina, supposedly in a rebuilding year, has only one starting senior—Danny Lotz.

Tar Heels Rolling

But the Tar Heels are rolling with a balanced attack led by juniors Dick Kepley, Harvey Salz and Lee Shaffer and sophomores York Larese and Doug Moe.

Irishman Frank McGuire, the Carolina coach, will see plenty of Irish in the game with Notre Dame —such as tiny Gene Duffy, James Sullivan, Emmett McCarthy, Michael Ferrell and Michael Ireland.

Hawkins Key Man

But the key to the Notre Dame attack is 6-5 Tom Hawkins, one of the school's all-time greats. He, Duffy and Tom Reinhart are returning regulars from last season's fine team. They furnish the nucleus of a club that could jell at any time.

Louisville also is rebuilding, and the Cardinals apparently are beginning to get organized, having won two straight. Ron Ruberstein and 6-10 sophomore Fred Sawyer have been pleasant surprises. Returning regular Harold Andrews has been hurt but Don Goldstein is back and clicking.

Liuisville also has an advantage in familiarity with the 18,000-seat Freedom Hall. The Cardinals won the first Bluegrass meet in 1956. San Francisco beat Louisville in last year's final.

All four clubs held workouts at the hall Thursday.

West Va. Favored

LEXINGTON, Ky. — (AP) — In a little over 24 hours, West Virginia put together two truly great performances last winter to vault from a good club to the kingpin of college basketball.

In the Kentucky Invitational tournament, then—unbeaten West Virginia:

1 — Stopped eventual NCAA champ Kentucky on its home floor.

2 — Ended the 37-game streak of dending NCAA titlist North Carolina in the championship game.

3 — Vaulted from eighth to first in the Associated Press poll, a spot the Mountaineers retained at final roll call last winter.

West Virginia again is among the elite and back to shoot for more prestige while defending its tournament title. The guesspers are tabbing the once-beaten Mountaineers to tangle with unbeaten, second ranked Kentucky for the championship.

Before these combatants start counting their championship aspirations they must dispose of more pressing business

West Virginia, led by talented Jerry West, opens the tournament Friday night against Oklahoma State

Kentucky plays the nightcap against Ohio State. The winners come back in Saturday's title round after losers settle third place.

Two of the matches were decided on riding time with each team securing one of the decisions. In the 177 class Carolina's Sonny Kincey took a close 3-2 match from Jimmy Allen. Davidson's Milton Gee beat J. W. Welborn 2-1 by the same route.

Prior to the varsity match the Tar Heel freshmen won their second decision of the year by overpowering the Davidson frosh 23-13.

Swimmers Sink Duke By 49-37

By JACK RUDY

Carolina's unbeaten swimmers surged past Duke yesterday 49-37, passing their first stiff test of the young season.

The Tar Heels swept through the 400-medley relay, the first race, to pick up seven points and pull into a lead they never relinquished.

The outstanding individual for the Tar Heels was sophomore Randy Dodson. Dodson pulled in first in the 200 butterfly, and pulled the important 400-medley relay out of the fire.

Harry Bloom came within a hair of winning two events, but became confused in the 440 and stopped swimming before the race was over. Bloom finished 2nd in spite of that, with Tom Schiffman copping the event.

The Tar Heels collected only 5 first places, but had 6 second place finishes and about as many thirds to sew things up.

At this point the Tar Heels appear headed for their third straight ACC crown, this meet making 24 in the long unbroken series of victories. Having passed the supreme test of the year, the Dolphins almost need only to finish the season to wrap up the league title.

440-medley relay—Carolina (Hunter, Mercer, Dodson, Nash) 4:10.4

Atlas Satellite Strengthens U.S.

By JOHN M. HIGHTOWER

WASHINGTON (AP)—America's huge Atlas satellite helped to set the stage yesterday for the coming showdown with Russia over the future of Berlin.

Top U. S. officials said they expect this showdown to be diplomatic rather than military; they do not think now that Soviet Premier Nikita Khrushchev will push his campaign to the point of touching off World War III.

They declared, however, that the latest spectacular demonstration of U. S. power in missiles could well have a sobering effect on the impetuous Khrushchev.

Two early moves on the Berlin dispute are now in prospect:

1. Following up the North Atlantic Pact meeting that ended at Paris Thursday, the United States, Britain and France will shortly send firm notes to the Soviet government.

These notes will reject Khrushchev's proposal that the western powers withdraw from West Berlin and make it a neutralized "free city." They may also advise him to drop the ultimatum tone of his Berlin proposals.

2. Anastas I. Mikoyan, Khrushchev's deputy premier and close associate, on his visit here early next month will undoubtedly talk over a wide range of subjects, including Berlin, with President Eisenhower and Secretary of State Dulles.

Mikoyan may want to sound out the United States about some kind of a Berlin or German deal—no one here knows what he and Khrushchev have in mind. In any case, the hands of the U. S. officials he meets will be strengthened by the Atlas achievement.

Khrushchev has displayed in the past a keen awareness of the relationship between military power and diplomacy.

When Russia put up history's first man made moon little more than a year ago, he promptly sought to exploit its apparent advantage over the United States in the rocketry field. His campaign became known as sputnik diplomacy.

In view of this, officials here said he could be expected to give weight to the military and diplomatic implications of the Atlas launching.

Also, other nations perhaps overly impressed with Russia's space strides may now also be persuaded to revise their judgments.

Although State Department officials consider it inevitable that the subject of Berlin will come up in the Mikoyan talks here they have no tangible evidence of this from the Russian side.

Press Officer Joseph Reap said yesterday the State Department has received "not the slightest word" from Moscow about what Mikoyan wants to do once he gets to Washington. The department announced yesterday that the U. S. Embassy had been authorized to grant his request to come here to see Soviet Ambassador Mikhail A. Menshikox early next month.

Four Winners Announced In Contest

Capt. William Moore announced yesterday four winners in the UNC Air Force ROTC model airplane contest at the UNC division of the Air University.

The winners were James E. Carver with a model of the Atlas ICBM, John H. Summey with a model of the Snark missle, Evan E. King with a model of the F 104 and Lloyd P. Moore with a model of the X 13 verti-jet.

All of the models were solid scale models.

The 60 entries will be given to children as Christmas presents through either the Empty Stocking Fund or to orphanages in this area. The Chapel Hill jaycees are sponsoring the distribution of the models through William Olsen.

Moore pointed out that the four winners were given equal recognition with no first, second, third or fourth place as such indicated.

Revisions In Honors Under Study

Revisions in the honors program are being promoted by University deans and department heads.

To accomplish this, a special committee was appointed by Dr. J. Carlyle Sitterson, dean of the College of Arts and Sciences, at a meeting Thursday of 36 representatives of University schools and Arts and Sciences departments.

This committee will study practices in other universities in an effort to improve the present honors program for able UNC students on the junior and senior levels.

Also, the committee will be given reports from the 36 faculty members who were present at Thursday's meeting with suggestions for improvement of the program.

Revisions in the honors program will be made on the basis of findings from other universities and suggestions from all departments in the College of Arts and Sciences and the schools of Journalism, Education and Business Administration.

G. M. SLATE

The last scheduled activity in Graham Memorial before the Christmas holidays is Political Science, 10-11 a.m., in the Woodhouse Conference Room.

Card Scene In 'Carmen' Feature Tar Heel Talent

Two Carolinians, Rebecca Carnes and Marilyn Zschau, will tell their fortunes in song next January when they join Claramae Turner in the famous "Card Scene" from Bizet's opera "Carmen."

Singing in the roles of Frasquita and Mercedes, the two UNC students will appear in a concert version of the opera, to be presented by the Music Department Jan. 13 in Memorial Hall.

Taking their cues from Prof. Wilton Mason, both gypsies will prophesy happiness for themselves as they cut the cards in Act III. But when Carmen tries to learn her fate, she can find only death. Near the end of the opera, at the scene in the arena, both friends warn Carmen that Don Jose is hiding in the audience. But she ignores their pleas to escape faces te angry Don Jose and dies as she had predicted.

Mrs. Carnes, soprano from Greensboro, teaches music in elementary schools in Carrboro, Hillsboro and White Cross. A graduate student in musicology here, she received an A.B. degree from Asbury College, Wilmore, Ky.

Although this is her first operatic role, she has been in theatrical productions both in college and as a member of the Little Theater group in St. Petersburg, Fla.

Marilyn Zschau, UNC senior from Raleigh, is majoring in Radio-Television-Motion Pictures. She not only has been rehearsing for her own part of Mercedes but also sing Carmen's lines in absence of the guest star, Claramae Turner, who will arrive her shortly before the concert.

Before transferring here, Miss Zschau was a music major at St. Mary's College, where she participated in productions of Mozart's operas, "Bastien and Bastienna" and "The Magic Flute."

In Chapel Hill she is contralto soloist with the Presbyterian Church choir and has apeared with the University Corus in "King David," the Chapel Hill Choral Club in Saint-Saens' "Christmas Oratorio" and the Playmakers' production in "Oklahoma!"

Satellite Sends Message Of Christmas Greetings Recorded By Eisenhower

SPACE TALK

Moons Talk For Science

By ALTON BLAKESLEE
Associated Press Science Writer

NEW YORK — (AP) — President Eisenhower's voice from space is a dramatic new wrinkle in mankind's new ability to hear talk from far beyond the earth.

Scientists have been listening to space talk since the first Soviet satellite went up more than a year ago. And tomorrow they will record space talk, and pictures, from satellites having profound beneficial effects upon your life.

Until today, satellites like Explorers, Sputniks and Vanguard have talked back from space in code. They radioed back pulses and signals meaningful only to scientists who knew the beeping code.

That talk told of discovery of the curious Van Allen belt of lethal radiation around the earth. That talk reported how many times satellites were being hit by meteors, or by cosmic rays, and told about the temperatures on the skin and inside the satellites. That talk measured the heart beat of the dog Laika in Sputnik II.

Modern electronics make it all easily possible.

Instruments, including special termometers, inside satellites can measure the phenomena they are designed to measure. Inside the satellite, this information then is stored on miniature tape recorders using magnetic tape.

This tape recorder works in principle just like one in your office or ome. Flick a switch, and it starts to play back what it had been told.

You send up a special "command" signal from earth to activate the recorder when it is passing over your receiving station on earth. Then you record the coded signal or "talk" and later translate its meaning.

The new wrinkle is a system whereby the tape recorder within Atlas was commanded from earth to start broadcasting president. Eisenower's voice message. The taped message had been placed in the nose cone. On command, the recorder did broadcast.

In later experiments, messages in voice or code sent originally from earth will be recorded by the satellite, then played back immediately or on command after a delay.

You could hear the President's voice today only if you had the special powerful radio equipment to tune in on the particular wavelength over which it was broadcast.

Some radio amateurs or "hams" probably could pick it up.

Holiday Travel Weather Should Be Cold And Clear

"Y'all are getting out for the holidays later than State College," commented a U. S. Weather Bureau man yesterday in the midst of a telephone conversation about cold, but clear weather for weekend traveling home for the holidays.

The weather will start getting colder today and be even colder Sunday is the prediction. Though the cold weather will continue Monday, no snow was forecast for North Carolina.

The temperature will be around 40 degrees in the afternoon Sunday.

Holiday traveling, the Weather Bureau reported, will not be hampered by any snow on North Carolina highways.

The Weather Bureau seemed especially happy to report to Carolina students that "after so much snow and cold weather, it's nice they can get away with good weather. If it had been last weekend, that would have been bad."

Air Travel Still Hurt By Strikes

There is hope for the Eastern Airlines strike to be over before students start returning from the Christmas holidays.

"We have been isstructed to cancel all flights between now and Dec. 29; until then we are notifying passengers every other day of the cancellations," the Eastern Airlines desk at Raleigh-Durham Airport reported Friday.

Negotiations are still going on to settle the strike which started Nov. 24. Passengers who have reservations for January have been asked to hold their tickets until further word. They will be notified by stations.

On the local scene Continental Travel Agency said yesterday Capital Airlines had added some additional flights to take care of the holiday traffic.

Giant Atlas Broadcasts Recording

WASHINGTON (AP)—The voice of President Eisenhower broadcast from America's 4-ton satellite in space yesterday the classic Christmas message, "peace on earth and good will toward men."

As the 85-foot Atlas rocket whirled in orbit past Cape Canaveral, Fla., its unique communications system flashed the recorded words:

"This is the President of the United States speaking.

"Through the marvels of scientific advance, my voice is coming to you from a satellite traveling in outer space.

"My message is a simple one. Through this unique means I convey to you and to all mankind America's wish for peace on earth and good will toward men everywhere."

The President recorded the message Tuesday, about 48 hours before the mightiest man-made object now in space roared from its Cape Canaveral launching pad at 6:02 p.m. EST Thursday.

The spectacular firing proclaimed to the world that America has taken a tremendous stride in the race with Russia for space suprem-

Caroling Carolina Clubs Carry Christmas Cheer

By BEN TAYLOR

Several caravans of caroling Carolina students twined through Chapel Hill Thursday night ushering in the yuletide season.

The annual caroling also served to bring a little closer the festive mood to be set in motion today at 1 o'clock for UNC student when classese nd for the holidays.

The largest gathering assembled in Y Court where about 200 students with the Men's Glee Club as the nucleus, sang traditional carols from 9 to 9:30.

The large crowd remained after the singing to enjoy refreshments of hot chocolate and do-nuts provided by the Grail and YM-YWCA, co-sponsors of the annual Carol Sing.

Earlier in the evening, the Men's Glee Club had walked over to Memorial Hospital to serenade the convalescent and several fraternities had journeyed around Orange County bringing cheer to shut-ins and orphans.

From Y Court, a large number of student leaders, faculty members and passers-by caroled to Consolidated University President William Friday's house for an informal tea and carol sing. Many members of the Men's Glee Club joined the group and led in filling the president's house with Christmas music. Mrs. Friday provided the guests with Russian tea and assorted cookies.

Numerous church groups, member of the Grail, fraternity and throughout the campus dorms and sorority groups, and others spread administrative buildings during the night caroling.

Former Chancellor R. B. House was also the center of Christmas serenading after the tea at President Friday's house ended.

A small group of students and faculty gave Chancellor House a musical sendoff before the holidays would take them to their respective homes for two weeks of rest.

Defense Spending

Jack Raymond

How much should the United States spend on military defense? This fiscal year (July 1, 1958, to June 30, 1959) it is expected to spend $40 billion. That is more than half the government's estimated total expenditure of $79 billion. In the next fiscal period, military spending is expected to rise by at least $1 billion despite cutbacks in uniformed manpower, reduced production of weapons "hardware" and the elimination of some costly missile programs.

President Eisenhower has let it be known on several occasions that he is worried about these expenditures. The government deficit is $12 billion, and the Presdient has warned that unless some way is found to reduce military spending, "Then I will tell you we better go into a garrison state." Yet, when Mr. Eisenhower presents his budget for Fiscal Year 1960 to Congress next January, he will be faced by critics whose views of military preparedness, if adopted, would require even greater expenditures than the economy-minded President will be forced to propose. Influential Congressmen already have announced that they will fight the President's orders to reduce the size of the Armed Forces. A Congressional debate over the military budget is thus pending.

The perfectly credible report that the Soviet Union has flown a nuclear-powered airplane illustrates the challenge. For, if the report is correct, it is a nuclear-powered military airplane that Moscow has produced. And it was a military missile that lifted the gigantic Sputniks into orbit around the earth. And it is in the production of military vehicles such as tanks and armored cars, and long-range missiles and manned bombers, rather than in other fields that the Soviet Union is outproducing us.

The Soviet Union's huge ground forces of 2.5 million men—more than three times the size of the United States Army—is the only fighting force in the world today that has completely re-equipped its units with post-Korean weapons, including missiles capable of firing nuclear warheads.

This does not mean that the Soviet Union's rulers want war. It means that the Soviet Union has developed and maintained a capability for war that we must take into account in planning our own military effort.

Pentagon officials quote the following figures:

——In World War II, a B-17 Flying Fortess cost $188,000, a B-29 Superfortess cost $625,000. Today a B-47 Strato-jet Bomber costs $1.9 million and the B-52 Strato-fortress costs more than $7 million.

——In World War II, a submarine cost $6 million to $8 million, but the atomic-powered Nautilus cost $65 million. A World War II destroyer cost $9 million while its modern counterpart costs $27 million.

——The aircraft carrier Lexington, built in 1937, cost $45 million. The supercarrier Forrestal, commissioned last year, cost $204 million and the first atomic carrier, Enterprise, now under construction, will cost $321 million.

——Even the Army, whose equipment normally does not carry astronomical price tags, finds itself paying $134,000 for a tank today, compared with $81,324 for a World War II tank. To equip a Pentomic Infantry Division of 13,748 men costs $56.8 million, compared with $48.7 million for a World War II-sized infantry division of 17,000 men.

These figures illustrate the tremendous burden of inflation and the higher cost of "sophisticated" weapons.

And just to press that point harder, it might be noted that intercontinental ballistic missiles, such as the Atlas fired successfully last month—more than a year after the Soviet claimed a similar feat—cost at least $1.5 million apiece. And ballistic missiles cannot be recovered and used again.

Even more fundamental to the size of the defense budget than either inflation or improved weaponry is the strategic policy of the country. In this respect, defense spending depends upon two considerations:

1. The aims and obligations of United States military abroad as an adjunct of foreign policy.

2. The roles and mission of the individual services in relation to the radical changes in weaponry.

The first of these considerations seems obvious enough. Certainly we could reduce the costs of national defense if we withdrew our overseas divisions, abandoned our world network of air bases an reduced military aid to foreign countries. We could concentrate on an intercontinental ballistic missile defense, based in this country, and hope that economic aid to foreign nations would enable those countries effectively to counteract Soviet and Chinese Communist penetration. We would accept some form of "neutrality" in critical geographical areas in return for some form of Soviet concession on inspection of nuclear weapons tests and defense against surprise attack.

The second consideration for the defense budget is the cost of supplying the individual services with the weapons they need. But many of the weapons our military people seek have not even been designed. Can we afford to spend money on every idea? We spent $690 million to develop the Navaho intercontinental guided missile before we gave it up as a bad job. Yet if we economize excessively on research and development, we may find the Soviet Union producing a weapons system that would render our forces obsolete.

Then there is a question of civilian defense. Some Administration officials a few years ago proposed a nationwide bomb-shelter construction system that would cost $40 billion. The price tag killed the proposal. Americans are so embarrassed anyway about their air raid drills that they balk at the thought of digging elaborate holes to hide in. Yet if we do not build such shelters and our deterrent weapons do not deter, millions of peoples may be killed by hydrogen tipped missiles who otherwise might have lived. At the same time, if too much emphasis is given to preparedness for nuclear war, we may fall short in the critical areas where only conventional military forces can be employed. And if we fail to keep ahead in mass destruction weapons, even large numbers of conventional forces may fail to counter aggression.

These were some of the problems of choice raised by the Committee for Economic Development last July. The committee also emphasized that the choices, once made, cannot be quickly changed. It takes a long time to develop a weapon—ten years for the Atlast ICBM, six years for the B-52 jet bomber—a long time to equip a division of fighting men. And a lot of money.

Ostensibly each of the services is responsible for conducting operations aginst its enemy counterpart. But it is clear that there is a great deal of overlapping. The Air Force will be sending men into space and hoisting observer satellites to spy on an enemy from stations whirling above the atmosphere. But the Air Force no longer will have a monopoly on strategic air missions, when the Navy can launch 1,500-mile missiles from its new Polaris submarines. And the Army says that since man faces the prospect of being sent into space and landing on the moon and planets, its mission to seize and control the "ground" will follow.

It is evident that good arguments can be made for providing each of the services with the weapons it wants or thinks it needs. But this introduces a third dimension of cost to the military budget problem. The first two dimensions are inflation and the greater "sophistication" or capability of modern weapons. The third dimension is related to weapons improvements in that the better weapons in turn prompt the military services to expand their military objectives, creating a new need for even better—and more expensive—weapons to achieve these objectives. Moreover, it is not so much US but Soviet scientific advancement that makes our weapons obsolete.

Against the view of the Administration that failure to cut military spending may prove tragic to the economy is the view that "we can afford what we have to afford." Those who say this, however, are seldom explicit. What does that statement mean? The US now spends about 11 percent of its Gross National Product for military purposes. The Soviet Union, it is estimated, spends something like 15 to 20 percent of its Gross National Product for military purposes, depending upon how one calculates available statistics. Does our national security require us to match the Soviet effort and spend, let us say, at least 15 or 20 percent of our Gross National Product for the military? If that is our decision, it might mean a rise in military expenditures not of $1 million or $2 billion, but of $10 billion or $20 billion a year! Who in Congress advocates that?—The New Republic

"The Situation In China Looks Interesting—"

American Studentry Lacking

Herbert Butterfield

My American friends had often told me that I ought to visit one of the small liberal arts colleges in the United States, so I was delighted to be asked to Wabash and Hanover, in Indiana.

For a man from an English university the surprises are many. At Wabash College and in Hanover the day begins at eight o'clock, whereas an English undergraduate feels himself unfortunate if there are many days in the week on which he has to go to a lectures as early as nine. Dinner is an hour or two earlier than in England; and it takes place, not in a College Hall, but in Fraternity Houses, where to the amazement and joy of a visitor, the young students who act as his hosts are liable to break out into song during the meal itself.

Whereas in England there is what I should call a friendly respectfulness between students and faculty, there is in the United States—at least in small colleges—an affectionate and not unattractive kind of nonchalahce, the student manner being unpolished at times, but engaging in its freedom and frankness. At Wabash and Hanover the college is self-complete. Here the students can generally know one another and feel that they form a single society.

Some colossal universities give one an impression of anarchy—a sense of seething masses, living regardless of one another, attending a class but then dispersing to all points of the compass, so that neither the visiting outsider nor the actual member of the body can every embrace the whole system with his mind. I came to the conclusion that it is a very happy thing to belong to a small college.

The American student begins his college career with much less background than an English undergraduate; but he does not necessarily lack ingenuity in debate, and he gains more than the formal teaching of the college can quite account for since undergraduates do so much for the education of one another. In Hanover, an undergraduate from Korea pressed me in a brilliant manner on the subject of some of the most subtle of the argumentation in my theoretical writings; and, having been accustomed to the way in which even professional colleagues have misunderstood that argumentation, I was delighted to see an undergraduate who had not only caught my meaning, but rapidly seized upon its remoter implications.

I am not sure, however, that so small a college, though it seems to me so happy for the undergraduate, is not in certain respects difficult for members of the staff. These latter have certain advantages; they are not locked away in vast departments of their own; the physicist and the historian, the classical scholar and the economist, are constantly rubbing shoulders, benefitting from intellectual friction and intellectual exchange. On the other hand, there are not so many historians or so many physicists on the spot, keeping one another on their toes, as we find in the great universities. The very friendliness of the place—the kind of family spirit that emerges so attractively—may even have its disadvantageous side if it helps to produce low pressure or prevents the elastic from begin kept at stretch.

I wonder what would happen if the virtues of an American education could be combined with that peculiar "drive" which is often imparted to the English student in his last years at school, particularly when he is preparing for university scholarships. I think that occasionally in England this intensification of study is carried too far; and sometimes as a teacher of history in Cambridge I have found freshmen so crammed and so over-taught in history that for a term, or even longer, I have had to keep them away from history altogether.

The greatest thing that a teacher can do for a student is not to teach him—not to transfer information from his own mind into the student's mind—but to communicate to him that "drive" which carries him forward on a process of autonomous self-education. If this could be added to American education in the later years of school life the result would be very remarkable indeed.

Beat Christmas

'Twas the night before Christmas and all through the pad
Not a hip cat was swinging, and that's nowhere dad;
The stove was hung up in that stocking routine,
In hopes that the fat man would soon make the scene.
The kids had all had it so they hit their sacks,
And me and the bride had begun to relax,
When there started a rumble that came on real frantic
So I opened the window to figure the panic.
I saw a square short that was
makin' fat tracks,
Bein' pulled by eight dogs who was wearing hat racks;
And a funny old geezer was flippin' his lid,
He told 'em to make it, and man,
like they did!
I couldn't help diggin' the scene on the roof
As I stood there just waiting for chubby to goof;
They stood by the chimney in bunches and clusters
'Til tubby slid down, comin' on like gangbusters.
His threads were the squarest
and I had to chuckle;
In front (not in back) was his Ivy
League buckle;
The mop on his chin hid his button-down collar
And with that red nose, man he looked like a baller.
Like he was the squarest, the most absolute,
But face it, who cares when he left all that loot?
He laid the jazz on me and fled
from the gig,
Wailin' "Have a cool Yule and man, later, like dig?"

On Christmas

Sidney Dakar

Christmas is almost here again. This is the time when everyone is always giving advice to everyone else on how to spread good will among our neighbors. I will also give my little contribution. However, my advice applies not only to the Christmas season, but to every day of the year. It saddens me to realize that very few people will read these words and fewer will heed them.

Most of us never realize the truly important things in life until it is often too late. We go through school worrying about whether we will make a B or C on some course which is suppose to be preparing us for life, but is not. We fret over whether we should wear high heels or flats, or, whether we should wear a blue or grey suit. We spend hours or days trying to decide whether to buy some mundane article.

We miss the essence of life while we are right in the middle of it. We miss many opportunities to help a stranger with little effort on our part. We fail to give a child something that he wants dearly. We dismiss this want as not important and refuse to take the time to get him the inexpensive item.

Opportunity comes only once in many cases. We may no longer be able to find the stranger when we remember him years later. When it is too late, we realize how much joy we could have given him. The child grows up; he no longer desires the little thing which would have given him so much pleasure at the time. We can give the child more expensive items now, but somehow these more expensive things do not seem to make him as happy.

If we could only see these golden opportunities as they arrive, and not years later, our lives would be filled with happiness. I look back over my past years and see the many opportunities that I have passed by. I could have smiled at someone whom I did not like, but one who may have liked me. A smile, a kind word or deed, what a small price for years of happiness for us and for those who received them. Yet most of us refuse to pay this smallest of prices until it is often too late. For truly, we shall not pass this way again.

Alford

Currently underfoot is a move to deprive newly elected Congressman Dale Alford of his seat in the house. Alford was victor by a write-in vote over Brooks Hays in a much publicized election victory in which Governor Orval Faubus' support of Alford was clearly indicated.

Any move to deprive Alford of his seat at this time, barring a fraud in the actual balloting or counting on election day, would be a bad thing.

Alford is not a person whom any self-respecting person would want in his legislature. He is not a person that promises any good by being in the House, but at the same time he is the representative of the will of the people in Arkansas, and thus he has a right to serve.

If during his term of office he violates any law, there can be impeachment proceeding brought about against him, but until then the House should be bound by the ballot of the citizens of Arkansas.

This is a bitter pill to swallow, especially to those like this observer, who feel that the loss of Brooks Hays was a tragic event. Yet, reality is reality and Hays lost. It would undermine representative government if Alford would not be seated.

This in no way should open the doors of either party to Dr. Alford. He should be regarded in the House as he was regarded at the polls—an independent segregationist, and as such should be excluded from either party if they want to keep the parties respectable in any good sense of that word.

The less prestige Dr. Alford gets the better.

Somebody Fouls Up, And We're All Pagan

Have Carolina students become pagans? cannibals?

It would seem that they have, judging from an item in Friday's edition of The Daily Tar Heel.

The article was a notice in Covering the Campus about the Olin T. Binkley Memorial Baptist Church. A sentence at the bottom of the article read as follows: "Small children will be carved during the service in the YMCA Building."

"Carved"?

Reds Claim Secret Document

LONDON (AP) — Moscow radio claimed last night the nuclear armament of western Europe is laid down in a secret document known as M.C. 70.

The Moscow comment was on the meeting of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization ministers in Paris which ended Thursday. The council in its final communique, announced a speedup in defense arrangements and declared its "manifest will to use nuclear retaliatory forces to repel aggression."

Moscow radio commentator Piotr Zarin said document M.C. 70 "is not subject to discussion by any western Parliament.

Message From Satellite Carries Peace Message

acy. It pulled U. S. military-scientific prestige to a new peak above the depths of 14 months ago when Russia's Sputnik I flashed aloft.

Eisenhower's mesage did two things. It emphasized, as he and the Pentagon did in announcing the launching last night, the peaceful aspects of space exploration. And it dramatized the workability of an entirely new concept of space communication.

The 150-pound payload in the 8,700-pound Atlas contains a complex mechanism. It is designed to receive messages and, upon command signal, send them back to earth.

The first tryout Thursday was partially successful. The message got to the satellite all right but came back garbled.

Eisenhower's pre-recorded message returned yesterday—scratchy and uneven—but still the voice of the President.

It was picked up by the Cape Canaveral communications center about 3:15 p.m. EST and relayed to the Pentagon. White House Press Secretary James C. Hagerty played the Pentagon's recording for reporters in his office. At one point, the voice faded to an indistinct garble. Hagerty later supplied the unheard words.

The radio bands on which the message was transmitted were 132.435 and 132.905 megacycles. Radio frequencies for tracking purposes were announced earlier as 107.97 and 107.94 megacycles.

Eisenhower, in high spirits, joined reporters at the White House to listen to the recording. Fiddling with his glasses in one hand, the President listened intently and expressed puzzlement that one sentence was garbled.

"But it didn't hurt the message any," the President said.

UNC Overcomes Notre Dame 81-77 In Blue Grass Tourney

Last night began a long series of tests for McGuire's young Tar Heels as they meet the best in the land during the Christmas holidays. This column was written before the Notre Dame game, so we can't say anything about that specifically.

The competition Carolina faces in the next two weks is enough to scare away less hearty souls by just a glimpse at the lineup. Last night the Heels played Notre Dame, a team that is disappointing in its 1-3 record, but one that was rated as high as 8th before the season began.

It is entirely possible that the Tar Heels will face Northwestern, ranked 6th in the country last week and currently way out front in the Big Ten. It is also posible they'll face Louisville, who owns a fine 4-2 record in a rebuilding year.

Then comes the Dixie Classic, and if you want strong teams, you can just about take your pick. First of all there is Cincinnati, the nation's top team at the last poll. Then comes Carolina (10th), N. C. State (4th), and Michigan State (11th).

In addition to those there are Duke and Wake Forest, always tough to beat in the classic, and outsiders Yale and Louisville.

And that's not all. After the two tournaments the Tar Heels will meet Notre Dame in a single game in Charlotte Coliseum on January 3. That one will be televised nationally.

Carolina has won three straight games and the respect of sports-writers who put on the AP Poll. They were ranked tenth last week and serve notice they would like to move up the ladder.

It's just a thought, but if they should cop both tournaments and beat Notre Dame in the singleton, they'd almost have to cry for new worlds to conquer. Of course, the chances of them doing it against such talent is slim, but anything can happen . . .

There is one definite thing we can say: After Christmas, we should know, one way or another, just how good the upstart Tar Heels are. Earlier in the season they were picked anywhere from 3rd to 5th in the conference. Now they are tied for first and look like they have the horses to take over sole ownership of the first rung on the ladder.

An amazing thing happened the other night. In the South Carolina game, Dick Kepley was thrown out for fighting. While we certainly don't condone getting thrown out of basketball games for fighting, we think perhaps it is a good sign. Last year Kepley couldn't get excited enough to get thrown out of a game. This year he is a virtual ball of fire.

The big guy from Roanoke has really come around into the kind of ballplayer everyone knew he could be if he just tried. Coach McGuire cites his change of attitude as one of the principal reasons. Kepley, if he continues at his present pace, stands a good chance of leading the conference in rebounds, and maybe even in scoring.

Another sign for the Tar Heels raised its head in the Gamecock contest. There were four men in double figures and two just under. That, my friends, is team work. It's happened in every game so far, and we hope they keep it up. There isn't one big man, there are five.

Sophs York Larese and Doug Moe have turned into one of the finest yearling duos in the nation almost overnight. Who would have thought two men with such sparse experience in the big time could perform like Larese and Moe? Well, perhaps nobody would have thought it, but it is certainly a pleasant surprise.

After Christmas vacation the conference race really gets rolling merrily. There will be a battery of games just before finals, and one right on top of another after the final exams. There may be a winner hiding in the dark confines of Woollen Gym, and we'll soon know . . .

Notre Dame got the lead back, but a Lee Shaffer jump, with 6:56 on the clock, put Carolina out in front to stay at 68-66.

From that point the Tar Heels, led by Salz, Larese and Shaffer spurted to a 79-68 bulge, outscoring Notre Dame 13-2.

After Shaffer's go-ahead jump, Larese scored four straight points on a push shot and two free throws.

As soon as the Tar Heels got their biggest lead of the night at 79-68 with 1:56 left, Notre Dame caught fire briefly to pull within four at 79-75. But a lay-up by Salz with 20 seconds left gave the Tar Heels an 81-75 margin and a last minute goal by Tom Hawkins wasn't enough to pull it out of the fire for the Irish.

Carolina again had a bad first half hitting only 35 per cent of its shots from the floor. Shaffer, who gunned in 18 big counters in the initial half, was the Heel's saving grace as nobody else was hitting. The Tar Heels especially had trouble under the boards, as Notre Dame outrebounded them with ease in the first half.

The big difference in the second stanza was the much improved Carolina rebounding and shooting percentage. Dick Kepley kept the Irish from pulling away early in the second half on six straight points.

Lee Shaffer wound up as high scorer for Carolina with 24 points, 18 of them in the first half. Once again the Tar Heel scoring was well distributed, with four men in double figures. In addition to Shaffer's clutch performance, Harvey Salz had 17, York Larese 16, and Doug Moe 15.

Carolina's Tar Heels,t railing by as much as 11 points in the first half, pulled a remarkable comeback in the second half to overcome Notre Dame 81-77 in the first round of the Blue Grass Invitational Tournament.

The Tar Heels face the winner of the Northwestern-Louisville clash tonight at 10:15.

Lee Shaffer led the Tar Heel attack with 24 points, but it was York Larese who sparked the comeback in the second half. Larese had 16 points, Harvey Salz had 17 and Doug Moe got 15.

Shaffer hit a jump shot to put Carolina ahead to stay at 68-66 with 6.56 left in the ball game. From there Carolina fought to an 11-point bulge and a lead they never relinquished.

Indoor Track Team Prep For Season

By NICHOLAS S. CLAUS

The 1959 UNC indoor track season bounded away to an enthusiastic start in the past three days as an informal Intersquad Meet was held in Carolina's ancient and battered old Tin Can.

660 yd. run: Sylvester, Jeffries, Chappell 1:28.4

¾ mile: Bishop, Somers, Foxworth 3:06.3

1½ mile run: Arthur, Coffin, Everett 7:24

Giants Ready For Browns

NEW YORK — (AP) — Alex Webster was unable to work out with the New York Giants Friday as they completed preparations for Sunday's playoff game with Cleveland at Yankee Stadium for the Eastern Conference title of the National Football League.

The Giants' strong running right halfback has been hobbled by a left knee injury most of the season. He hurt the other knee in last Sunday's 13-10 victory over the Browns.

Pat Summerall, the hero of last Sunday's game with his 49-yard, game - winning field goal, hasn't been able to practice kicking all week due to a leg injury. Don Chandler, the club's fine punter, has been working in Summerall's place as a field goal kicker. Chandler will kick off but it is hoped Summerall will be ready for the placements.

Howell said the field was in "pretty good shape" considering the snow of a week ago. The weatherman predicted a clear, cold day with a high of about 24 degrees for the playoff to see which team will be the host to the Dec. 28 league championship game with the Baltimore Colts.

All reserved seats were sold in mid-week. Whether the crowd goes to 63,000 as it did last week or 72,000 capacity depends on the gate sale of bleacher seats and standing room Sunday morning. A total of 12,000 bleachers seats and about 5,000 standing room tickets are available.

In case the score is tied after four quarters the game will continue on a sudden death basis. The first team to score will win. The Giants still are 11-10 betting favorites with no points listed because of the chance of a sudden death ending.

Irish Game Televised

The Carolina-Notre Dame basketball game to be played on January 3 in Charlotte Coliseum will be nationally televised by the NBC television network in line with its regular game of the week policy.

The concert will be free to UNC students upon presentation of Identification Cards at the door.

The 32-year-old Philadephia violinist will perform the following selections: Rondo in C Major by Mozart, Sonata in A Major by Brahms, Concerto in G Major by Bruch, Poeme by Chauson, Sonata No. 6 in E Major by Ysaye;

Dulles Hears Mikoyan On Berlin

WASHINGTON, UP — Russia Anastas I. Mikoyan and an ailing Secretary of State Dulles yesterday reviewed the Berlin crisis and the East-West deadlock over ermany's future.

The tone of their meeting was described as friendly and frank.

"There will be peace, there will be peace," said the smiling Mikoyan as he left the State Department after a 95-minute talk with Dulles.

Mikoyan ran into hostile demonstrations by Hungarian refugees on arriving at the State Department and again when he left. But he appeared unruffled.

The 63-year-old Soviet Deputy Premier told newsmen he will meet with President Eisenhower in two weeks to follow up his talk with Dulles.

The Eisenhower-Mikoyan meeting will come after a cross-country tour the old Bolshevik tentatively plans to begin Wednesday.

James C. Hagerty, white house press secretary, said Mikoyan probably will confer with Eisenhower Jan. 19. Dulles will sit in at the session.

As for Mikoyan's session with Dulles today, Eisenhower got a telephone report on that from Dulles immediately afterward. The White House declined to provide any detail.

Mikoyan and Dulles, using almost identical language, agreed their meeting was very useful. They also reported matters discussed included disarmament and Russia's desire for more trade with the United States.

Neither official gave a hint, however, whether Mikoyan brought word from Moscow about possible Soviet concessions ti ease tension over Berlin.

"I have said enough," Mikoyan replied when newsmen asked whether

State Affairs Committee Enacts Plan

A plan designed by the UNC Students on the Committee on State Affairs was put into action during the Christmas holidays. University students from almost all North Carolina counties contacted county representatives to the State Legislature to express the financial needs of the University.

Norman Smith, chairman of the Committee on State Affairs, said the student work thus far is having good results, though, he said, "only a very small number of the people who were sent to see representatives have reported."

When asked why he feels it the responsibility of the students to carry the problem of finance to the people, Smith replied, "The people in the South Building work for us. We are the future tax payers and voters. People seem to respond better when contacts are made directly by those concerned."

Smith said he feels a program which benefits the students of the University should be student inspired.

Charles Shaffer, director of developement at UNC, said it is too early to know what the final outcome of the efforts of the students will be. He said, "We cannot measure, before the final results, what our efforts will produce in dollars and cents."

Shaffer said the students who are working on the financial problems should be complimented. "I know many of them have burned midnight oil working on it," he said.

Shaffer said he had been appointed as a focal point to give all information possible to those concerned. He said he hoped to work close to the students. "It is really gratifying to see the way the studentts work," he said.

Students used a special brochure to assist them in their task of carrying the problem to the representatives. The brochure, "Our Growing University," was prepared to outline all the financial needs at the University: the A and B budgets and the capital improvements budget.

Astronomy For Scouts Aim Of New Planetarium Program

"Scouting the Skies," a program designed to acquaint Boy, Girl and Cub Scouts with features of astronomy necessary to understanding and advancement, will open at the Morehead Planetarium here tonight at 6:30 and continue through Feb. 23.

Every possible advantage the UNC facility can offer will be directed toward Scouting during the period.

With the Planetarium instrument, real motions will be described in order to clarify misconceptions which arise from seeing the apparent motions in nature. The brightest stars enhancing the winter skies over North Carolina will be located and identified, and many special devices which clearly demonstrate astronomical phenomena and which can be made at home will be exhibited.

In addition to the nightly 8:30 performance, "Scouting the Skies" will be given at 11 a.m. and 1 and 4 p.m. on Wednesdays through Fridays, at 11 a.m. and 3 and 4 p.m. on Saturdays and at 3 and 4 p.m. on Sundays. One Scout official will be admitted free with each 10 Scouts in attendance.

Planetarium Manager A. F. Jenzano said that while the program is directed to Scouts, it is one for the entire family "because of the dawning new age, an age when mankind instead of windering and guessing will be able to travel to the other planets and examine them directly."

This age, Jenzano said, belongs to the youth of today. "They may become the great explorers of all time. They study the stars today, and tomorrow they may visit them. Who knows? Even adults of today may go with them."

In addition to the Planetarium program, visitors may also view the public exhibitions, whigh include a 12-foot cutaway model of the Vanguard rocket and the push-button controlled Copernican Orrery. Others exhibits pertain to weather, old estronomical instruments, archaeology, minerals and timepieces.

Loyalty Oaths May Go; No Useful Purpose Ever Served By Job Question

Aycock Hits Question As 'Wishful Thinking'

CHAPEL HILL, N. C., — (AP) — University of North Carolina officials said yesterday no useful purpose was ever served by a question on UNC job application forms relating to Communist party membership.

Consolidated University President William C. Friday announced Dec. 17 that he had approved a recommendation by University Chancellor William B. Aycock to eliminiate the question from the application blanks.

CHANCELOR AYCOCK
. . . question is wishful thinking

Since 1949, the question had required job applicants at the University at Chapel Hill to state whether they have ever had any connection with communism. The question was not on the application forms at the other consolidated university units — Woman's College in Greensboro and North Carolina State in Raleigh.

Aycock said in a statement Monday "It is wishful thinking to expect a question of this nature to catch a communist, and the true effect is to create an unwholesome backwash."

Since '1941, employes of the three units of the Consolidated University have been required to take an oath of allegiance to the U. S. Constitution and the State Constitution.

W. D. Carmichael Jr., Vice President of the University, said the question merely put "a one-foot rope around the campus that any liar could step over."

Such a question, he said, "gives your institution a bit of taint that I'd rather not see us smeared with."

An avowed Communist Party member was discovered on the University faculty in 1949.

An unsuccessful resolution was later introduced to the UNC Board of Trustees which would have required job applicants to swear under oath whether they had ever had any connections with Communism.

The trustees voted unanimously on May 24, 1949, to leave the University's Communist problem in the hands of administrative officials.

Carmichael said University Chancellor R. B. House, who has since retired, decided to put the question on UNC job application blanks.

He added, "We have had any number of people on our faculty who were under the impression that every new employe had to take an oath that he was not a member of the Communist Party or connected with an organization affiliated with Communism because of the question."

Friday said, "Actual experience has shown over the past 10 years that there has not been a single instance where the question revealed any tangible evidence."

"It is our conviction," he added, "that a direct oath of allegiance to the Constitution is a much more effective means of dealing with the problem."

Aycock declared, "To retain a question of this nature on applications for appointment to apply to all faculty members — including those whom we know well — is to acquiese in the inference that the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill is friendlier to Communists than other state-supported institutions. This, of course, is simply not so."

Friday plans to give a report next Monday to the executive committee of the UNC Trustees on developments concerning the decision to drop the question from the application blanks.

Friday said uniform job application forms are being prepared for all three consolidated university units.

Chairmanships Open On GM Committees

Applications are now being received for the chairmanships of the Drama and Current Affairs committees of Graham Memorial.

The positions are open to any interested students, who can fill the positions the remainder of this year and next year.

Application blanks may be filled out in the GM information office or GMAB office.

Plans made by the outgoing chairmen will not be altered by the change in chairmanships.

Four Rhodes Scholars Selected

The four Rhodes Scholarship recipients from the Southern district represent the states of Georgia, Florida, Tennessee and Virginia.

They were announced Dec. 21 after a conference andin terviews at Emory College in Atlanta, Ga.

Hailing from Milledgeville, Ga., is James F. Ray, who was accredited by the United States Military Academy at West Point, N.Y.

William Harley Henry, of Kenyon College (Ohio), applied for the scholarship through his home town of Atlantic Beach, Fla.

Representing the University of the South (Tennessee) is Benjamin B. Dunlap Jr., who is a native of Columbia, S.C.

The fourth recipient is John Luster Brinkley of Charlotte, N.C. He was accredited by Hampton-Sidney College (Virginia)

Representatives in the regional competition from North Carolina were Don Furtado, UNC student body president, and Landon Roland, editor of the Dartmouth school newspaper. Furtado is from Garner and Roland hails from Fuquay Springs.

All candidates in the Rhodes Scholarship regionals had been recommended by their college or university and had won in state-wide competition. They had the choice of representing their state residence or school.

Thirty-two Rhodes scholars were chosen with four from each district of six states in the United States.

Judging of the winners is based upon scholastic ability, force of character, leadership and physical vigor.

UNC Awarded Grant Totalling $48,000

$48,000 has been granted to UNC over other institutions of higher learning in this area by the Woodrow Wilson Foundation.

A grant of $2,000 was given to the Graduate School at Chapel Hill for each of 24 Woodrow Wilson Fellows who have chosen the Univer- of North Carolina as the institution where they are pursuing graduate studies during the current year.

UNC was the leading institution in the South — from the standpoint of being the university or college in the region chosen for graduate study by the largest number of selected Woodrow Wilson scholars. The Wilson Fellows may pick any college or university in the nation to attend.

Dean of the Graduate School in the University of North Carolina, Dr. the University, Dr. Alexander Heard explained that the $48,000 is a grant to the Graduate School itself and is in addition to the regular stipends of $1,400 to each of the students, plus tuition and fees for each one.

Of the 24 Woodrow Wilson Fellows in the University at Chapel Hill, 12 are studying for advanced degrees in English, four in history, two in mathematics, two in chemistry, two in classics, one in Germanic languages and one in sociology.

A total of 1082 Woodrow Wilson Fellows were named in 90 U. S. and Canadian institutions. Two-thirds of the total (712) are concentrated in 18 universities, as follows: Harvard, Columbia, Yale, California at Berkeley, Chicago, Princeton, Wisconsin, Michigan, Radcliffe College, Stanford, Cornell, North Carolina, Johns Hopkins, M.I.T., Illinois, Duke, Pennsylvania, California Tech.

The grants to the graduate schools are intended to help "strengthen graduate programs and to assist beyond their first year of graduate work students genuinely interested in a teaching career."

'Moderating' Weather Said Heading Here

The cold weather which suddenly moved into Chapel Hill to greet returning students late Sunday afternoon should start "moderating" tomorow, according to the weather bureau at the Raleigh-Durham airport.

The temperature should start rising slowly, warming the cold wave that probably originated in Siberia.

According to the weather bureau North Carolina will not receive any of the snow, sleet, hail and freezing rain that have been plaguing the northern states.

Baritone Joel Carter Sings As Escamillo In 'Carmen'

Joel Carter, leading baritone and former director of West Coast theatricals, will sing the role of Escamillo in a concert version of "Carmen" to be presented by the UNC Music Department Jan. 13.

Dr. Carter, a member of the UNC faculty, joins Claramae Turner of the Metropolitan Opera Company and six other soloists for one performance of the opera to be given in Memorial Hall on the UNC campus.

The performers will be assisted by the University Chorus and Orchestra. As singer, director and producer, Dr. Carter has had a hand in numerous opera productions both in California and North Carolina. In San Francisco he was a member of the Light Opera Association and at Stanford University he was assistant director of the Opera Workshop.

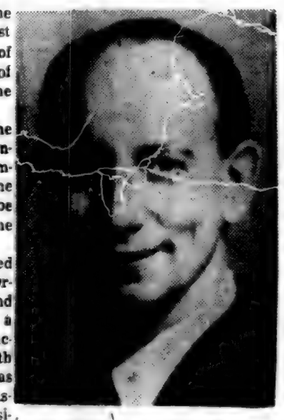
While in California he was leading baritone and stage director for the West Coast Intimate Opera Players.

His leading roles on the West Coast included the principal role in Weinberger's "Schwanda, The Bagpiper"; Caspar in "Der Freischutz"; Swallow in Britten's "Peter Grimes"; and Alfonso in "Cosi Fan Tutte." Staged by the Intimate Opera Players this last opera had over 30 performances in Hollywood.

After his appointment to the music faculty at UNC in 1949, Carter continued to pursue his operatic interests in addition to his duties as chairman of voice instruction and director of the UNC Glee Club.

In Chapel Hill he has produced and directed some 10 works from the opera repertories of Pergolesi, Mozart, Weill, Menotti and Gilbert and Sullivan. He has also portrayed Figaro in the Music Department's production of Mozart's opera and of Petruchio in the Playmaker's "Kiss Me, Kate," given here several years ago.

An associate professor of music and music education at UNC, Dr. Carter is a graduate of San Jose State College Calif. After four years with the U. S. Army Air Force he returned to California for graduate work at Stanford University. He was an instructor there and at the California School for the Blind in Berkeley.



JOEL CARTER
. . . as Escamillo

As conductor of the Chapel Hill Choral Club, he recently directed the performance of Bach's Christmas Oratorio as part of the Music Department's Tuesday Evening Series.

Other principles in the Carmen cast in addition to Miss Turner and Dr. Carter are Gene Strassler graduate assistant in the Music Department as Don Jose, and Martha Fouse of Chapel Hill in the role of Micaela.

Tickets for reserved seats may be purchased in Hill Hall.

INFIRMARY

Nancy Jean Robison, Jeffrey Lawrence, Wilson Reid Cooper, James Arthur Ryder, John Raymond Hairr, Donn Allison Wells, Nellred Allen Smyre, Charles Brent Dorrity and Andy Green Woods.

Challenge To Sanity

A new year is born, and in its first gurgles it promises to be a crucial 365 days, a period that may well decide the fate of the world for years if not centuries to come.

Coming almost unheralded was a man made planet currently racing to orbit around the sun, and heralded but not prediceted was the overturn of a government in Cuba, signalling the successful completion of a two year guerrilla war.

In the largest sense, these developments indicate once more that the world in which this generation lives is the most fluid and least static of any in the history of man. It is a world whose perimeter is enlarged beyond the circumference of the planet earth to the solar system and the universe. It is a world where time is no longer measured in days, but in seconds and subdivisions of seconds.

It is a world in which man's control over nature, man's knowledge of nature, and man's ability to prepare himself for nature has reached untold heights, and it is a world in which man's appreciation of nature has not increased materially over the years.

It is an era of fads and fancies. New methods are being tried, abandoned and tried again. New approaches to the arts have been put to use, but their use has been one of great quantity and very little quality.

It is a world in which the few are painfully aware of the critical time that is the present, and where the many are blissfully unaware that their very existence is being threatened. It is a world in which the poor, the uneducated, and the unthinking outnumber ten to one the leaders and potential shapers of a glorious world. It is a world complicated by the power seekers, who seek power for power's sake, and whose hunger goes unsatiated.

The world of 1959 is a world going in two directions at once. It is going, through the help of the scientist, the philosopher, some politicians, and above all the educator, toward a maximum awareness of the universe and unlimited freedom for man to develop. At the same time it is plunging with ever increasing velocity towards its own destruction and annihilation.

Man is now and has been his own best ally and his own worst enemy. He has, if he wants to use it, the talent, ability, and brains to make a heaven on earth, and if he fails to realize his potential, fails to awaken to the realities of this earth, he will end his existence.

At no time in history has there been as great a necessity for thought followed by action. At no time in history has there been so little leadership.

There is no assurance now that right will win out, or that good will triumph over which there may be treasure or nothingness.

There is not even a realization on the part of most people in the world as to what they consider good, worth working for, and it is a time in which what is worth working for needs the work to push it through. Right will not triumph without the effort of each individual. This a world of cold hard realities in which the romantic concept of the knight saving the day or God delivering a miracle has no place. If the people of the world want to be saved, if they want to enjoy a world of untold beauty, they must do it themselves.

Individual initiative never meant more than it does in 1959, and individual initiative was never in less supply.

The well spring of the human mind may go down the drain or it may produce a beautiful fountain. Which will it be?

The answer or the foundation for the answer may well come in 1959.

New Year

In case some readers missed the last issue of The Daily Tar Heel prior to vacation, the editor and staff extend to the campus a wish for a very happy, prosperous, and productive New Year.

Unfortunately that new year has to be marred by return to classes, and the grim prospect of examinations some twelve days away. Through all the havoc, it might be a good idea to keep in mind that despite the rigors of the next two weeks a fantastic percentage of people survive without committing suicide or dying from the strain. Yet, the rigors of the next two weeks are for the most part well worth the effort, for those who want an education. It is, however, somewhat unfortunate that most people spend the next two weeks doing what they should have done all semester. Yet, procrastination exists and until there is built up through the grade schools and high schools a real zeal for learning, it will continue to exist in the field of education.

One can only hope that before too long government will awaken to education, and students will cease to cheat themselves.

The End Of An Era?

Hans J. Morgenthau

We are in Mr. Khrushchev's debt for having warned us, and in Walter Lippmann's for having conveyed the warning, that the United States may be enjoying "the last years of its greatness." The scene is extraordinary and full of meaning, and the meaning is in the best Marxist tradition. Other whould-be conquerors have fore-told the impending doom of their prospective victims, arguing from their weakness and from the decline of their greatness, reminding them perhaps of a greatness of which nothing remains but the trappings. Such is not Mr. Khrushchev's argument. He recognizes America's present greatness and he denies its future not because it will itself decline but because the Soviet Union will surpass it. One is reminded of the tribute — unmatched both in praise and insight by any defender of capitalims — which Marx and Engels paid the bourgeoisie in "The Communist Manifesto":

> It has been the first to show what man's activity can bring about. It has accomplished wonders far surpassing Egyptian pyramids, Roman aqueducts, and Gothic cathedrals . . . The bourgeoisie . . . has created more massive and more colossal productive forces than have all preceding generations together.

And it is both in spite and by virtue of these achievements (because it could achieve nothing else, exhausting its historic mission with these achievements) that the founders of Communism were as confident as is their present heir of the impending doom of capitalism.

The message which Mr. Khrushchev, echoing Marx and Engels, sends us through Mr. Lippmann, then, is this: you are doomed not because you are small and weak, but because your greatness and strength are inextricably tied to a particular period of history which Communism is in the process of leaving behind.

As a general proposition, the point it makes is well taken. For history bears indeed witness to the truth that a society which is unable to adapt itself to new conditions and restore its vital energies in the successful contest with new problems is doomed and that all historic societies have sooner or later been so doomed.

What makes the truth of that general proposition acutely poignant for us is a general climate of opinion and a general trend of policy which, if they do not appear to bear out that truth, do not deny it persuasively.

Our government appears to act upon the assumption, which the people are pleased to accept as self-exident, that our greatness is a kind of inherited, if not natural, quality owing to certain traditional ways of thought and action and to be perpetuated through the perpetuation these ways. This state of mind derives from what is in in essence an isolationist conception of our greatness. Time was indeed when we could afford to compare our political institutions and social arrangements with those of other nations and rest assured. Time was when we could be satisfied to compare our present with our past strength and with the prospects for the future. Yet the superiority of our way of life, in terms not of abstract philosophic principles but of political and economic results, is no longer as obvious either to us or to the rest of the world as it used to be. To hundreds of millions of people the Communist way of life appears more attractive than ours. Our strength vis-a'-vis other nations can no longer be measured by the degree of our unchallengeable superiority within the Western Hemisphere. It must be measured against a competition which is resolved to leave us behind and is dogmatically certain that it will.

It would, of course, be preposterous to suggest that we don't know all this. Yet our actions belie our knowledge. We know that we are fighting for our lives, but we act as though it could not be quite as serious as that. This contrast between knowledge and action distinguishes the new isolationism from the old. The isolationism did not know what the score was and acted as though the score did not exist. The new isolationism knows the score, but hankers back to when we could afford to ignore it.

This neo-isolationist state of mind causes almost of necessity a perversion of the priorities of national policy. National policy is at all times confronted with demands which exceed, or seem to exceed, the available resources. It is the task of statesmanship to judge correctly both the actual and potential amount of the resources available and the relative importance of the demands upon them in order to support what is important with what is necessary. The Administration has failed in both tasks. Starting with a static, pre-Keynesian conception of economic life and of the creative role of government within it, the Administration has erected the balanced budget to the measure of all policy. The question, can we afford it? has pride of place before all questions of substantive policy. And since the answere is in the negative, the argument in reverse comes easy.

This state of mind not only perverts the priorities upon which the Administration acts, it also exerts a subtly corrupting influence upon the public debate on public issues. With the Administration having set the tone, public and, more particularly Congressional opinion tends to divide not according to the substantive merits of the issues but according ot how expensive one kind of policy is compared with another kind. The President having stigmatized the opposition as "spender," the opposition is tempted to join the issue by either proving that it is at least as budget-conscious as the Administration or else by defying the Administration and providing more than it has asked for.

Yet in truth the controversy over spending is utterly absurd. Since this strictly economic abusrdity has been argued with special competence by others, such as the businessmen of the Committee for Economic Development, it only needs to be pointed out here that if the Soviet Union — with less than half our national product — can afford to challenge the United States on land, on the seas, and in the air, in economic productivity, in technical innovation, in foreign aid and trade, in the struggle for the minds of men, it is tantamount to a declaration of national bankruptcy for us to act on the assumption that we cannot afford an adequate response to the Communist challenge. The issue which must for us overshadow all others is not how to save money but, first, how to survive and, then, how to emerge victorious from this contest. The nation which would assure its survival would have forfeited its claim to greatness and jeopardized its very existence as well.

It is against this state of mind, permeating the Administration, that the 86th Congress must defend the interests of the nation. It is against its corrosive influence, against its infectious lure to escape from the hard and risky issues of history into the simple and certain world of accounting that it must be on guard. For this state of mind, by taking our greatness and our survival for granted and by reducing the great issues facing the nation and mankind to a matter of dollars and cents, is in truth as was its isolationist predecessor in the interwar period, a prescription for disaster. Militarily, it spells mortal danger. Politically, it spells defense of an indefensible status quo. Economically, it spells wasteful stagnation. Administratively, it spells chaos. And as the policy of the opposition, it spells "moderation."

Point Of No Survival

Harrison Brown

We Americans are confronted today by the very basic elementary problem of survival—survival of our nation, our freedom, our culture, our people, our civilization and of the human species itself. But our problem today differs considerably from that of Neanderthal Man when suddenly confronted by a wild beast. Then the decision was a very simle one—kill or be killed. But now, so complex has our modern industrial world become, and so dependent have we become upon the smooth functioning of the intricate network of mines and factories, that the problem of survival has been transformed into a fantastic assortment of problems—all of which are interrelated and all of which must be recognized and solved if human beings are to continue to inhabit the earth.

It seems to me that the most important requisite for survival, both of our nation and our freedom, is the formulation of long-range goals. The first of these goals involves the recognition that survival and world anarchy are incompatible, that whether we like it or not we must move toward a rule of world law or perish. We should heed the words of Alexander Hamilton when he asked, "Why was government instituted at all?" He answered, "Because the passions of men will not conform to the dictates of reason and justice without constraint." I believe that we should declare world law to be a goal, realizing fully the difficulties which lie in our path.

Our second objective should be to do everything possible to make the industrial transition in the presently underdeveloped areas of the world as smooth and as free from turmoil as possible. We should recognize that it is very much in the interest of our long-range security that starvation be elliminated in India, that her population be brought under control, and that these things happen within the framework of a democratic government. In the long run this is even more important to our security and freedom than the development of the ulltimate in intercontinental ballistics missiles.

Once we recognize that long-range goals are truly requisites for survival, it becomes possible to formulate short-range goals and policies reasonably intelligently. I believe that high on the list of immediate objectives should be disarmament and control agreements under United Nations supervision and control. Equally high on the list should be the establishment, again under United Nations supervision and control, of a program of world development which is truly adequate.

Of the narrower problems which now confront our nation, I believe that of education is the most important. We have got to face the facet that we are simply not sufficiently well-educated to survive in our modern world—that the savage in the jungle was far better equipped to survive in his world than we are in ours. The savage who is not familiar with his tools and weapons and who does not understand the habits of the plants and animals about him cannot survive for long. Similarly, we who live in the complex environment of industrial civilization must understand that civilization.

I believe that we should strip our school curricula of frivolity and non-sense and eliminate from it those activities which could just as well be extra-curricular or which should be learned in the home. We should load our students with just as much solid material as they can handle. We should look upon the bright child as being our most treasured resource.

Intimately connected with the problem of education—particularly at the higher levels, is the problem of accumulating new knowledge of research. The tasks of keeping the complex machinery of industrial society functioning, of producing raw materials from the leanest of earth-substances, of providing enough energy and power, of producing enough food for the rapidly-increasing numbers of mouths, of decreasing the rate of population growth — these tasks will necessitate our accumulating knowledge in the decades ahead at a rate which is far greater than our rate of accumulation today. Whether we like it or not, we have passed a major point-of-no-return and have become completely dependent upon our science and our technology for our personal and cultural survival.

It seems to me that on matters like this we have a great deal of soul-searching to do and quite a few questions to ask ourselves. And the answers to these questions may well determine whether man continues to inhabit our planet. We Americans own 50 per cent of the world's wealth, yet we account for little more than 6 per cent of its population. We own 29 per cent of the world's railroad mileage, 71 per cent of its automobiles, and 52 per cent of its radios. We produce more food than we can eat. Yet in the midst of this material wealth, life somehow has lost purpose and meaning. We have become selfish, fat, conceited, soft, and lazy. Where once we were doers, we are now viewers. Where once we fought for freedom and democracy, we now take it for granted — or, even worse, ignore it.

Where lies America's destiny? What kind of a world do we want to leave behind for our children and for the generations which will follow them? What kind of a world do we, ourselves, want to inhabit? What outlooks and actions are necessary if we are to set our sights beyond those which our daily press, the world of advertising, and our politicians set for us? What outlooks and actions are necessary if purpose and meaning are to be brought back into our lives? —The Saturday Review.

Harper's Bizarre

We have lost our heart to a charming little lady.

Her name is Miss Nancy. She's a deep Southern belle, and she'll tell you that she's that (holding up three fingers) old.

She is mistress of all she surveys, and she conquored us at one glance. We would have gladly fallen on our knees before her, but she was sitting on our lap at the time. She seemed to spend most of the holidays on our lap,infact, in front of the television set.

But if she was fond of sitting on our lap, she was enthusiastic about perching on our shoulders. From that vantage point she could survey all her domain in the proper manner — for surely, we were not the only one who fell in the gaze of those brown eyes — and she was photographed in that attitude more than any starlet before her.

Whenever she could free herself from her obedient servant she would rush about the house on dancing feet. Once in a moment of frantic play with her sister (who can tell you she's six, without fingers), the two crashed together head-on. Stunned, they both fell to the floor, then both laughed, and my queen announced, "We never cry," and rushed off on another dancng flight.

She was the youngest around our house this Christmas, so it was her Christmas. Every light shone and every cookie melted for her. We remember Christmas morning when we tried to get her into a new pair of miniature spike heels. She patiently waited while we attempted to put the little things on correctly. Later we found that she navigated much better in our oversize mocs.

Perhaps the most vivid picture of a child's Christmas we will ever have, she gave. Maybe it was a reflection, but the central figure, if not the song, was Christmas herself. Miss Nancy stood on our hearth Christmas eve, her audience ranged before her, the tree lights shining in her eyes, and softly sang "I Love to Live in Alabam".

Never before had Alabama seemed so appealing. Nor had Christmas.

On Iceland

Sidney Dakar

I hope that all of you had a cool Yule, and a frantic First. Yours truly was fortunate in being able to spend a cool Yule in Iceland and a frantic, very frantic, First in Paris. So much has already been written abuot Paris that I could add little. It is better that today's column be devoted to Iceland, a man's paradise.

Iceland lies in the middle of the North Atlantic and just touches the Arctic Circle with tis northern shore. It is warmed by the Gulf Stream. When Iceland is mentioned to most Americans, they conjure up visions of igloos and Eskimos; nothing could be more erroneous.

The Icelanders are some of the best educated people in the world and they have a proud history and culture that is traced back for one thousand years. These people are of Scandinavian descent and they have many of the characteristics of people from Norway, Sweden and Denmark. The Icelanders are a proud people and they take steps to keep their race as pure as possible. For example, no Negros are allowed to even visit the island. No Negros are allowed on the huge SAC base at Keflavik.

But, let me get down to the thing that is dear to the heart of the Carolina male — women. In all of my travels I have never seen such beautiful women as those in Iceland. The following words will not be believed unless you see one day for yourself. Let me urge every Carolina male who plans to take a trip to Europe this summer to go by way of Iceland. After seeing those beautiful dolls, many of you will probably forget all about Europe.

Almost every Icelandic girl has long, golden blond hair, sparkling, sky blue eyes, and a most delicate, white complexion. My words can not adequately describe their beautiful complexion; their skin, when pinched lightly, is the type that turns to a color not unlike the warm glow of a bed of coals after the flames have died out. Almost every Icelandic girl looks as good or better than the average movie queen. All of this is good, yet the most amazing thing about these beautiful dolls is their number. Honestly, there seems to be three of these girls to very male and all of them seem to be between the age of 18 and 25.

The Hotel Borg in Reykjavik is the best on the island and it only costs about $3.00 per day — if you exchange your money at the right place. This hotel has a dance band (mostly American music) and it holds dances every night, I believe, except Wednesdays. Every night of my stay the ballroom was so full of these lovely, luscious creatures, all dressed to the teeth, that many were standing in the lobby because there were no more seats available. The strange thing is that at least 75% of these girls come unescorted! At most of the tables there were three or four single girls just waiting for someone to ask them to dance.

It was frustrating for me; when I saw what I thought was the most beautiful girl in the world and started dancing with her, I would spot one even more beautiful. All of the girls are anxious to dance and never refuse when asked. It is a great insult for an Icelandic girl to come to a dance and then refuse to dance when an Icelandic male asks her. We need more of this spirit around here.

These girls informed me that Icelandic men rarely compliment them on their beauty and that such comments would embarrass them. This was a little hard for me to believe. Knowing women, I say a few well chosen remarks at the proper moment will help a man's cause regardless of the nationality of the woman. This proved no less true in the case in point. And last, but by no means least, it seems that just about all of these girls are firm believers in the much debated doctrine of "free love!"

If the University of Iceland had taught in English, I would not be writing these lines; I would be in Iceland.

PAA gives the best service to Iceland. You will stop for gas at Gander. The total flight time is about 12 hours on a DC-7. The planes stop at Kelavik, the U. S. base. Reykjavik is 30 miles; a bus costs a $1.00, a taxi about $10.00. The official exchange rate is about 12K to $1.00; the tourist rate is 25K ot $1.00. However, even this rate is unrealistic and there are plenty of places on the black market that gives 40K to $1.00.

Here is looking at you in Iceland. Happy hunting.

Dulles met with Mikoyan a few minutes after being treated at the White House for a virus infection.

The illness forced the secretary to cancel a scheduled trip to Ottawa to talk over economic problems with Canadian cabinet officers. He went home but is expected to return to work in a few days.

The 70-year-old Dulles, hit by an intestinal ailment only a month ago, apparently kept his virus condition from Mikoyan. Authorities said he decided on this lest Mikoyan view mention of it as a sign Dulles wanted to cut the talks short.

State Deartment Press Officer Lincoln White reported Mikoyan brought a message of greeting to Dulles from Soviet Premier Khrushchev.

"The atmosphere was cordial, friendly and frank," White said.

Mikoyan, bundled in a heavy overcoat, created more hubub at the State Department than any other foreign visitor in postwar years.

A band of anticommunist Hungarian refugees chanted "murderer," shook their fists, and waved placards from across the street as Mikoyan arrived and departed.

About 300 State Department employes crowded the lobby to watch Mikoyan.

They added to the din caused by about 100 newsmen, still photographers, newsreel and television cameramen.

The 5-foot-7 Russian, dressed in a conservative blue business suit topped off with an elegant gray necktie, continued to stress the "peace and friendship" theme he has hit since arriving Monday.

Appearing before television cameras, he said his talk with Dulles should improve Soviet-American relations. But he did not go into detail.

"We will wait and see," Mikoyan said.

"We had a useful exchange. I am an optimist in general."

Mikoyan returned to the Soviet Embassy in a police-escorted limousine. He arranged to attend a dinner in his honor tonight. Host for the dinner was Eric Johnston, president of the Motion Picture Assn. of America, who recently spent some time in Moscow negotiating an exchange of films.

Mikoyan's entourage meanwhile continued shielding his future movements in secrecy.

The Campus, World Over The Holidays

On Campus

By RON SHUMATE

The Carolina campus, though relatively "dead" throughout the Christmas holidays, did produce a few "holiday happenings."

One of the major events was the Dixie Classic, where the South rose again, toppling the North's (and the nation's) No. 1 bounce-ball squad twice, once by The UNC team. Carolina finished a strong third.

PATRICK'S SCHOLARSHIP

Dr. Cornelius T. Partick of the UNC School of Medicine has been recently awarded a one-year Mead Johnson Residency Scholarship.

Dr. Partrick, a native of Clinton, did his undergraduate work at UNC and received his M. D. degree from the UNC School of Medicine in 1954.

At the present time he is a senior assistant resident in medicine. The scholarships are valued at $1,000.

UNC PSYCHIATRIST

Dr. Lucie Jessner, professor of psychiatry at the UNC School of Medicine, will give two lectures at the Veterans Administration in Lexington, Ky. Dr. Jessner will talk on special problems and will be present at a case seminar.

POSTGRADUATE MEDICAL COURSES

Two postgraduate courses in medicine will be offered by the UNC School of Medicine beginning in January.

The first course will be in the Ahoskie, Edenton and Elizabeth City area. This course will begin Wednesday, Jan. 14, and will continue each Wednesday for six weeks, sponsored by the School of Medicine, the UNC Extension Division and the First District Medical Society. The lectures will be given in alternate locations each week.

The second course will begin in Goldsboro on Thursday, Jan 15. The lectures in Goldsboro will be held each Thursday for a six-week period. The co-sponsor of this course is the Wayne County Medical Society.

These courses are approved for credit by the American Academy of General Practice and certificates will be issued to those physicians attending the courses.

UNC GETS $125,000 FORD FUNDS

The Ford Foundation recently approved a grant of $125,000 to UNC to support a five-year study of American economic growth by economic historians from four institutions.

President William C. Friday of the Consolidated University receiveed notice of the grant from Foundation secretary Joseph M. McDaniel Jr. of New York.

Problems of American economic history will receive the attention of the researchers. UNC has been designated as the fiscal agent for the group of four universities. The other three are Indiana, Stanford and Yale universities.

CHEMICAL SOCIETY CHAIRMAN

Prof. Warren W. Brand of Purdue University has been elected chairman of the American Chemical Society's Division of Analytical Chemistry for 1959. He succeeds Prof. John H. Yoe, head of the University of Virginia Chemistry Department.

Dr. H. A. Liebhafsky of the General Electric Company, Schenectady, N.Y., is the new chairman-elect of the ACS division. Dr. Charles N. Reilley of UNC will continue as secretary-treasurer.

UNC STUDENTS RANKED HIGH IN HIGH SCHOOL

Top-notch students are coming to the University. Chancellor William B. Friday recently said that tests show that 85 per cent of the students enrolled in the freshman class ranked in the upper half of their high school and preparatory school classes, from the standpoint of scholarship.

Over half, or 56 per cent of the freshman class at UNC ranked scholastically in the upper fourth of their classes prior to coming to UNC. Another 29 per cent were in the "second quartile" of their high school classes. Ten per cent were in the third quarter of their classes and only 2 per cent came from the bottom quarter of their classes. For 3 per cent, no previous ranking was given. It is stressed that all enrolled passes the College Board Examinations, or the equivalent.

Chancellor Alcock reported the scholarship statistics available from test scores and other records incident to North Carolina's admissions testing program.

Speaking to the University's Public Relations Advisory Committee headed by E. A. Resch, Siler City publisher, Aycock thanked the committee members for counsel to the University. Other committee members present were John Harden of Greensboro, Hugh Morton of Wilmington and Richard Mason of Raleigh.

Stating the need for increased faculty salaries in the coming General Assembly, Aycock asked for consideration of the fact that UNC has high ranking among universities of the world.

There are bigger and more abundantly endowed universities, said Aycock, "but dollar for dollar we are at the top among universities of the nation."

Publisher Resch, in presenting the Chancellor said, "We have in Bill Aycock the Number 1 public relations attribute of the University."

As students were rolling away from the campus many were hearing the voice of President Eisenhower transmitted from outer space by way of an Air Force Atlas missile and Army Signal Corp communications equipment.

DOWNTOWN CHAPEL HILL

TRACKIN' THE TARHEELS

by RUFTY HAMMOND
BTH SPORTS EDITOR

Over the long Christmas holiday period, while most of the students were at home or visiting relatives, Carolina's Tar Heels have been on the march. Before the holiday period, the Heels sported an unbeaten 3-0 slate, but that against mediocre competition. Now, in January, the streaking McGuiremen have spurted near the top of the polls by knocking off some of the very best in the country.

The Tar Heels entered the top-flight Blue Grass Invitational Tourney in Louisville against Notre Dame, a team that had crushed them in Chicago the preceding year. It was a dogfight, but Carolina poured it on in the second half to overcome the Irish by four, 81-77.

The next night Carolina met Northwestern, class of the Big Ten and ranked sixth nationally at that time. The Wildcats fell 78-64, as McGuire's boys won it going away. Following the victorious Kentucky trip, Carolina rocketed to 3rd in the AP Poll.

The Dixie Classic began right after Christmas, with Cincinatti, ranked number 1, the odds-on favorite to carry off the trophy. But the top rated Bearcats bit the dust twice, much to the disgust of coach George Smith.

FIRST LOSS

Carolina rolled over Yale in easy fashion, but dropped its first verdict of the season to an inspired Michigan State five in the semis. The Tar Heels made too many mistakes, nearly falling apart toward the finish as the Spartans pulled out of distance.

There were questions being asked about the young Tar Heels, and the supreme test was to come the next night against Cincinatti's revenge-minded Bearcats. The game was evenly fought until the first half, with the Heels owning a four-point spread. In the second half it was the same story, basket for basket right down to the wire.

Then Cincinatti hit a hot streak and pulled to a six point lead with three minutes left. An audible groan went up from the stands as even the most ardent Tar Heel supporters were inclined to believe the cause was a lost one. But on Shaffer's magnificent follow shot and free throw, the Heels ran the score to 90-86 with less than a minute to go. Robertson hit a field goal, but Carolina sat on it, and the next time Cincy got the ball only 1 second showed on the clock.

They did not win the championship, or even finish second. They did finish a very strong third, at the same time serving notice that everybody on the schedule had better look out.

IRISH FALL AGAIN

Last Saturday they met Notre Dame for the second time in two weeks. The plot and the end result were the same, but the chapters in between told how much the Tar Heels had improved. They were methodical and unerring in blasting Notre Dame 69-54. All-American Tom Hawkins had but 5 points to his credit.

The latest AP Poll, released yesterday, has Kentuck 1st, State 2nd, and Carolina 3rd. State would undoubtedly be first and Carolina 2nd except for the fact that Rupp's Wildcats are still, by some miracle, undefeated.

It is praise enough for any team to realize that of the top ten, Carolina has met or will meet four squads. They have beaten two (Northwestern and Cincinatti) and lost to one (Michigan State.)

Although the Big Four teams faltered briefly during the Dixie Classic, when the votes were all in and the action was over, the state teams had swept through the finals, nailing down 1st, 3rd, 5th, and 7th places. The highly regarded out-of-staters were indeed a disillusioned group as they trod the path of defeat back to from whence they had come.

Notre Dame coach Johnny Jordan called Carolina "the best team we've seen all season." The Irish have met both Northwestern and Michigan State. The Tar Heel squad, which contains only one senior, has jelled into a compact, deadly unit capable of striking down the most mighty on a given night.

While the Tar Heels were bowling over the opposition in Louisville, brother institution N. C. State was making things hot in the north and midwest. The Pack smashed LaSalle and Kansas, but lost its only verdict to Kansas State by 2 points.

The outcome of the holiday games, which has put State and Carolina 2-3 in the nation, serves to build up early the upcoming battle a week from Wednesday when the two teams square off in Raleigh for the first time this season. It should be a corker.

Heels 3rd, State 2nd In AP Poll

By JOE REICHLER

Unbeaten Kentucky, for the third straight week, held the No. 1 spot in the Associated Press major college basketball ratings Monday as the rest of the top 10 took a thorough scrambling.

The rampaging Wildcats added three more victims to their list last week to run their unblemished streak to 11. As a result, they drew more first place votes than ever before, 81, and boasted their biggest point lead of the season, 1,245 to 1,115 for North Carolina State, which jumped from fifth place into the runner-up spot.

The Wolfpack, who knocked off previously unbeaten Cincinnati and Michigan State in capturing the Dixie Classic last week, drew 30 first place votes on the strengtht of their 9-1 record.

Cincinnati 6-2, which also lost to North Carolina in the Dixie competition, dropped from second to seventh place with the Tar Heels 8-1 moving up a notch from fourth to third. North Carolina had four first place votes and 1,043 points.

Kansas State's Wildcats 9-1, the Big Eight tournament champion, slipped a notch to fourth with 772 points and two first place nominations.

Only 17 points separated the fifth and seventh place teams with Michigan State 7-1 landing spot No. 5, and Auburn 8-0 climbing from ninth to sixth. The Spartans rebounded from their N. C. State defeat with a Big Ten triumph over Indiana.

Behind seventh place Cincinnati came Northwestern. The once-beaten Wildcats barely squeezed by thrice-beaten Iowa Saturday after trouncing Notre Dame three days before. Northwestern had 512 points to 546 for Cincinnati.

Bradley, one of the three unbeaten teams in the top 10, advanced from 10th to ninth after walloping Drake Saturday for its eighth straight victory.

St. John's, climbing steadily following its surprise triumph in Madison Square Garden's Holiday Festival, forced its way into the top 10, replacing Mississippi State, which dropped from eighth to 12th after losing to Auburn.

Rampaging State Still Faces Long Probation

RALEIGH (AP) — North Carolina State's basketball team, beaten only once and ranked high among the nation's leaders, is playing under the shadow of an NCAA probation.

Regardless of how successful the Wolfpack season is the team will not get a shot at the national title this season or next.

State drew a four-year NCAA probation in a basketball recruiting violation case over two years ago. The NCAA banned all State athletes from competing in NCAA championship meets and cooperating events, such as football bowl games.

The suspension runs until Nov. 13, 1960.

It already has cost State and Orange Bowl football berth. The 1957 Wolfpack team won the Atlantic Coast Conference title but Duke got the bowl assignment against Oklahoma because State could not accept it.

State repeatedly has protested the penalty on the grounds that it never had a chance to confront its accusers and break down their charges.

A year ago the NCAA refused to review the case after State had sought to have the penalty lifted from all sports but basketball, the one in which the offense occurred.

Coach Everett Case was not available for comment Monday, but members of the athletic staff contacted said they knew of no new move planned to get relief at this week's NCAA meeting at Cincinnati.

McKenzie Dropped

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va. (AP) — Jay McKenzie, top-scoring guard from Richwood, W.Va., has been dropped from the University of Virginia varsity basketball squad.

"As far as I'm concerned," coach Billy McCann said Monday, "He's all through."

McCann said as the team was going to the dressing room during the half of the Vanderbilt game, McKenzie told McCann that if he was going to be taken from the game every time he made a mistake, he didn't want to play. At that point, McCann said, McKenzie was told he was through for the season.

A 19-year-old, six foot sophomore, McKenzie scored 153 points through the Vanderbilt game to pace the Cavaliers. Their next game is Tuesday night at North Carolina State.

Cuban Congress Dissolved; Rule By Decree Announced

HAVANA — (UP) — The revolutionary government dissolved congress yesterday and announced it will rule Cuba by decree for at least 18 months when new elections are planned.

The government suspended all criminal courts, regarded as a symbol of the fallen dictatorship of Fulgencio Batista, and was reported preparing a decree abolishing all political parties.

Other decress, informed sources said, would ban all candidates in the 1954 and 1958 elections from Cuba's political life, freeze the private bank accounts of all Batista officials, and stop the cashing of all outstanding checks against the Batista regime.

Revolutionary courts were reported being prepared to try Batista, now in exile in the Dominican Republic, and other officials who may be accused of crimes during his rule.

These and other laws were announced, or deported in preparation, as provisional President Manuel Urrutia sat almost continuously in the presidential palace with his new cabinet.

The initial policies of the new government were being sharped as hoarse-voiced Fidel Castro, the rebel leader who shoved Urrutia to power, was still plodding through adoring throngs toward the capital from the east. It was doubtful he would reach Havana tomorrow as planned.

Violinist Berl Senofsy To Perform This Evening

A violin concert by Berl Senofsky will feature the music of Bruch, Brahms and Mozart tonight at 8 o'clock in Memorial Hall.

The concert is being sponsored by the Chapel Hill Concert Series in conjunction with the Student Entertainment Series of Graham Memorial Activities Board.

Students will be admitted free to balcony seats for the concert tonight.

Senofsky will begin the concert with Mozart's Rondo in C Major and Brahms' Sonata in A Major. The major work of the evening will be the Bruch Violin Concerto in G Minor.

Other selections include Poeme by Chausson, Sonata No. 6 in E Major by Ysaye, Spanish Dance by Granados-Kreisler, Pantomime by Falla-Kochanski, Ipanema by Darius Milhaud and Scherzo Tarantelle by Wieniawski.

American-born Senofsky has won acclaim both in this country and in Europe. In addition to many successful concerts abroad, Senofsky was honored in 1955 when he won first place in the Queen Elizabeth International Music contest in Brussels. Only two other violinists have ever won the coveted Queen's grand prize. Senofsky is the first American-born and American-trained violinist to gain that recognition.

Accompaniest for the violinist tonight will be Boris Barere at the piano.

A previous concert on the Chapel Hill series was baritone Leonard Warren. Several other programs are planned for the sping.

The Student Entertainment Series has already sponsored the George Melachrino Orchestra and will present the Roger Wagner Chorale Jan. 30. In March, pianist Roger Williams will be featured.

Legislature Special Session Is Scheduled

Student Legislature will hold a special session Thursday at 7 p.m., 4th floor, Old East.

The legislators will consider a bill passed favorably out of Ways and Means committee to expand the attorney-general's staff to cover investigation of Campus Code violations for Student Council and Women's Council.

At present, the staff investigates only Honor Council violations.

The solons will reconsider a bill, introduced by Ed Levy (SP-UP) to send telegrams to Governors Faubus and Almond of Arkansas and Virginia stating the Legislature's stand on integration in the schools.

Norman Smith's bill proposing a single spring Legislature election will be amended in the Ways and Means Committee this afternoon.

Tomorrow night at the Legislature meeting a campus-wide referendum will be proposed because it involves a constitutional alteration.

Also pending are bills to approve the constitution of the Graduate Club and the by-laws of the Medical School Honor Council.

UP Selects Executives Unanimously

The University Party elected its entire slate of officers by acclamation last night.

John Minter was selected as chairman for the spring semester.

Assisting him will be Angus Duff, vice-chairman; Cynthia Grant, secretary, and Bob Sevier, treasurer.

In the absence of Jack Lawing, outgoing chairman, Mauri Johnson, vice-chairman, presided.

Minter assumed the chair after elections and opened a discussion on improvements needed for the party as a whole.

Charlie Gray outlined the three main weaknesses at present.

He feels the party receives criticism because members attend during nominations merely to push certain people into the candidate positions.

Gray pointed out that the UP members are labeled as catering to one part of the campuus, specifically fraternities and sororities.

Indicating the eight members and one visitor present, he added lack of interest as the final weakness.

In the discussion following, block voting was illustrated as one of the major points needing alteration. Exactly how this could be done was not definitely decided.

In adjourning the meeting, Minter urged those present to be thinking further on ways of improvement.

Clark And Duke Win In Bridge Play

Eleven tables were in play for the opening game of 1959. Following is a list of student winners:

NORTH SOUTH: Malcolm Clark and Dan Duke, first place; EAST WEST: Frank Carlisle and Mrs. W. F. Rogers, second place; Gene Whitehead and Roy Smith, third place; and Tommy Jordan and Walt Rand, fourth place.

The director announced that play would continue all through January, even during exam weeks.

A Graham Memorial calendar erroneously omitted these scheduled games.

National Ballet To Perform At Duke

The National Ballet of Canada will appear in Page Auditorium, Duke University, Thursday night at 8 o'clock.

The dance group is the third concert of the 1958-59 Duke University All-Star Artists' Series.

Famed Celia Franca, formerly a lead with Sadler's Wells Company, directs and leads the company. Assisting in the leading roles are Lois Smith, newly acclaimed ballerina, and David Adams, premier danseur.

The orchestra is under the direction of George Crum.

Symposium Comittee To Expand

The Carolina Symposium has issued a call for students interested in taking part in its 1960 program.

For the last 10 months, the organization has been guided by an Interim Committee composed of 12 students and 12 members of the University faculty.

The Interim Committee is expanding to 50 members. Students and faculty members will hold an equal number of seats.

Chairman Al Goldsmith has opened the 25 student positions on the 1960 Committee to any student, undergraduate or graduate, interested in planning the program and in shaping the events when the next Symposium is presented to the Carolina student body.

In 1958, the Symposium featured over 50 speakers during the third week of March. The speakers appear on the lecture platform and in seminars and take part in informal meetings with students and faculty members.

Working under a motto of "outstanding minds gathered together to speak in open forum" and under a theme of "Survival," the week's activities attracted many large crowds.

Chairman Goldsmith has asked that students desiring to work with the group contact one of the following members of the Interim Committee: Jim Smalley, Dick Robinson, Herman Godwin, Davis Young, Cynthia Thompson, Lucy Forsyth, Jack Spain, Mark Wilson or Jack Raper.

Interested students may also call Goldsmith at 8-8073 or make application in writing to the Carolina Symposium, P.O. Box 532, Chapel Hill.

House GOP Chooses C. A. Halleck

WASHINGTON — (UP) — In a close battle that turned on the issue of age and aggressiveness, House Republicans voted yesterday to toss out the veteran Joseph W. Martin as their leader and replace him with Charles A. Halleck of Indiana.

The vote, taken in a secret session on the eve of the new session of Congress, was 74 for Halleck and 70 for the Massachusetts congressman who has been the House GOP leader for 20 years.

There was little or no question of conservative-vs-liberal attitudes, as has cropped up among Republicans in the senate. Martin and Halleck are both basically conservative.

Martin's age, 74, was against him. Halleck is 58 and a sharp-tongued partisan battler, whereas Martin by his own description is an apostle of the conciliatory way to get things done.

There were two votes. The first was announced as 73 for Halleck, 71 for Martin and one spoiled ballot. Two members apparently abstained, since it was announced 148 were present out of the House Republican membership of 153.

In any event, the first ballot gave neither man a majority. The second, and clinching vote of 74-70 meant that four did not vote.

The rebellion against Martin broke into the open only last night, when Halleck announced his candidacy.

It spread fast, and Martin's defeat may have been nailed down in a decision by the Republicans to vote on the office of floor leader in secret ballot.

The vote for a secret ballot was reported at 90-50.

Elated, one Halleck supporter told newsmen then that many Republicans cataloged as uncertain would vote for Halleck. He explained:

"A lot of people don't want to say 'no' to Joe's face.

Philological Association Honors Two Professors

Two professors of classics at the University of North Carolina have been given signal recognition by the American Philological Association, the oldest language society in America.

Kenan Professor Berthold L. Ullman was awarded the society's annual "symbolic laurel wreath", a certificate for the outstanding work of the year in classical philology produced by a member of the society.

Paddison Professor of Classics Robert J. Getty was elected President of the American Philological Association.

Both honors came to the two University of North Carolina classics professors at the annual convention of the society just concluded in Cincinnati.

The presentation to Dr. Ullman was made by the outgoing President, Dr. Gertrude Smith of the University of Chicago. It was given for his book "Studies in the Italian Renaissance." The Latin citation as translated reads: "Of the many distinguished works which our members produce concerning the literature, language history and civilization of the Greeks and Romans this association has decided to choose the one outstanding work each year and to present its author with this symbolic laurel wreath so that all may understand the excellence of works composed by our members for the promotion of humanistic studies."

Dr. Ullman is the eighth member of the society, which was formed in 1869, to be given the honor. Prof. Ullman was President of the association in 1935.

Others who have won the dinstinction represented Princeton, Harvard, Columbia, Chicago, and Illinois Universities and Bryn Mawr College and the Institute for Advanced Studies at Princeton.

Professor Getty joined the Classics Department in the University of North Carolina last July after his appointment as the first Paddison Professor of Classics.

He holds the B. A. degree from The Queen's University of Belfast in Northern Ireland, and the M. A. degree from Cambridge University. This year he is presiding over the American Philological Association which has over 1200 members in the United States and Canada.

Planning & Decorating Committee At Work

By FRANCES WALTON

Decorating dances, planning receptions and serving refreshments —this is the job of the Receptions and Decorations Committee of Graham Memorial.

This year under the leadership of Catherine Carter, a senior education major and member of Alpha Gamma Delta Sorority, the committee was responsible for planning and decorating the Homecoming Dance and the Christmas decorating party held in Graham Memorial.

The committee also arranged the lighting in the Rendezvous Room for the Friday night dances and worked in conjunction with the Carolina Forum to plan the reception during Walt Kelly's visit.

Plans for next semester include decorating for the dance weekend to be sponsored by Graham Memorial Actvities Board in early spring.

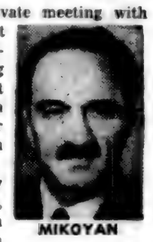
Mikoyan Visits Nixon; Goes Grocery Shopping

WASHINGTON (UP)—Soviet Deputy Premier Anastas I. Mikoyan arranged a private meeting with Vice President Nixon yesterday, following up his hints that Russia is open to a deal for easing Berlin tensions.



MIKOYAN

The bouncy little Armenian, fresh from a swift tour of a suburban supermarket, asked to talk with Nixon at the vice president's office, (at 4:30 p.m. EST) just off the Senate floor.

Nixon, No. 2 man in the Eisenhower administration, quickly agreed to meet the 63-year-old Mikoyan, who holds a similar second ranking position in the Kremlin high command.

The Soviet Embassy billed the meeting as a courtesy call. But most offificials anticipated Mikoyan would plunge into a review of foreign policy with emphasis on Russia's demands for an end to four-power control of Berlin.

Maintaining the fast moving clip he has set since arriving Sunday in New York, Mikoyan sped at midday to a big, modern supermarket eight miles outside Washington for a personal inspection.

Income Tax Short Course Starts Tuesday

"Do-it-yourself" tax filers who want to learn more about the intricacies of income tax returns can enroll for a 10-week night course here beginning Tuesday, Jan. 13.

The UNC Extension Division is conducting the second annual short course, which is open to anyone desiring to learn the proper and legal method for filing his personal income tax return, or persons desiring to prepare returns for others.

"It is specifically designed to attempt to teach laymen the most economical methods for filing income tax returns," UNC officials said.

Teaching the once-a-week class will be Dr. Harold Q. Langenderfer, certified public accountant and member of the UNC School of Business Administration faculty.

Pre-registration is now being accepted by the Extension Division, by writing to Short Course, Box 1050, Chapel Hill. Persons not preregistered may sign up at the first session next Tuesday night at 7 p.m. in Carroll Hall.

An enthusiastic response last year forced officials here to open up two sections to handle overflow registration.

Topics to be covered in the course include income tax returns, exemptions, tax rates, methods of computation; exclusion and inclusion in computing gross income; recognition of gain or loss and determination of gain or loss; capital gains and losses.

INFIRMARY

Students in the Infirmary yesterday were:

Nancy Jean Robinson, Louise K. Barnett, Frances Louellen Hyatt, Jeffrey Lawrence, Wilson Reid Cooper, James Arthur Ryder, Donn Allison Wells, Metford Alton Smyre, Vrudhula Murphy and Charles Theodore Tart.

'NOT FOR RELIGIOUS BARFLIES'

Wesley Offers Full Program

By WES LEFLER

"The Wesley Foundation is not a hangout for religious barflies," the Rev. Robert L. Johnson, campus director for the Methodist group, said in an interview recently.

"It is a place where the church is made meaningful."

The Rev. Mr. Johnson, chaplaain to Methodist students and director of the Wesley Foundation, said, "The Wesley Foundation is not a religious fraternity, nor is it in competition with fraternities. It is, however, made up of fraternity and sorority members as well as nurses and independents."

Serving the campus as a daily expression of the Methodist Church, it attracts 100 to 300 students each week.

1,750 STUDENTS

Approximately 1,750 UNC students list themselves as Methodists or as preferring the Methodist faith.

"This represents the largest body of Methodist students on a North Carolina collegt campus," the Rev. Mr. Johnson said, "But we have no illusion of reaching all Methodist students. We want most to help the few who are interested in an honest examination of the Christian tradition."

The Rev. Mr. Johnson believes that quanity is no substitute for quality. "The most significant thing we can do is to sincerely help several students, rather than to just 'reach' 10,000."

"Does the way we worship tell us what god we worship?" The Rev. Mr. Johnson asked. "Do we want a 'jag' out of our religion? An emotional feeling? Are we worshiping the Christian God?"

These are the questions that pose the biggest problem for campus religious leaders, he believes. Worship, he said, is an ever-present problem on campus.

SIX FOUNDATIONS IN STATE

The Wesley Foundation is one of six such groups in the state. Others are at Cullowhee, Eastern Carolina, Appalachian, Raleigh and Winston-Salem. Those in Raleigh and Winston-Salem serve several colleges.

These groups are not subordinate to any one church, but are independent units under the Methodist Church as a world organization. Wesley Foundations are established on independent, non-Methodist college campuses and state-supported colleges. The groups are supported primarily by the Methodist Church.

SUNDAY SUPPER-FORUMS

Here on the UNC campus, one phase of tht weekly program regularly draws large numbers. It is the Sunday Supper-Forum.

Crowds averaging around 200 in number gather each Sunday night for supper at 5:45 and to hear a prominent speaker at a 6:45 forum. Many stay for vesper services at 7:30.

These Sunday evening meetings, as well as the Sunday Seminar at 10 a.m. are held in the basement of the University Methodist Church. All other functions begin at the Wesley House, 214 Pittsboro St. (next to the Tri Delt House).

SERVICES IN A BARN

Behind the Wesley House is a rustic barn. This is the worship center during the week. Vesper services are held each afternoon at 5:30. Services are informal and last only 15 minutes.

The Wesley House itself was bought during the past year, and was first used by the group in September. Although it is only a temporary building, it presently serves as the recreation, study and administrative center of the foundation.

NEW BUILDING PLANNED

"A new $310,000 unit is planned for completion by the fall semester of 1961," the Rev. Mr. Johnson said. "In the new building will be a chapel, a religious library, seminar rooms and a full size basement.

"We also hope to have a residential area for about 20 men.

"The highlight of the coming year will be the Wesley Lectures," he said. "And again they will be conducted by Dr. Paul Tillich, the noted theologian of Harvard Uni-

Commentary

Eric Sevareied in a radio broadcast brought out two important points in connection with the Cuban revolution.

The first point Mr. Sevaried made was in order to carry out a successful revolution, which was not a palace guard revolt, one must believe enough in an idea to carry through the privations and hardships, cold, hunger, disrespect, and even death in order to see the ideal fulfilled. A person must be unafraid to die or be censured. He added that it was the type of courage that Castro had that enabled him to complete his revolution successfully and that this courage was lacked by Batista, the primary reason for his leaving.

If Batista had the faith in his own rectitude and the will to risk his life for what he believed right, he might have won. As it was, he lost, for as Sevareid pointed out, men do not fight to the death if their sole object is economic benefit.

It might be well for the government of the United States to become aware of this maxim — that the only way democracy shall succeed in this world is if those who adhere to democracy remain consistent with the democratic ideal and do not compromise for any short range goal. To save democracy in the world may take in the future an effort far greater than any up till the present time. Many may die; more will be censured. But if the idea of democracy is preserved and its passive appeal is turned into something alive and vital, the world will most surely be a better place to live in.

As a comment to the present generation, Mr. Sevareid pointed out that the Cuban revolt was largely spearheaded by the youth of the country — a youth as in most countries which is susceptible to ideas, and ready to fight for ideas.

It is somewhat doubtful that a similar thing could occur in the United States with its present generation of "Joe College" social animals, whose minds have lost the spark and who are about as young as a sleeping seventy year old man. Before American democracy can become virile, the youth of America will have to become alive instead of dormant, they must seek ideas instead of comfort. If the youth of America start to think, then maybe the democratic ideal may have some validity. The prospects seem dim.

Labor & Police

The right of any citizen in a democracy to join any group to economically better himself should not be questioned, but when the group is the Teamsters Union and the individuals are the police of the United States, a very serious situation could develop.

The organization of the law enforcement groups of this nation by a group which has at no time shown any real respect for the law is a dangerous move. Ultimately it could mean the control of the police by the underworld in the interest of the police's own economic benefit. In other words before too long America would be crowning Jimmy Hoffa as King James I, with no police power to stop the perversion of democracy into another world dictatorship.

To prohibit the police to organize would be wrong, but to have them organize with a union such as the teamsters would be equally disastrous.

A strike of police throughout the United State is another awesome prospect, one that could promise the disruption of any service to the public.

Perhaps there is no answer to the problem except through restraining public officials from joining unions. However, it would be better if at least a bargaining agency could be set up so that the police could gain some benefits without disrupting the country. It would be nice also if the free trade unions in America would rid itself of the Hoffa's and their ilk. Perhaps trade unionism could then be respected. As it is now, it is a term of opprobrium for many Americans.

Cuban Revolution

The government of Batista in Cuba has fallen amid the glad shouts of rebel sympathizers here and abroad, and although the departure of Batista from Cuba is a happy occasion due to his policies toward individual freedom, the result of the revolution has yet to produce tangible gains for the people of Cuba in this area.

Indeed, Cuba at present is facing the prospect of 18 months under martial law without privelege of courts. It is to wait 18 months until an election. Perhaps a brief adjustment period is necessary, but 18 months seems a little long for a people to wait for their freedom.

As it stands now the tangible gains of the revolution are nebulous. The Cubans have rid themselves of a scoundrel and placed a question mark in his place. Only time will tell whether there is promise of a beneficial answer to the question from the person of Fidel Castro.

The End Of An Era?

Hans J. Morgenthau

It is the mission of the 86th Congress, before it can even think of formulating concrete policies, to restore the lost sense of proportion to the government by facing the great issues that threaten the nation. What are, in necessarily sketchy outline, these issues?

The military danger which the Russian earth satellites revealed in the autumn of 1957 has not been met by adequate action. The recommendations of the Gaither and Rockefeller committees have either not been implemented at all or else their implementation has been cut and slowed down by budgetary considerations. The sense of urgency which animated at least some public discussions more than a year ago has given way in Washington to a mood of wistful impotence. The possibility that the atomic deterrent may no longer be effective because of our weakness in retaliatory powers and our vulnerability because of insufficient active and passive defense and the certainty that we are unprepared to fight a limited war are admitted, and so is the mortal danger that the so-called fourth-nation problem poses for mankind. But what can you or I do about it? Congress can do something about it in two different ways. It can elaborate a coherent defense policy of its own, going far beyond appropriating more money than the Administration had asked for, and while it cannot force the Administration to put such a policy into practice, by formulating it it erects a standard by which the performance of the Administration will be judged. Furthermore, it can mobilize public opinion in support of such a policy. A year ago some members of the Gaither committee met with the Vice President, intent upon mobilizing public support for their recommendations; they must regret now they have allowed themselves to be dissuaded by the White House.

While our defense policy has been deflected from a bold, decisive course by the spectre of an unbalanced budget, our foreign policy has been paralyzed by fear of the unknown. Here the need for innovation is obvious, and since Stalin's death many opportunities for novel policies have presented themselves. Yet far from at least exploring these opportunities, we have been content, by and large, to continue the military policies which had proved their effectiveness in Europe 10 years ago and to extend them to regions such as Asia and the Middle East, and situations where they were bound to be ineffective. We have pursued an unqualified policy of the status quo, defined in narrow territorial and military terms. As the London Economist put it on November 29, 1958, in an article entitled "Stuck on the Status Quo": "It is not so much what Mr. Dulles does in a crisis as what he does not do in between them." However, the rationale behind Mr. Dulles' policy is valid: that any change in the status quo brought about by, or likely to lead to, the use of force can no longer be tolerated in the atomic age. The flaw which invalidates the policy is the refusal to recognize that not every status quo is defensible, that especially in Asia and Africa the status quo is inherently unstable, and that it is the task of statesmanship to create out of the ruinous heritage of the past a viable order which can be defended because it is considered worth defending.

The proper role of Congress in the formulation of foreign policy has since Washington's times been a subject of controversy. Yet in point of fact, the subornation of Congress to the initiative of the Executive is a matter of historic record. Congress can retard, modify, or even obstruct foreign policies of which it disapproves; it is incapable of initiating new foreign policies and forcing the Administration to execute them. But Congress does not need to be impotent in the conduct of foreign policy. It has three potent weapons at its disposal.

First, it can refuse to support foreign policies of which it disapproves. It can do so by withholding its moral support for which the Administration may ask in the form of resolutions or by withholding funds from the purposes of the Administration and diverting them to the purposes of Congress. Congress, if it had had a mind to, could have refused to approve, for instance, the resolutions concerning the defense of the off-shore islands, the non-recognition of Communist China, and the Eisenhower Doctrine. The virtual or actual unanimity with which the Senate passed these resolutions, it can safely be assumed, reflected not so much the considered convictions of virtually all members of that body as the renunciation of its independent judgment and its subservience to the judgment of the Administration. Instead of going every year through the ritual performance of cutting off a certain percentage from the requested appropriations for foreign aid, a procedure which provides no alternative for the Administration's foreign aid policy, Congress could indeed present the Administration with a foreign aid policy of its own by appropriating funds only for purposes consonant with such a policy. If Congress could not compel the Administration to execute this alternative foreign aid policy, it could, in the unlikely contingency of an extreme conflict, confront the Administration with the alternative of accepting the policy of Congress or having no policy at all.

Second, Congress can express its preferences through resolutions which, while they cannot bind the Administration, have a political weight which the Administration would have great difficulty in resisting. Congress has used in the past this political device for the support of Administration policies, and if its sterility and stagnation, of its boldness where it ought to be restrained, of its weakness where it ought to be strong, of its militarization where it is militarily useless and politically self-defeating, of its defense of an indefensible status quo? If it does not, it has an obligation to stop feeling at ease and seeking relief in attacking the Secretary of State and instead to go on record with a foreign policy of its own which presents the Administration, the American people, and the world with a recognizable alternative.

Finally, by thus establishing itself as the intellectual, if not the political counterfoil to the Administration, Congress can become the rallying point for a leaderless and, hence, ignorant and complacent public opinion. That ignorance and complacency, created and continuously nourished by the Administration and in some measure reflecting its own, have shut the American people off from the perilous political and military state of their affairs, on the one hand, and from the thinking of their best minds in Washington and elsewhere, on the other. In the long run, we are moving step by step, as in a helpless trance, toward the ultimate holocaust which will destroy all of us and all that Western civilization has created. In the short run, we are moving quickly into a zone of mortal danger created by the military superiority of the Soviet Union. Yet the American people live in the best of all possible worlds, and the voice of the individual, with no other mandate but his knowledge, judgment, and conscience, has no chance to make itself heard above the euphoric din of the chorus of delusion. Is it utopian to suggest that Congress, bridging the gap between the facts of life and a knowledgeable but ineffectual elite, on the one hand, and the people, on the other, constitute itself a kind of collective Demosthenes, explaining, warning, proposing, hammering away at the urgency of the dangers and the availability of the remedies?

The economic task which faces the 86th Congress is both more tangible and politically more delicate and difficult to execute than its tasks in the fields of military and foreign policy. It is more easily taken hold of, but it requires great political courage and skill for its achievement. It require a veritable revolution in our economic thinking an practices. For the first time in our history, our economic task does not arise from a domestic problem, such as monopolies or unemployment, nor from a limited foreign situation, such as currency devaluation, tariffs or dumping. We are challenged, all of us, not just the watch industry or the cotton producers or the Treasury, and we are challenged not just as producers, distributors and consumers of economic goods, but as representatives of a distinctive way of life, as members of a particular social system with principles, institutions and arrangements of its own. The challenger is not a foreign industry or a foreign government pursuing hostile economic policies, but the social system of Communism in its totality, directed single-mindedly by a totalitarian government.

This is one of those rarest of rare commodities, a Hollywood movie which is not only outspoken, but honest as well; not only exciting, but also artistic.

At a time in American history when race relations are as bad as they have ever been since Reconstruction, it seems theoretically impossible to write a script which is a bout race relations on one level, and yet can rise above that to address the essential problem of the individual in the world. Nathan E. Douglas and Harold J. Smith have written such a script. Working with three major symbols — a Negro, a white, and a short length of chain which connects them—they have avoided the errors fo becoming symbol-bound on the one hand, or superficial on the other; their script is dramatic rather than pedantic, suggestive rather than obvious.

The movie chronicles the escape from a prison van of two southern convicts, a white and a Negro, and their attempt to elude the posse which eventually hunts them down. The sub-plot, less successfully written than the other and tending to underline themes which need no further emphasis, concerns the conflicting attitudes of the men in the posse toward their job.

This sub-plot, together with a melodramatic attempted lynching and a crude seduction of the white convict, are the major weaknesses of the script.

Chained together, the escaped convicts find that their individual survival, as well as their freedom, depends on their ability to sustain each other and work in harmony. Later, their chain broken, they discover that the human bond between them remains, stronger than links of steel. In the attempt to gain their freedom, they discover the limits of freedom, in their shared humanity and in the end they are possessed of a new joy in brotherhood.

The two convicts are played by Tony Curtis and Sidney Poitier, and the latter certainly must be in the running for an Academy Award for his performance (not that he doesn't deserve more significant recognition than that); it is a completely masterful job, touching, strong, and entirely convincing. Tony Curtis has less art, and his performance is not much different from those in "Sweet Smell of Success" and "Kings Go Forth;" but the fact that he has played this role before in other pictures, although it may be important in a consideration of his whole career, does not deprecate the high quality of his effort here, as the bitter amoralist.

Stanley Krafer's direction is outstanding (another Academy Award?), particularly in his ability to present symbols without being obvious — to maintain the surface integrity of the plot and yet reveal its ultimate significance. Mr. Kramer has demonstrated once again that when Hollywood abandons the color, the wide screen and the other pseudorealistic gimmics, it can produce real art.

As a movie about Negro and white in modern America, "The Defiant Ones" has a moral, and it is one not easily accepted today, particularly in the South. Not only is the Negro portrayed as a human being, often even a better man than his white companion —such a portrayal being a damn lie and a personal afront to many a white southerner — but the south itself is not represented as quite the "Southern Part of Heaven" which many of its citizens take it to be. Nevertheless, this is a movie which all Americans would do well to see; particularly those Americans who are supposedly in the process of examining their convictions in the hope of building a better world.

THE CASE OF DR. LAURENT. Starring Jean Gabin. Through today at the Varsity Theatre.

Our modern world has become so estranged from the nature of things that the miracle of birth is commonly perverted into something embarrassing, something to be hidden or snickered at. Last year, a well-intended but sadly abortive column on the subject, appearing on this page, drew howls of protest; probably not for its failure, but for daring to broach the subject of birth at all.

This movie does an inspiring job of clearing the air: the birth of a child, from the beginning of pregnancy right through the actual delivery, is given straightfoward presentataion. The effect is breathtaking.

In part, "The Case of Dr. Laurent" is a documentary which promotes "natural childbirth." The documentary aspects have been woven into a story which is in itself quite gripping, and Jean Gabin's portrayal of the country doctor fighting fear and superstition deserves particular credit.

Those fundamentalists who insist on Genesis 3:16 as the last word on the subject of childbirth will probably not appreciate this movie, nor will those whose sensibilities are so fastidious, so inhumanly hyper-refined, that anything so earthy as childbirth is taboo. But certainly any girl who is interested in her womanhood or any man who is anxious for whatever little insight men are permitted into the business if motherhood—will be fascinated and inspired by "The Case of Dr. Laurent."

Harper's Bizarre

We pause amid our day's activity to contemplate food.

It is our considered opinion that humankind has never devised anything more colectively unappetizing than food.

Take the typical American—or, if you must, Southern—breakfast

The breakfast is centered around the egg. There is nother more frank than an egg. If an egg were shelled, and you in turn were divested of all your covering, the egg would stare you down every time. We have a grave doubt that any connoisseur of the egg has ever considered the egg in essence.

Sausage is a different story. Sausage is as comprehensive as the egg isn't, which is going some. It has been said that in sausage, ham makes the difference. If so, this statement comes from the deeper realms of conjecture, for there is no empirical evidence to that effect. True, ham is used, but should not be shouldered with total responsibility.

It has also been said that the only part of the pig escaping the sausage grinder is the squeal. This is a gross understatement, and can doubtlesaly be attributed to some personage who has never seen the stuff made. Delete "squeal" and you have sausage.

Now we can't say much for grits. Sit down Yankee, you know the kind we mean! But, on the other hand, we can't say much against grits. Grits kind of speaks for itself, in its own quite fashion. Apparently it just lies there, unenthusiastic, devoid of all personality. Actually, that's just the way it is.

There is a story behind toast. It is essentially amoral. Toast begins in the wheat fields of the Mid-West. Nothing could be more All-American. From the wheat fields it goes to the mill, thence to the bakery, and ends up in the toaster. It is subsequently broken into small bits and used to poke out the eye of some in offensive egg.

Gandhi had the right idea.

On Resolutions

The Commonweal

The beginning of a new year is traditionally a time for stock-taking, for appraisal of one's past, present and future life-conditions. It is most of all, perhaps, a time for resolutions.

As with people, so with nations; and in recent days America's commentators and pundits have been busy publicly auditing the nation's books in almost every sphere of activity. Newpapers, magazines, radio, television — all the communication media — have carried innumerable "where do we stand?" and "what can we look forward to?" analyses of every kind of national problem, large and small, foreign and domestic.

In them, as we might expect, a multiplicity of viewpoints on so variegated and complex a subject as the national scene in its entirety has produced a great diversity of attitude and conclusion. Nevertheless, despite the expected diversity of views, there is still an extraordinary degree of unanimity in all the reports and predictions. Almost every analyst of America's public concerns declares an overwhelming sense of urgency at the problems that confront us. In the area of foreign policy alone, for instance, the challenges facing the Western nations are huger and more critical than ever before — and of course the heaviest burden of responsibility in meeting these challenges inescapably falls to the United States, the richest, strongest and most influential of the Western nations.

Western firmness in Berlin has apparently reduced for the time being the likelihood of an open East-West clash in Germany, but this amounts to no more than minimal consolation. Soviet pressure against the West continues to be inexorable and highly dangerous; Soviet foreign policy continues to be positive and aggressive, forcing the Western allies to respond defensively and negatively, in situations manufactured by the U.S.S.R. Recent successes in the United States missile and satellite programs have been heartening, but satisfaction over our own impressive progress has tended to obscure the significance of the Soviet lead in this field.

And aside from this political and military competiton, the "economc offensive" being waged by the Russians promises in 1959 to be even bigger, bolder and more dangerous than before. The Soviets' announced budgets are notoriously unreliable, of course, but it is significant that their spending plan for this year calls for staggering increases in government spendng to expand production facilities —nearly eighteen billion dollars more than the amount spent in 1958.

The West's crisis with Communist China over the offshore islands seems — temporarily — to have melted away. But every report from China emphasizes that the People's Republic grows daily in its fierce determination to wipe out Western influence not only in its own area but throughout Asia. The incredible mobilization of six hundred million people for "the great leap forward" is like an Orwellian nightmare, but deplore it as we may, question the statistics as we may, there is no doubt the Communists have created in China a new and mighty nation, surging to a position of tremendous world power.

All of Southeast Asia now lies in the shadow of this Chinese colossus, struggling against ever increasing pressures from Peiping, not least of which are China's own "economic offensive" and its own program — fantastic as the idea is — of aid to underdeveloped countries. Against this background, the dismal prospect for India, the Asian nation which has rejected Communism and is attempting to make its "great leap forward" by means of "democratic socialism," becomes more serious than ever. India is in great danger of being lost to the West.

Any illusion of calm in the Middle East offered by our policy-makers has been shattered by the recent Communist success in Iraq. Reports from the Middle East agree that the outlook there is for agitation, turmoil—and probably Communist advances. Indeed the whole vast continent of Africa promises to be a focus of world conflict — hot or cold — as the interests of East and West, nationalism, Nasserism and Communism all colide.

Even this much of a survey leads inevitably to a terribly dangerous, terribly grave world outlook. These are truly dark times, and if we are to survive them, with the ideals of life that we believe in, much will be demanded of us. Our success is not inevitable, but if it is to be achieved at all it will only be done with heroic efforts of mind and heart — with prayer as though all depended on God, with work as though all depended on us.

This is the sum of our political stock-taking in the realm of foreign affairs. The conclusons are hard, and they are made infinitely more somber by the difference between them and the conclusions reached by our national leaders. What needs to be done in 1959, we are told, is not ot undertake massive emergency measures to meet the Communist flood all over the world, not to expand the scope and pace of our efforts in every area of the struggle, not to tighten our belts and sacrifice for what is worth sacrificing for. In 1959, our leaders say, we must balance the budget, cut back our efforts, economize here, there and everywhere. And we must smile, we are told, and not listen to the prophets of doom and gloom.

Summer Work Experience Offered Business Students

Juniors planning careers in business will have opportunities to work during the summer with several large companies, according to the University Placement Service.

Companies will visit the campus once again this spring looking for outstanding junior men with a good academic record and a strong interest in a business career.

Most of the programs last two and one-half to three months, require travel and pay about $200 a month plus expenses. Vick Chemical Co. hires sophomores and juniors in business or liberal arts for its sales training program, and Owens-Illinois Glass Co. hires juniors with a major in marketing.

For juniors with conversational ability in a foreign language, Mobil Overseas Oil Company has a selective summer training program abroad.

"The Wesley Lectures were first established by Dr. Tillich here at UNC Oct. 3 and 4, 1958, for the purpose of encouraging a continuing dialogue between culture and the Christian faith.

On the spring calendar, the Rev. Mr. Johnson believes students will most enjoy a planned trip to New York. "The Church in Urban Culture" will be our theme for this year," he said "We expect about 50 students, altogether from Carolina, Duke and Wake Forest.

"Last year 15 students enjoyed a tour of art gallaries, saw plays, and met with the East Harlem parish for a study of their problems in religious education."

This year's trip is scheduled for Thursday, March 26 through 30. "To be eligible for the trip a student must have been enrolled for one semester in a Wesley Foundation study group," he said.

In these study groups, he said, the Wesley Foundation serves its primary purpose: to provide an honest examination of the Christian tradition.

The formation of such a study group in October was one of the most significant events of the past year for the Wesley Foundation at Carolina, the Rev. Mr. Johnson believes. "Six students who don't plan on a religious career committed themselves to four semesttrs of religious study.

CLARAMAE TURNER
. . . guest soloist in production of 'Carmen

'Carmen' Guest Soloist Will Rehearse With Cast

Claramae Turner, guest soloist in the University of North Carolina Music Department's concert version of Carmen, will arrive here for rehearsals with the local group on Sunday, Jan. 11.

Miss Turner, leading contralto with the University Orchestra and Chorus and other performers in Memorial Hall on Tuesday, Jan. 13, at 8:30 p.m.

Dr. Wilton Mason ,associate professor in the Music Department, is the conductor.

The American singer, whose career has ranged from the Metropolitan, San Francisco and Chicago Operas to the motion pictures and from appearances with Toscanini to the creation of the title role in Menotti's "The Medium," began the current seasn with her annual performances with the San Francisco Opera. Last season she won wide critical acclaim for her performance as the Motrer Superior in the American premiere of Poulenc's "The Carmelites."

Miss Turner was chosen by Maestro Arturo Toscanini to sing Ulrica in "Ballo in Maschera" in a performance unanimously heralded as "without precedent in any recent decade." This performance recorded by RCA Victor was the last opera conducted by Toscanini.

Born in Southern California and brought up in Eureka on the Northern California coast, Miss Turner began her career in San Francisco where she rapidly progressed from the chorus of the San Francisco Opera to leading roles.

Gian-Carlo Menotti chose her to create the role of Madame Flora in "The Medium" which brought her immediately to the attention of the international musical world and soon afterwards she was signed by the Metropolitan.

As Miss Turner sings the title role in the first Chapel Hill production of the popular opera, she will be taking her cues from a conductor who has been her accompanist.

Dr. Mason, the conductor, played several concerts with Miss Turner when she made a tour of the South not long ago. It was during this time that Dr. Mason began making arrangements for Miss Turner's appearance on the UNC campus.

Joining Dr. Mason and Miss Turner in the full-length concert version of Carmen will be Joel Carter, member of the UNC Music Department faculty; Gene Strassler, UNC graduate assistant in music; and Martha Fouse, Chapel Hill soprano.

Supporting roles will be handled by Brian Klitz, UNC graduate assistant in music; James Pruett of Mount Airy; Marilyn Zschau of Raleigh, a UNC senior; and Rebecca Carnes, a graduate student from Shiloh.

Professor Says Dollar Is Secure

By CHUCK FLINNER

The recent economic changes in Europe should have no serious harmful affects on the U. S. dollar, according to James C. Ingram, asscolate professor of economics at UNC.

Ingram, whose specialty is international economics, pointed out that the situation contained many "ifs," but present trends indicate there would be no change in the value of American currency in respect to what it could buy elsewhere.

DOLLAR STILL STRONG

"The dollar is still a strong cursency and in no serious danger," Ingram said. "Europe is now in better shape and better able to handle its affairs. The dollar is still in great demand and exports are high. I don't see how we could get into trouble."

Great Britain and nine European nations made their currencies convertible two weeks ago in a sudden move started when France's new president, Charles De Gaulle, levalued the franc by 17 per cent. The convertibility is unchanged.

The converetibility refers to currency currently earned by the sale of goods or services.

It means that a West German selling goods to France is paid in francs but can swap them for the English sterling or the U. S. dollar to buy goods in those countries. Under the former system the francs would have to be spent in France.

BALANCE

A balance can be maintained by others buying francs in order to import goods from France. There is no restriction on the amount convertible. The change facilitates free trade in the European common market.

Ingram pointed out that if exporters continued to convert francs and there were no demand for them on the market it could cause a run on the currency reserves of France which would jeopardize the French government. He expressed doubt that such a run would occur.

He indicated, however, that the success of France depends on the De Gaulle government preventing devaluation of the franc tends to further inflation. The 17 per cent caused an increase in prices of goods bought with the earlier franc, Ingram said. The worker would then demand higher wages and the vicious circle could lead to a serious inflation. De Gaulle has pledged to hold the demands down in order to stabilize the French economic system.

NINE NATIONS

The nine European nations which joined Great Britain are France, Luxembourg, Denmark, Norway, Sweden, Belgium, West Germany, the Netherlands and Italy.

Ingram added that another important factor involved in the shift would be England's attractiveness as a banking nation. The U. S. has long been a strong banking center of the world, but if England's banking attractivness is increased by the convertibility of sterling some currency could be drawn from the U. S., but the amount would be negligible, he added.

"If inflation should grasp the U. S. and continue, the dollar might be harmed," he said. Up to now the currencies of the world have all been rising.

NEW SPARKPLUG—Carolina's once-beaten Tar Heels have found a new sparkplug in big Lee Shaffer. Shaffer hit 21 points against Michigan State and 26 against Cincinnati. He was named to the all-Tournament team.

Richter Tops ACC Statistics

GREENSBORO (AP)—Senior John Richter, North Carolina State's 6-foot-8 center who is also a straight-A nuclear engineereing student, is setting the individual scoring and rebounding pace in the Atlantic Coast Conference for the second straight week.

Richter, whose brilliant performance led the Wolfpack to the Dixie Classic tournament crown last week and to a second-ranked position among the nation's basketball powers, is manufacturing points at the rate of 18.6 a game and rebounding at the rate of 14.8 recoveries a game.

According to ACC Service Bureau compilations through games of last Saturday night, only one man, North Carolina's York Larese, is closely challenging Richter in point-making and he does not have a close pursuer in rebounding.

Larese, a 6-foot-4 sophomore, is averaging 17.4 points to rank second to Richter in the scoring race, Sophomore Howard Hurt of Duke is third at 15.9 points a game, Lou Pucillo of N. C. State is fourth at 15.4 and Jay McKenzie of Virginia is fifth at 15.3.

Mike Callahan of South Carolina is second in rebounding with 11 recoveries per contest, with George Stepanovich of N. C. State third at 10.9 and Hurt fourth at 10.1.

Larese and teammate Lee Shaffer, the No. 6 scorer with a 14.7-point average, are the ranking shooters within the ACC after five weeks of action, Larese has hit on 59 of 116 shots, most of them from the outside, for a remarkable accuracy mark of 50.9 per cent. Shaffer, the No. 2 field goal shooter at 48.1 per cent, tops the free throw shooters with 30 for 36 and 83.3 per cent.

Bill Warren of Clemson 81.1 per cent and Paul Adkins of Virginia 80.6 per cent trail Shaffer in free throw accuracy. Don Carver of Clemson is third in field goal accuracy at 47.4 per cent.

The Atlantic Coast Conference has made such a name for itself that many of the opposing teams around the nation would rather just forget it exists. N. C. State, ranked number 2, and Carolina, ranked number 3, head the list. Each has lost but one game; State winning 9 while the Tar Heels have swept 8.

The flag chase in this conference, which was viewed before the season began as a possible 4 or 5 team dog-fight, is still torrid as ever. It looks like, however, that only two teams have the horses to bring home the bacon in March.

They would be State's Wolffpack and Carolina's Tar Heels. Virginia, earlier regarded as a darkhorse, has flopped miserably. The Cavaliers have yet to win a conference game. Maryland, last year's champ, is in third place with a 2-1 loop mark, but the Terps' overall record is a paltry 3-5.

Wake Forest to date has been even worse than expected. Duke's oncoming sophomores must be noted as the surprise team of the lower echelon. South Carolina and Clemson? Well . . .

Pack Still On Probation

This rather hasty process of elimination leaves only 2 squads on the list, Carolina and State. A fact just entering some heads around the league is that the Pack is still in the middle of a 4-year NCAA probation. That means that the team that comes in second will earn the right to represent the ACC in the NCAA playoffs.

The real eye-opener of the conference, if not the entire nation, is Carolina. The Tar Heels have lost but one game, which they should have won, with a combination of two sophs, and three juniors leading the way to an 8-1 record.

And the surprise team has some surprising players: about 8. Nearly every player on the Tar Heel squad, man for man, is performing far above what everyone expected.

The most improved? Well, so far it has been a dead heat between the two big guys, Lee Shaffer and Dick Kepley. Kepley's aggressive, heads-up play has fans wondering if he is in truth the same shy boy of last year's team. Shaffer's improved rebounding and shooting is just as remarkable.

Sophs Come Through

A pair of sophs, York Larese and Doug Moe, are playing like they were born on a basketball court. Larese is one of the deadliest outside shots anywhere and Moe's passing has been just short of phenomenal.

The fifth man, Harvey Salz, fills his position of quarterback well. Salz has yet to have a really big night, but it will come, without doubt.

The bench, with Danny Lotz, Ray Stanley, John Crotty, and Lou Brown fill in more than adequately when needed.

Another name is to be added to those above in the near future. Hugh Donahue, a 6-8 sophomore who has been held out until now, may see action in the near future. Donahue, a kid with one of the smoothest hooks around, is presently recovering from an ankle injury suffered in practice, but Coach Frank McGuire says he will use Donahue if he is needed.

Shaffer On All-Tourney

It was a great honor for Lee Shaffer to be named to the All-Dixie Classic first team along wth Lou Pucillo, John Richter, John Green, and the great Oscar Robertson. York Larese rated second team honors.

Shaffer suffered an ankle injury in the Notre Dame contest last Saturday and appeared to be badly hurt. He was carried to the dressing room, but returned to the game after intermission to continue as top scorer. Tar Heel fans were holding their collective breath for a while, but Shaffer is completely healed and ready to go.

Wrestlers Meet State Today

Carolina's varsity wrestlers, who captured their first win of the season by beating Davidson just before the Christmas holidays, spring back into action today when they journey to Raleigh to meet N. C. State.

The Tar Heels dropped their first two decisions, to Washington and Lee and Virginia, before snapping back to whip Davidson 17-9 Dec. 18.

157 pounder Ray Russel, who emerged from the Davidson match with the only pin of the night, leads a host of veterans in the Tar Heels' second ACC scrap.

Although two of the starting lineup were missing for the Davidson encounter, the squad should be at full strength for today's match with the Wolfpack.

The probable starting lineup for Carolina is:

123—Curt Champlin; 130—Dick Hutson; 137—Perrin Henderson; 147 — Mike Welborn; 157 — Ray Russel; 167—Paul Atckinson; 177 — John Matney; heavyweight — Larry Hayes.

Tar Heels Meet Deacs Here Tonight

By RUSTY HAMMOND

After a highly successful holiday period, which left them with an 8-1 record and ranked third in the nation, Carolina's Tar Heels reutrn home tonight to meet always tough Wake Forest at 8:00 in Woollen Gym. The game will be broadvised by WUNC-TV.

A Tar Heel victory would put Carolina back into a tie for the top in the red-hot ACC race. The Heels are currently 3-0 in conference, while State Colege owns a 4-0 mark.

Wake Forest is currently 2-3 in the league, with a 5-6 overall slate.

Last Saturday, while Carolina was methodically overpowering Notre Dame in the Charlotte Colliseum, Wake Forest was whipping Clemson 57-47 in Winston-Salem.

Deacs Dropped Last Game

The Deacs dropped their last contest, Monday night, to Duke's inspired sophomores by the scant margin of 58-57. Duke's John Frye hit a lay-up with 7 seconds left to provide the Devils with the win. Frye's basket offset Charlie Forte's free throw which has put the Deacons ahead.

Carolina has been the ACC's surprise package of the season so far, and the Tar Heels rank third in the nation behind State and Kentucky.

Larese Leads Scoring

York Larese, the sophomore guard who was out all last season with a knee injury, leads the Carolinians in scoring with a 17.4 average. Larese is second high scorer in the conference, led only by State's John Richter.

Three more Tar Heels are averaging in double figures: Lee Shaffer at 14.7, Harvey Salz at 12.8, and Dick Kepley at 12.4. Shaffer was named to the all-Tournament team in the Dixie Classic; Larese was selected on the second team.

Wake Forest's slow, deliberate offense is centered around big pivot man Dave Budd. Budd is currently averaging 14.6 per game. George Ritchie is another Deac star, with a flat trajectory jump shot that goes in more than it doesn't.

Pushed Terps Before Losing

Wake Forest's best effort of the year so far was in a losing cause, when the pushed defending ACC champ Maryland right down to the wire befofre losing 68-65.

Carolina's best performance came in the Dixie Classic, when they upset top-ranked Cincinnati 90-88 in the final round.

The meeting will be held at 1 p.m. at the Carolina Inn.

Morehead Gallery Features 'Formalized Expressionism'

A North Carolina art teacher whose paintings have won state awards are being exhibited in the North Gallery of the Morehead Building.

In the second show of its series on North Carolina artists, the University Art League is sponsoring the exhibit of paintings by John Gordon, award winner in the recent Annual North Carolina Artists Exhibition at the Museum of Art in Raleigh.

In addition to his paintings in the North Gallery, Gordon has four paintings in the Award Winners Show at the Raleigh Art Museum.

An art instructor at Eastern Carolina College in Greenville, Gordon has said that most of his time not taken up with teaching duties is spent in the studio.

Gordon's paintings are influenced by many and varied artists, but he said the one painter-forebear would be Goya.

He has described his paintings as "a kind of formalized Expressionism; that is, more structured rather than action painting."

Born in St. Joseph, Mo., Gordon did his undergraduate wrk at the University of Kentucky and received his Master of Fine Arts degree at the State University of Iowa.

Gordon's paintings in the North Gallery will be on exhibit through Feb. 1.

Phi Elects John Brooks To Second Term In Chair

John Brooks, a senior from Greenville, was chosen president of the Philanthropic Literary Society for his second straight term Tuesday night.

Rep. Brooks was opposed in his bid for reelection by Rep. Don Jacobs, former president pro tem. In comments made after the vote, Brooks said he would work for a larger membership and better participation in debates.

Rep. David Matthews was elected president pro tempore of the Society by acclamation. Rep. Matthews declared he would work for better bills for debate. Other officers chosen by acclamation were Stan Black, parliamentarian and Maurice Glenn Johnson, critic and representative to the Forensic Council.

Rep. Hobart Steele who had been initiated into the Phi earlier in the evening, defeated Roger Foushee for the office of sergeant-at-arms. Another new member, Rep. Virginia Lee Arbogast, was chosen clerk by acclamation.

Prior to the election of officers the Phi held a reading night, in which about eight poems and papers were read. It was announced that the inauguration of the president and other officers will be held at the first meeting in February.

Both Parties Plan Caucuses This Evening

Sophomore Has Exhibit In Morehead

A UNC sophomore who has been painting oils for two years "just as a hobby" now has 15 oils on exhibit in the Morehead Building's South Room.

Philip Fraley from Bristol, Va., in his few years as an artist has already had one other exhibit and has won mention in an art festival.

"Old Woman's Hand," a 24 by 30 inch oil painting, won third place in the Virginia Highlands Art Festival last summer. This painting, showing the hands of an old woman, is included in the Morehead Building's exhibit.

Most of Fraley's paintings, as the "Old Woman's Hand," are character studies. The subjects for his oils come from actual subjects, from magazines and some from his imagination.

Finding subjects is the hardest task for Fraley, who said that the actual painting takes considerably less time. He usually finishes a painting in one day.

Fraley's oils will be on exhibit until Jan. 23 in the South Room, which is open weekdays from 2 to 5 p.m. and 7:30 to 10 p.m.

His first exhibit was at King College in Bristol, Tenn., during the Thanksgiving holidays.

YOU GOTTA KNOW THE ROPES

It Takes Skill To Ring Dem Bells

By RON SHUMATE

The tones of "Hark the Sound" rang out through the cold air just as they ring out every afternoon about 5:45.

Just like the mail, the sound of the bells in the Morehead-Patterson Bell Tower here goes through rain, sleet and snow.

Harvey H. Miller Jr., master bellringer this year, forced his weight down on the last note and turned away. "As long as you know the right technique you don't get tired," he said after his daily workout.

"I think Carolina is very lucky to have one of the few carillons in the country. As long as you know something about a piano keybard it's not really too difficult to play the carillon," he said.

Miller certainly does know something about a piano keyboard. The Salisbury student received his A.B. degree in music last June and is currently working on his Bachelor of Music degree. This degree is a "special" one which requires one year of work following the A.B. degree.

He says the only difficulty in playing a carillon is that "you have to put almost all the weight of your body into it. You have to use your arms in addition to your hands."

PLAYING REQUIRES THOUGHT

He said he can't listen to the bells while he is playing. He said he has to "think" the notes. "The sound comes back through the door almost a whole beat later after bouncing off a building."

"The tower feels like a tomb, it's so cold," Miller said. "I have to play to keep my hands warm."

Miller, who served as apprentice last year, plays the bells about 15 minutes a day, seven days a week. He played last year about four or five times a month.

He has to pick out songs in the three major keys and their relative minors. The melodies of some songs have to be changed slightly, he said, because the keyboard isn't wide enough to play them.

OCCUPATIONAL HAZARDS

Miller said he has been bothered slightly at times by wasps hovering over him while he plays. Once he almost choked while playing.

"When I first started playing I played with my coat on. Once my coat caught on some of the levers and I almost choked myself."

Miller said he plans several programs ahead of time and tries to follow them. He tries to play hymns on Sundays and religious holidays. He also tries to play songs appropriate for certain holidays and special days. For instance, he played Navy songs on Navy Day, football songs on days of home football games, and so forth. His all-around favorite is "Ode to Joy" from Beethoven's Ninth Symphony.

Miller says he always tries to wait until just after the bells have chimed on the quarter-hour before he starts his evening "concert," so he will have almost a full 15 minutes to play. He can play about three songs in the 15 minutes. "When the chimes are about to ring I try to play in F, because the chimes are in F," he said. He said the bells have chimed several times while he was playing.

BELL TOWER HISTORY

The tower, which was donated by and named for John Motley Morehead and Rufus Lenoir Patterson, was donated to the University in the fall of 1931. The total cost of the tower was over $100,000.

Built of North Carolina brick and Indiana limestone, the tower rises 172 feet and measures 58 feet at its base.

The twelve bells have a total weight of over seven tons, and range in size from 300 to 3,500 pounds. They are duplicates of the famous West Point chimes.

The four dials of the clock, just below the bell level, face exactly North, South, East and West. The dials, which are illuminated at night, are nine feet in diameter. The clock peals the well-known Westminster chimes each quarter on four bells, and strikes the hours on the largest of the group, "The Governor Morehead." The mechanisms for playing the bells, for pealing the quarter hours and for striking the hours are entirely independent.

CLOCK OPERATION

The clock has a pendulum escapement and is operated by three separate independent weights: one for keeping time, one for pealing the quarter hurs and the third for striking the hours. The clock is entirely self-attending. The weights are wound automatically and independently by three small motors which come into play and rewind the weights when they reach a predetermined position and trip the electric switch.

The clock turns on its own lights at dusk and extinguishes them at daybreak.

BEARS UNC ASSOCIATES NAMES

The names of members of the Morehead and Patterson families who have been associated with the University are inscribed on the bells. The two largest bells bear the names of Gov. John Motley Morehead, who was first president of the General Alumni Association, and General William Lenoir, chairman of the first Board of Trustees of the University. Names are also on small tables of bronze around the walls of the ar-

Opinions Are Still Varied On Ed Levy's Telegram Bill

By DEE DANIELS

When the Student Legislature convenes at a special session tonight at 7, it will reconsider the Ed Levy (SP-UP) bill to send telegrams to Governors Orval Faubus and J. Lindsay Almond of Arkansas and Virginia stating the Legislature's opinion of segregation in the schools.

On the agenda again is a bill, introduced by Norman Smith (Ind.), proposing a single spring Legislature election.

Concerning the Levy bill, Ralph Cummings, speaker of the Legislature, said yesterday, "I am not in favor of the bill as it is in the telegram form. While I do feel that the actions of Governors Faubus and Almond are detrimental to the young people of their state and are a problem that we, as students, sould be concerned about, I do not feel that it is the proper type of business which the Student Legislature should debate.

"The Legislature has a limited amount of time, and I felt that it should be fundamentally concerned with bills which can improve the life of the students on campus.

If the proper balance can be established whereby the campus is not neglected, this type of debate is healthy and stimulating."

Don Furtado, student body president, said, "If the bill had not been passed merely because the persons who voted against it believed that the schools of Little Rock and Charlottesville should be closed rather than comply with federal court orders, I would not be as disappointed as I am.

"In my opinion, however, the majority of those people who voted against it professed to believe that the actions of the two states were unjustified. These people qualify their negative statements with the words that the Legislature should not concern itself with a problem which is not within its jurisdiction.

"Monday a foreign student stated to me that his greatest concern about the student government at UNC was its unwillingness to concern itself with international and educational affairs.

"It is time that people on this campus stopped patting themselves on the back for their attractive student community and began realizing that those principles of academic freedom and student rights, upon which student government was created, are being flagrantly violated, not only in other nations but right here in our own South.

"Those people who say that little good can come from such a condemnation have forgotten that there are many students in the high schools of the South who are trying to make a decision as to what their real beliefs are.

"I think that a statement from a college community such as ours could do a great deal of good.

"Even ignoring that fact, we as students should be loud in denouncing a violation of the educational right remembering that when there is a fire next door the sparks may catch your own house on fire.'"

On the subject, Charlie Gray, legislator, remarked, "I have expressed my views on the Levy bill many times and I hesitate commenting on it again. The vacation has caused the campus to forget the untimely bill and I hate to see it thrust into the headlines again. Even though the bill was defeated, the fact that it was introduced has already brought many harsh comments directed at the students of UNC.

"At times our liberalism causes us to forget the people we have to live with at home. I am still against the bill and only hope that the Legislature will defeat the move for reconsideration."

Election Bill To Be Presented In Legislature

Concerning the single spring Legislature election bill to be considered by the Student Legislature tonight, Don Furtado and Ralph Cummings favor it, while Charlie Gray feels it has not received enough publicity yet.

Expressing his opinion on the election bill, Cummings asserted, "I favor a single annual spring election for the Legislature. Under our present system, much valuable time is lost in reorganization and reorientation. The single election will concentrate the attention of the campus on one election. If all seats are open in the spring, it will enable all candidates to reside on campus long enough to familiarize themselves with our campus life."

Furtado "heartily endorses" the idea of one campus wide spring election.

"The single election would allow the initiation of a training period after the actual election, in which old legislators or student government officers would continue to function but in which officers-elect would receive the necessary training which is so obviously lacking now.

Gray doesn't think enough discussion has occurred on this bill. "Most of the legislators have not considered the pros and cons of a bill that could have a large effect on the campus. My own personal opinion is that the bill creates more disadvantages than advantages. Two weeks delay to indoctrinate the campus will not harm the bill. Expediency for expediency's sake could be harmful."

Play Leaders Plan Meeting On Campus

North Carolina recreation executives will hold their 11th annual winter meeting this week on the UNC campus, beginning this afternoon and continuing through noon Saturday.

Personnel from 35 to 40 of the North Carolina cities with full-time recreation programs are expected to take part in the conference.

Marion Diehl, recreation director for the city of Charlotte, is president of the N. C. Recreation Executives. Conference chairman is Dr. Harold D. Meyer, director of UNC recreation curriculum and professor of sociology.

How recreation fits into the total local government operation will be analyzed by a panel at today's opening session at 2 p.m. in the Morehead Building Faculty Lounge. Moderator will be Okra Hester, Greensboro's director of recreation and parks.

Mayor W. G. Enloe of Raleigh heads the panelists, who include City Manager Charles A. Linebach of Salisbury; Guy T. Ward Jr., chairman of the Winston-Salem Recreation Commission; and Joseph W. Greer Jr., chairman of the Charlotte Recreation Commission.

Interviews For Coed Posts Scheduled For After Exams

Interviews for Women's Orientation Chairman and Women's Handbook Chairman will be held early next semester.

The Women's Residence Council anounced at a meeting Tuesday that the entire council will choose three possible candidates from the interviews. These candidates will be presented to a Campus Committee composed of Men's Orientation Chairman and other campus leaders for a final selection.

At the suggestion of Mrs. Martha Deberry, the new advisor replacing Luann Thorton, the Council decided to invite last year's Women's Orientation Chairman to sit in on the interviews.

The Women's Handbook Chairman will be selected directly by the Council.

Rules concerning coed signing out for overnight stays in the Infirmary were discussed. A suggestion was made that the head nurse ask each girl entering the Infirmary if she has signed out and call up the dorm if the coed has not. A member of the Council was appointed to see if this suggestion would be possible.

Two members of the Council, Kay Ferrior and Sally Ziegler, were appointed to sit in on a Panhellenic Committee meeting concerning Pub Hell swap night, a night next semester when sorority pledges sleep in the sorority houses and the actives sleep in the dorms.

Girls with campuses on this night may postpone them to the following week. However, this does not apply to campuses from Honor Council offenses.

Coeds in the University Chorus will be granted late permissions Jan. 12, the Council announced.

Education

The Russian moon rocket or sun planet has again been placed before the public as a definite indication that the Russians are ahead of the United States in technological development.

It is further indicative of the intense competition currently going on between the two countries to score propoganda victories on technological progress.

An outgrowth of the Soviet military challenge has been a concern with education both here and in the Soviet Union, and unfortunately this concern has been channeled also to a competitive basis.

Moreover the concern with education in this country has been perverted into a concern solely for the development of science.

It is true that education is the big issue in the world today. But this was no less true when Joseph R. McCarthy posed an equally dangerous threat to American democracy in the early 1950's. At that time it was a threat from within and now it is a threat born without.

The need for increased education is acute, but it is not to be based in any sense on the technological competition with Russia.

The United States is not competing with Russia in the field of education. It needs to develop a strong educational system which will cover what the Russian education system does, and do one thing more.

The United States cannot be content to develop technicians and scientists. It is necessary for the United States to develop men—men who are capable of dealing with scientific discoveries, ideas, political problems, propaganda, and many other things. It must develop a rigorous system of education making use of all the modern aids not as a substitute for education but as a tool to improve the educational process.

The United States needs a committment to education not for Russia's sake, but for its own. If it has this committment, perhaps the danger from Russia or other external pressures and the danger from the McCarthy's and other internal pressures will be less severe.

Education to build individuals not technological progress should be the aim of the United States. Maybe someday soon Washington will awaken.

Legislature

The Student Legislature tonight will consider two bills of importance — the Levy Bill to send telegrams to Governors Faubus and Almond and the Smith Bill to provide for a single annual Spring election for legislative candidates.

Both bills should be passed. The former because the students of the University of North Carolina should not sit idly by when thousands are being deprived of an education through demagogic tactics, and the latter because it may provide for more mature student government and a definite strengthening of political parties at the University—parties devoted to a purpose rather than devoted to nominating candidates.

The End Of An Era?

Hans J. Morgenthau

The Soviet Union has chosen the economic plane as the battlefield where Communism will win its decisive victory. Mr. Khrushchev has been explicit in his resolution to prove Marx and Lenin correct in their prophecy that capitalism is doomed. While Marx and Lenin believed that this doom would result from a series of world wars, fought primarily among the capitalistic nations themselves, Khrushchev has declared that capitalism will fall because of its inferiority in economic organization, technology and productivity. He sees the Soviet Union destined to surpass the United States in economic productivity and well-being, and by demonstrating its economic superiority over the United States, the Soviet Union will set the example which the underdeveloped masses of the earth will want to emulate. They wil choose the Soviet rather than the American way of life. Furthermore, this economic superiority will enable the Soviet Union to wage full-scale economic war against the United States by taking away its foreign markets and tying the underdeveloped areas of the world to its economic and political system. Thus without firing a shot, the Soviet Union will triumph over the United States.

This total challenge, aimed not so much at our individual economic well-being as at our greatness as a nation, raises for all of us and, more particularly, for Congress the question of the viability of what we have come to regard as the American way of life in the economic sphere, that is, the competitive use, at home and abroad, of our resources and productivity primarily for purposes of private gain. This challenge is particularly acute in the field of foreign trade.

Ideally, foreing trade is carried on by private enterprise for the purpose of private gain. Actually, however, governments have time and again endeavored to use foreign aid as an instrument of national policy. The so-called dollar diplomacy is a case in point. It is not true, even though it is widely believed, that through it private enterprise gained the support of the government for its foreign commercial ventures. Quite to the contrary, it was predominantly the government which used private enterprise abroad for the purposes of United States foreign policy. Yet while today, in view of the Communist challenge, the need for such use has become overwhelming, the government, shackled by ancient shibboleths and parochial domestic interests, has not dared to develop a policy which would make foreign trade a potent instrument of American foreign policy, and these shibboleths and parochial interests have been powerfully supported by Congress. Traditionally, Congress had to be prodded by the Executive to face the issues of the day beneath the old labels and to subordinate parochial interests to the interests of the nation. Will Congress now be able to free itself from these shackles and give the nation an economic policy commensurate with its needs? In the absence of executive leadership and pressure, it can do so only if it develops out of its own membership a group of leaders with the vision, skill and courage to persuade devotees of an outworn economic philosophy and representatives of parochial interests to support a veritable revolution in the relations between the government and the economic sphere.

If Congress should rise to the occasion, it wuold hvae to ask itself not only whether the United States can still afford to have its foreign trade carried on exclusively by private enterprise for private gain and have the government intervene by and large only for the purpose of maximizing exports and protecting the domestic producer against foreign competition. But it would also have to raise the much more fundamental issue of whether in view of the total challenge of the Soviet Union marshalling all its economic resources to one end, the United States can still afford the enormous wastefulnes of its economic production, distribution and consumption. Can it still afford its government-stimulated and paid-for agricultural over-production? Can it still afford the articially induced annual obsolescence of its hard consumer goods? Can it still afford the production of scores of slightly different models of essentially the same merchandise, production which serves no economic need but only the whim of the producer and consumer? What about a system of distribution which has in good measure become an end in itself, a ritual performing no valid economic function and being in some of its advertising manifestations hardly more than a respectable racket? And what about the consumer who had been conditioned not to use what the economy has produced for him until it can no longer be used, but to throw it away and tear it down when it is no longer as new as it is supposed to be? Finally, can we still afford the luxury of thinkigg about our economic problems in the obsolete terms of socialism vs. capitalism, spending vs. saving instead of facing the real issue: expansion vs. stagnation?

To these absurdities the government could remain indifferent, or it could even allow itself to promote them, as long as, economically speaking, the United States could then play havoc with its economic resources and still remain a great and powerful nation. Yet with the Soviet Union using its economic resources as a sword aimed at America's greatness and with our whole economic life having thus become, to use a legal phrase, "affected with the public interest," how can our government remain indifferent to the rate of growth of our economy having fallen behind that of the Soviet Union, to the misproportion between the resources available for advertising and for atomic submarines, to our policy of foreign trade defeating in good measure the purposes of our foreign policy? If the government cannot remain indifferent to the political and military consequences of our economic policies, it must devise a comprehensive economic policy of its own which establishes the paramountcy of the public interest over private gain and convenience. With the leadership of the Executive Branch in abeyance, the 86th Congress faces here a formidable task of innovation.

Even if it had the benefit of strong Presidential leadership, the Executive Branch would be ill-equipped to perform such a task. For the Executive Branch of the American Government has become a cumbersome, slowmoving instrument of government which, short of being faced with disaster actual or impending, is incapable of swift, decisive action and radical innovation. It has become government by committee. Two facts — one structural, the other historic — are responsible for this development. The Constitution has created a gap between the President on the one hand, and the subordinate executive agents and agencies on the other. The Constitution confers upon the President the fullness of executive powers and conceives of the other members of the Executive Branch as his advisers and the executors of his will. According to the Constitution, the President is head of state, Prime Minister, and the Cabinet in the British sense at the same time. In actual practice, the President has had, of course, to delegate many of his constitutional powers. Yet even the most influential member of the Executive Branch, as the least influential one, derives his powers from the fullness of the President's executive powers. Thus, with the exception of the administrative agencies created by special acts of Congress, the Executive Branch is nothing but an elaboration and proliferation of the President's powers, lacking in that intermediate range of autonomous executive agents through which other constitutional systems have managed to assure responsible executive action.

News came slow up rugged trace and rutted trail that they had passed a new law in Raleigh, a fencing law. Old Ben had known it was coming. He'd seen the bottomlands put into grains and vegetables and seen the razorbacks and cattle come down and trample the fields, leave the chestnuts and acorns of the mountain woodlands to eat the crops on the rich lands bordering lower Walnut Creek.

"But, God," thought Ben, "how can we put up fences? Some different to fence them out of a little side hill corn and bean patch. But to fence them in. It would take a man a lifetime to split enough rails. And that barbed wire some use now. There's none nearer than Asheville; it would cost more cash than all the folks have got, all the folks from the gap plumb down to the Sugarforks."

The state men came and the bottomland farmers didn't do anything to discourage them. The fencing law was going to be a tough law;; there would be a lot of dead stock before long.

Grizzled, lean old Ben — he wasn't going to go down and work like a nigger in the mills at Anderson. Not leave those green hills shimmering in the sun, lightly veiled by that ever-present mist that must be an accumulation of the smoke from all the kitchen fires that ever burned in the mountains, full of icey springs, boldly bubbling from subterranean secret reservoirs, where the full moon is fuller and you know it because you wake up and look when you hear the hounds baying at it in the dead of the night. Not leave all that's clean and right. No, nor leave his neighbors who were his kinfolks too, folks he went to meeting with and squaredanced and foxhunted with. There a man figured out for himself what he'd and what his woman would do, too.

He'd quit his cattle and his hogs. Those hogs he had driven by the dozen many a time down to Anderson where he butchered them near the square and sold them to the millhands for six cents a pound.

He would take to making corn whiskey. The finest, fullest ears grown on the side hill patch went into the crib in the fall. Down at the mill he could swap out for a few pokes of barley. The best way was to scrae aside some litter in the horse's stall, put in apokeful, cover it back, and leave it there for a time. The dampness and the heat coming down through would have it sprouting soon enough. The sprouted barley and corn he toted back, way back to a hollow hidden by two sharp prongs that jutted down from the ridgeline. A hickory fire that doesn't smoke much but burns hot and smells good would be laid beneath the boiler. Steam went through the coil, cooled, and dripped into the thumping keg. Ben by tasting and smelling knew when it was ready.

This was a craft, a craft requiring as much skill and patienct, returning as much pride and fame as the Arden potters had acquired for their fascinating mottled glazes, as the Mill Branch woman had gained for her intricate delicate Whig rose coverlets. And Ben's son followed him, learned his secrets, prided himself on making the superior whiskey that was becoming the family tradition.

And his son's son followed, too. It was he who saw the revenue man come over the ridge with a leveled gun and when he turned to run another stepped out from behind the tree. He had to stand there while the sweating, cursing man with the ax chopped up his means of livelihood and had to watch his just finished batch seep into the ground. He hated Atlanta. He hated those austere walls, unyielding, cold, and the expressionless faces of the petty thieves from the flatlands, men who talked dirty and lived dirty. And he didn't know why he was there.

That's why those old places up on Walnut Creek are empty now, why the old houses decay and pokeweeds grow up around them, why the barns blew over and stayed that way, and why only lizzards scuttle around the hen houses.

There is still plenty of white liquor in those mountains, where the voting habits are a lot drier than the drinking habits. Some of it is made from hogfeed and sugar, some has wood alcohol dumped in, sickening, noxious stuff. The outsiders make it faster, make more. They use smokeless bottled gas and souped up cars with tanks. They pay the right people the right amount. They don't get caught. They live rich, fast, flashy.

Ben's grandson may wear a smooth place where he rubs his clenched fist up and down the iron bar . . . . back on Walnut Creek a rotten limb falls and crashes through the rotten shingles on the roof . . . . . justice.

The Yankees won't win the pennant in 1959 . . . .
The Daily Tar Heel
20 December, 1958

Dear Mr. Gans, Ed.,

After reading that editorial you wrote in the paper before Christmas, I think you are wrong. You are right too, because if this country needs anything, it's progress. But then every change should not be considered as such. It's not progress that's so bad, it's just fellers like you that are behind it all that makes it hard for fellers like us to be sure that we can have the right kind of it. It's your kind of people that has given us what we call the "defeatist" attitude today, and especially when you want the other feller to be the "defeatist" all the time. This is bad.

As I was saying, this is bad. You people in the newspapers and especially those colege newspapers like you have don't know the trouble we have and especially the trouble I have keeping things straight with all concerned. Like the man says, you got trouble with a capital "T" which rhymes with "B" and that makes it all synonymous. And besides that, the other fellers in this business believe in progress too. We've had more trouble with them lately than your people. And that's going some.

Now we have other things too. Like the new people coming in, which we try to keep down to a minimum but can't help unless we can get some of the guys who know what it's all about already. Your people don't like that too much either, as I've read, but it can't be helped when we've got to get the job done. And so what if we've got the stuff to do it with?

But besides all this, I do wish you have a Happy New Year and so on, and hope you change your mind, because the Yankees are going to win the pennant anyway, and I want you to be happy.

Were I to pay a nickle each morning for the DTH, I might feel more inclined to agree with one of my friends (I have two), who feels that our campus journal should be "more carefully constructed." But I do not, and I do not.

It is an added source of delight to me, while obtaining the daily news, to read of the "Dixie Classic" (those who know agree it was). My day brightens when I see that the Kansas State basketball team is rated fourth in this fair land on the basis of their "O-I" record, (and this the sixth week of the current season). And does the sun shine brighter on any comment than the Sporting Editor's critique of the big game: "The game was evenly fought until the first half—"?

No, no sir, I enjoy the DTH as it is. Do not sully my day with perfection.

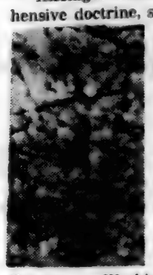
Out Of Joint

March Wind

About one year ago a Harvard political scientist, Henry Kissinger by name, released an important book, "Nuclear Weapons and Foreign Policy." In this book Professor Kissinger argued that the United States must be ready and willing to fight "limited" nuclear wars in order to avoid being nibbled to death by Soviet expansionism.

Kissinger elaborated this theme into a comprehensive doctrine, stressing particularly the fact that Soviet challenges are always "ambiguous," that is, whether it be Iran in 1946, Korea in 1950, Indo-China in 1954, or Quemoy in 1958, the specific real estate involved is really not worth very much, and, furthermore, the Soviets have a genuine and quite legal argument for their possession.



Although Kissinger's theory has never been put to the final test, it has had an enormous influence on Washington policy-makers. The way in which Dulles handled the most recent Quemoy crisis, by indicating unmistakably that he (if not us) was ready to fight a "limited" nuclear war, is right out of Kissinger's book. In this instance, of course, the CHICOMS backed down, and an anxious world never got to see whether a "limited" nuclear war was possible.

All of the preceeding paragraphs are background by way of leading up to the most recent Russian challenge: Berlin. In this great city, as Joseph Alsop has pointed out, the Soviet challenge FOR THE FIRST TIME is not ambiguous. This means that the military balance of power has shifted so far against the West that the Russians are now emboldened to try for something really important. And Alsop suggests that the only adequate response for the west is to make it plain that continued Soviet pressure on Berlin will mean an all-out thermonuclear war. It is at this point that Alsop and I part company. Kissinger, as you may have gathered, is already long gone since most observers will concede that a "limited" nuclear war in the very heart of Europe is a grotesque impossibility.

Alsop's suggested riposte, a statement that we will fight an all-out war to "save" Berlin, is equally grotesque and impossible. No matter how sternly and courageously such a statement is presented, it is a colossal bluff and the Russians (no fools, they) will know it. They will continue their pressure on Berlin, and we will then have to shoulder the intolerable psychological burden of blowing up the world. Dulles and Eisenhower, for all their faults, are not capable of giving the order that will result in DEATH for at least 100 million of their countrymen.

The wheel now takes another spin as we realize that (lo and behold!) the Soviet challenge to Berlin is also "ambiguous." In fact, the one (the only) Soviet challenge that would not be "ambiguous" would be their initiation of a nuclear war. Were the Russians to do this, then Dulles and Eisenhower would have no choice but to sign the big death warrant for humanity. But anything short of a nuclear attack (which could easily be triggered by some technological snafu) means that neither side dares to resort to all-out war.

This still leaves open the question of an appropriate American riposte to this latest Russian move. The airlift, which was such a brilliant success in 1948-1949, is no longer possible since the nasty Russians have installed radar jamming equipment under all the air corridors leading into Berlin. Similarly, talk in some military circles of "armed convoys" is preposterous. The American Army has its hands full getting armed convoys into Little Rock, let alone Berlin. The French Army is 1,000 miles away, fighting a dirty little war in Algeria, and the British have reduced their ground commitments for NATO almost to the vanishing point. No, "armed convoys" just won't do.

In other words, the Russians are holding some very good cards, and sentimental talk about our "obligations" to the "courageous" people of Berlin doesn't cut any ice at all. The alternative, then, to some form of suicidal or quixotic military action is NEGOTIATION — serious negotiation conducted with patience, flexibility and nerve. Since our military position is relatively weak we can hardly expect the Russians to sign an agreement of unconditional surrender. But it might be just possible to negotiate along the lines suggested by (among others) George Kennan and Walter Lippmann, that is, to negotiate a mutual withdrawal or "disengagement" from Central Europe. This could be coupled with an interesting proposal from the latest issue of Newsweek — to turn Berlin over to the United Nations for a new headquarters, giving sovereignty over Berlin to the UN in the same way that the Church of Rome has sovereignty over the Vatican.

Some sort of "disengagement" must be the American answer to Russian pressure on Berlin. The Russians have given us six months (a not unreasonable period of time to think this thing through.

Tar Babies Meet Baby Deacons Here

Dean Smith's freshman cagers get their second shot at the Baby Deacs from Wake Forest tonight at 6:00 and they will be out for a win to avenge the 84-65 defeat that the Deaclets pinned on them in Burlington earlier this season.

The loss to Wake Forest is the only defeat that the Tar Babies have on their record so far this year. In the victory column the Smith's team has registered wins over Hargrave Military Academy, High Point, and Campbell.

FROSH HAVE LEAD

In their first meeting the Carolina frosh were very much in the ball game during the opening half. At one time they led the Deacons by as much as nine points but then saw the margin disappear into a three point Deacon lead at half time.

The second half was all Wake Forest as the Deacons steadily increased their lead behind the shooting of Len Chappell, Gene Loeffler, nad Gene Compton. The Tar Babies lost all hope of ever being able to pull it out when Jim Hudock and Ken McComb fouled out leaving Smith without any height to oppose the taller Deacs.

CHAPPELL BIG STAR

Chappell is without any doubt the big star of the Wake Forest five. He has received a great deal of publicity about his high school achievements and is the prize of Bones McKinney's recruiting. At 6-8 and 240 the big center works the forecourt with 6-7 Compton and 6-5 Loeffler.

Smith will probably once again use the same lineup that he has in the past with Hudock at center, McComb and Bill Hubbard at forwards, and Don Walsh and Yogi poteet in the backcourt. In the first meeting all of these five starters had nine or more points, the only trouble was that none had over fourteen.

Zetes Win Volleyball Crown

Zeta Psi edged past the Med School Tuesday night to take the All Campus Volleyball championship.

In the semifinal games the Zeta Psi team had to come from behind winning the second and third games to defeat the Chi Psi team. At the same time the Med School took two easy victories over the Victory Village squad.

The Med School was the same team that won this championship event a year ago. For the losers their three outstanding players were White, LeRoy and Gibson. For the winners, the Zeta Psi team, Nash, Loughlina and Bost shared the most outstanding playing honors.

ON SALE TOMORROW

Spectrum Features Photo Cover

The Spectrum, Carolina's new literary magazine, will go on sale Saturday.

This first issue of Spectrum will be sold at various places in Chapel Hill and at the book stores of Duke, State and Woman's College. The forty-odd page Spectrum is to sell for $.35 per copy.

Editor Dennis Parks reported that the Triangle Press in Glenn Lennox will deliver the copies today. The copies will then be distributed to the outlets.

This issue of the Spectrum has a photographic cover with Carolina senior John Casparis as the subject. The theme is "Relationships Between People" and is carried throughout the magazine.

The material was judged by the staff on the basis on its adherance to the theme as well as its excellence. The Spectrum contains essays, art work, poetry, short stories and a one act play.

All of the material was submitted by Carolina students.

The Spectrum has drawn interest and comments from a variety of sources. Students and faculty members of this University have expressed doubts and hopes concerning Spectrum's place on campus. Some Duke professors are reported as being "curious" about Spectrum.

A National magazine is interested in Spectrum as a part of a coming feature dealing with "beat" magazines on college campuses.

Ed Levy Bill Amended Referred To Committee

By DEE DANIELS

Student Legislature, in a special session last night, passed four bills, including the single spring legislature election proposal, and sent the Levy bill to the Ways and Means Committee amended.

A bill, introduced by Norman Smith (ind.), to change the student constitution to provide for a single annual spring Legislature election, if approved by the student body, was passed.

In its original form, the bill would have provided that the referendum be voted on Dec. 9, 1958. It was amended by Ed Levy (SP-UP) to be presented as part of the spring election, 1959.

Therefore, legislators now holding one year seats would retain them until the spring of 1960, since there would be no election next fall to replace them.

The governing body voted re-consideration of the Levy bill to send telegrams to governors Faubus and Almond of Arkansas stating the Legislature's feeling on segregation in the schools.

In action on the bill, Gary Greer (SP) proposed an amendment to send registered letters, instead of telegrams, and he read a revised message which clarifies the issue as a matter of education instead of segregation.

The amendment was approved and the whole bill sent to the Ways and Means Committee. It previously had been passed unfavorably out of the Finance Committee.

The solons also sanctioned bills to approve the Medical School Honor Council by-laws and the Graduate Club constitution and to expand the attorney-general's staff to cover investigation of cases for the Student Council and Women's Council.

Ralph Cummings, speaker, announced Jim Crownover as the new Student Party floor leader, upon the resignation of Paul Woodard.

Budget Group Appointments Announced

Appointments to the Budget Committee were announced recetly by Don Furtado, student body president.

By statute, Charlie Gray is chairman.

Other appointees are David Grigg, Lucy Forsyth, Edwin Fuller, Bernie Frye, Pappy Churchill, Gordon Street, Ralph Cummings, Rhodes Corbett, Rudy Edwards and Peyton Hawes.

Of the committee, Furtado said yesterday, "The Budget Committee is probably one of the most important committees which is appointed annually. It is burdened with the responsibility of analyzing the budget requests of the many varied organizations which fall under the cognizance of student government."

He emphasized that each of the above named individuals was selected because "of a sincere willingness to officially carry out his job."

ROOM RESERVATIONS

All organizations that meet in Graham Memorial have been reminded that "standing" room reservations must be renewed at the beginning of each semester.

Organization heads have been requested to take care of this at once.

ABC Vote Will Include UNC Students

By JIM HARDIN

Carolina students are eligible to vote in the Orange County ABC election Feb. 3.

A favorable vote in the election wouuld mean that an alcoholic beverage control system would be established in the county with special stores selling liquor in the now "dry" Orange County.

Harold Walters, registrar for the third precinct of the county, said yesterday UNC students may register and vote after fulfilling certain requirements.

These requirements say that the voter:

1) Must be a citizen of the United States.

2) Must be 21 years old.

3) Must have lived in North Carolina for one year and in the precinct for 30 days, and

)4 Must be able to read and write any section of the State Constitution.

Registration books will be open from 9 a.m. on Saturday, Jan. 10, to sunset on Saturday, Jan. 24. Only those who did not register in their present precinct for the November election are required to register. Jan. 10, 17 and 24 have been assigned for new registrants.

Registration place for students living on campus is Woollen Gym.

Other registration places are: Precinct No. 1—Town Hall; No. 2 — Estes Hills, Elementary School; No. 3— Woollen GBym; No. 4 — Cone Building by High School; and No. 5—Glenwood School.

The polls will be open on election day, Feb. 3, from 6:30 a.m. to 6:30 p.m. in each precinct.

Michigan's Lt. Governor Is Carolina '51 Alumnus

A 1951 graduate of the University of North Carolina Law School is the new lieutenant governor of the state of Michigan.

John B. Swainson, a legless veteran of World War II who was a popular student at Chapel Hill in the several years after the war, is already being mentioned, too, as a possible successor eventually to Gov. G. Mennen Williams when Williams retires or goes to other high office.

At 32, Swainson is the youngest lieutenant governor in the past 22 years in Michigan.

a native of Port Huron, Mich., he lost his legs in a mine explosion at Metz, Germany, and he was advised by doctors to go south for his education rather than try to withstand the rigors of Michigan ice and snow—at least until he learned to walk with facility on his artificial limbs.

That's why he came to the UNC Law School.

How John Swainson fared with his fellow students is recalled by classmates now practicing in law offices in North Carolina.

Lindsay Warren Jr. of Goldsboro said, "The thing I remember most about him was his ready smile ,and I thought at the time that he was one of the most personable 'Yankees' I had ever known."

Wright T. Dixon Jr. of Raleigh said, "John made it his business to be self-reliant in spite of the fact that he had two artificial legs. By this I mean that he did not use a cane, did not use crutches, did not use people to help him up and down steps and did not hold onto people when he walked.

"John did everything that one could possibly imagine being done by a man in his position. We had a law school picnic one year and he played on one of the soft ball teams as catcher, took his turn at bat, and although someone did run for him, got his share of the hits. John could dance on those damn things . . . The thing that stood out most about John was his pleasant and humorous outlook on life. Nothing ruffled John. He had the gift of touching you with his happiness."

William L. Thorp Jr. of Rocky Mount remembers that "John and his wife, Alice, and two sons whose names were Mike and Steve, and an English bulldog, were friends of ours. Both he and his wife are very personable and John was one of the leaders of his legal fraternity."

Hubert Humphrey of Greensboro said, "He was universally liked and respected by his classmates and it is easy to understand his political success."

The Swainsons now have three children. They lived in Plymouth, Mich., before his election, and will be residing in Lansing, the state capital.

Student Council Convicts Three Gambling Charges

Three students were convicted of gambling charges by the Student Council last night in the first trial under the announced crackdown on student gambling.

Student Council Chairman Jim Long said that two ringleaders were gievn indefinite probation for their participation in a group gambling activity. Another was given an official reprimand.

One student tried was found not guilty of having any part in what Chairman long termed the "gambling establishment".

The students who were placed on probation may apply at the end of one semester for return to non-probational status in the University.

At press time last night eight other students were awaiting trial on similar charges.

The gambling crackdown stems from a recent announcement by the Interfraternity Council, the Interdormitory Council, and the Student Council that gambling was against state laws, against University regulations, and against judicial policy. They promised at the time to crack down upon the increasing gambling activity they saw present on the campus.

The Student Council was later given authority to try all gambling cases in order to insure equal treatment of all students charged with gambling, according to Chairman long.

Freshman Class Officers To Have Aid Of 'Cabinet'

A freshman council to aid freshman class officers will be selected in the near future by class officers and a specially named committee.

This committe and class officers met for the first time Tuesday night.

Jey Diefell, freshman class president, said the committee selected to aid the officers in establishing a council was, as near as possible, a cross section of the freshman class.

The freshmen were proportionally selected from fraternity and non-fraternity, sorority and non-sorority groups. Each member had been active in high school student goverment.

Diefell said the motion to establish a council to aid freshman officer was passed by a vote of 21 to 2.

A name for the group to aid freshman officers has not been chosen. Diefell said possibly it will be a "cabinet" because of the manner by which the members will be selected.

Diefell said, "I hesitate calling it a cabinet because it is not definite." The members of the "cabinet" will be chosen after an interview to determine ability of possible members.

Diefell said the "cabinet" will discuss and take action on freshman problems and will plan and promote freshman activities.

The "cabinet" will have a minimum and maxium membership, but the exact number has not been set.

Interviews for prospective cabinet members will be in the near future—possibly the first or second week in the spring semester.

IDC Reports Having Some Blazers Left

Paul Woodard, chairman of the blazer sale sponsored by the IDC Honorary has asked that all students who have not yet received their blazers to contact him at 109 Lewis, 8-9036.

Students needing alterations may have them done and charged to the Robert Rollins Company or send the blazer back to the company with the necessary alterations described.

The annual spring blazer sale will be held in late February.

Communist Front Group Announces Youth Festival

A pamphlet concerning the World Youth Festival to be held in Vienna next summer has been recently released by the newly organized Independent Service for Information on the Vienna Youth Festival.

The Independent Service was organized by a number of students and recent university graduates in the Boston area.

According to them, the Festival is the latest in a series of mass youth events organized since World War II by two leading Communist international youth fronts, The World Federation of Democratic Youth and the International Union of Students.

The pamphlet predicts that "vast quantities" of literature will soon flood American campuses and youth organizations which will depict the Festival as a neutral and non-political affair designed to further international fellowship and understanding by bringing together the youth of all countries in a spirit of good will.

The pamphlet says that a "misleading and highly incomplete picture will be given of what goes on at the Festival and of the motivations of its promoters."

The Information Service has urged that no American attend the Festival in any representative or official capacity, even as the spokesman of a college or local community organization.

The Service is prepared to answer inquiries regarding the Vienna Festival and to provide current information both to those who desire a greater understanding of such meetings and to those who may be seriously considering attending the Festival.

They will provide background data on United States and world affairs and indications of what may be expected in Vienna.

Information on transportation and accommodations as well as other practical data as to means of participation in the Festival will also be made available.

Planning Board Studies Changes In Zoning Laws

The District Planning Board Tuesday night began what promises to be lengthy discussion on a recommendation for an amendment to town zoning laws establishing special use features.

The planners discussed at some length original provisions of a preliminary draft and particularly centered their attention on how fraternity and sorority zoning should be handled.

The heart of this discussion seemed to center on whether it is more desirablet to have fraternity and sorority housing in specified, grouped "court" areas or to examine each individual application on the basis of selected lots and on environmental factors.

It was tentatively agreed that in a area development, at least three housing units be included.

The long discussion almost preempted discussion on other matters on the business agenda. It will continue to undergo study.

It was revealed at the meeting that only one letter has been received from residents on Rosemary St. who are in a fraternity zone classification. An area from the telephone exchange to the Betty Smith residence are in the classification and the board asked them for letters to indicate whether they desired to keep the classification or be classified as residential.

The only reply came from owner Jess Bennett, who said he wanted the zoning of his property to remain the same.

Davis To Replace Samuel Selden

Harry E. Davis, who directed "Look Homeward Angel," will be acting chairman of the Department of Dramatic Arts for the coming semester.

Davis is replacing Samuel Selden, former chairman and director of the Carolina Playmakers, who has joined the faculty of the University of California in Los Angeles.

From Feb. 1 to Sept. 1, Selden will instruct and work on an expansion program for the University of California's Graduate Division in the Department of Theater Arts. In the fall, he will become head of the department.

Selden came to UNC in 1927 to try his hand at teaching for one year. He stayed for 31 years.

Before leaving, he remarked, "Funny, but I thought I'd be here only a year. I found, though, that I liked teaching. In fact, I enjoyed it so much I just kept staying and I've never regretted it."

Selden is noted as one of the pioneers in the outdoor drama movement. With the late "Prof" Frederick H. Kock, he produced Paul Green's "The Lost Colony" in 1937, the forerunner of numerous historical dramas played under the skies.

Dave Morrah Plans Speech At Press Club

Dave Morrah, director of public relations at Guilford College, will speak on "Free Lancing" at the Press Club meeting Monday, Jan. 12, at 7:30 p.m. at the home of Dean and Mrs. Norval Nell Luxon.

Morrah, a well-known humor writer, writes a Sunday column called "Nothing Ventured" in the Greensboro Daily News. His work often appears in the Saturday Evening Fost's "Post-Scripts." Morrah has also written half a dozen humorous books.

Morrah's best known creation is Heinrich Schnibble, a character whose backyard German causes a great deal of confusion wherever he appears. Several other Morrah creations speak this German-English, but Morrah himself doesn't know a word of German.

Morrah, who is a graduate of N.C. State College, was editor of the State College humor magazine and a member of the wrestling team.

Rides to the Press Club meeting will be available at 7:15 p.m. in front of Bynum Hall.

Prof. Arndt Will Discuss 'Dr. Zhivago'

The significance of Boris Pasternak's Nobel Prize novel, "Doctor Zhivago," will be analyzed by a Russian affairs specialist at a meeting of the University Philogical Club on Tuesday.

Walter W. Arndt, assistant profesor of Russian at UNC, will be the speaker for the 7:30 p.m. meeting in the faculty lounge of the Morehead Planetarium.

The club president, Dr. Walter Allen Jr., announced that because of the wide interest in the topic, visitors will be welcome at the meeting.

Prof. Arndt will seek to interpret the significance of Pasternak's Nobel Prize novel in the context of the post-war Soviet intellectual their son and family for Christmas.

Mrs. W. J. Williams is now making her home with the Harrison Hunts.

Mrs. J. L. Carson visited Mr. and Mrs. Cortez Dean and Betty Jean and Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Dean and their new son, that was born December 15, out on the Sanford Road from Pittsboro, last Saturday.

Mr. and Mrs. H. S. Williams visited Mrs. Williams' Mother, Mrs. M. F. Wrenn of Steeds, N. C., who has been sick last Sunday. They found Mrs. Wrenn much improved.

Mr. and Mrs. Harrison Hunt, Janet and Mrs. W. J. Williams visited Mr. and Mrs. Roy Williams and Judy last Sunday afternoon.

Cold Front Brings Snow To Carolina

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

A fast-moving cold front invaded North Carolina Thursday, turning rain into sleet and snow in northern counties.

The weather bureau forecast snow accumulations of one to three inches for the area, and warned that roads would become slick and hazardous. The snow was expected to end gradually Thursday night.

The sharp change was brought by a cold weather front which pushed into the state while rain was falling in most sections.

The weather bureau said the front should move out to sea early Friday, bringing improving weather from west to east.

However, it said rather cold weather should linger for a day or so.

TRASH FIRE QUELLED

You Can Vote

Each student who is twenty-one years of age, a United States citizen and a resident of Orange County for thirty days (including residing in UNC dormitories, fraternities, and sororities) is eligible to vote in the ABC store referendum to be held for Orange County in early February.

Registration for the election starts this Saturday at 9 a.m. and continues on the next two Saturdays all day long. You cannot vote if you have not registered in this county either during the coming registration period or during the fall statewide elections.

Your chance to cast your ballot will be given if you will just register. The Daily Tar Heel will print a list of registration times and places for the convenience of the students.

It will be an opportunity for you the students to speak out against the hypocrisy that has so long been a par of Chapel Hill where the people vote dry and go to Durham to buy their liquor and drink.

You can have a hand in bringing some revenue to Chapel Hill so that the main source of revenue is not necessarily the students.

You can eliminate what is legislation of morality by those who say that to overcome temptation one must eliminate temptation.

You can answer those who say that drinking is an evil, by pointing out that only excessive drinking is an evil.

You can make Chapel Hill a more honest and natural community.

You can do all this if you register and vote. The time is now and the beginning of February.

Minimum Wage Law

It's nice to be able to commend the governor of this state once in awhile, and if he is successful in carrying through his fight to bring to North Carolina a minimum wage law, the governor should be praised quite heartily.

The state of North Carolina has too long had its residents working at next to slave labor wages, and if the idea to bring industry to North Carolina is to be realized then some provision should be made so that a labor force, paid well, is available. The standard that should be set as a minimum is a dollar an hour.

North Carolina has long been a state with one of the highest percentage of unemployment. Perhaps the combined drive to bring industry and raise the economic level will rectify some of this situation.

Malcolm Seawell

Malcolm Seawell has been given an award by the B'nai Brith Anti-Defamation league, and the award is a well deserved one.

Seawell has been outspoken and courageous in his stand in favor of upholding the law of the land and in standing up to the organizations such as the Ku Klux Klan who would cast violent resistance in the place of peaceful settlement.

Seawell has done what North Carolina has needed so long. He is a man who has spread the idea of supremacy of the constitution and made it more palatable for many people. Politically this action may not net Mr. Seawell higher office, although it would be nice to think that this would be possible, but great men are not limited to high office. If they have the courage, their goodness will show out from the humblest stations. It is a credit to the people of North Carolina that Malcolm Seawell has risen as high as he has.

The End Of An Era?

Hans J. Morgenthau

This gap, created by the lack of a constitutionally provided executive hierarchy, we have filled by the extraordinary device of the committee system. The President delegates some of his executive functions to Agency A, others to Agency B, and others to Agency C, and so forth a couple of times through the whole alphabet. Not subject to effective control by either the President or an autonomous agent below the President, these agencies tend to develop into semi-autonomous fiedoms with vested interests of their own, which they jealously guard and ambitiously try to expand. Yet while these agencies are in their day-to-day operations probably less subject to central control than, say, a British Ministry, they are devoid of the power of independent politcial decision, especially in so far as a decision, as the important ones generally do, impinges upon the interests of another agency.

With the President far away, functionally always and physically often, with no intermediate body, such as the Cabinet, having the power of decision, and with the business of government having to go on, the agency which wants to initiate a new policy must either seek the agreement of the other agencies concerned, or else it must do nothing. The latter is by far the safer and more convenient course; hence, the propensity of our government to continue policies long after they have outlived their usefulness and even when they have become self-defeating. For the agency which insists upon a new policy must go to war with other agencies, allying itself with some, competing with others, and fighting others still. This struggle for power is brought to a halt by a peace treaty or, more often, an armistic agreement, issuing from a conference called an interdepartmental committee and being at worst an empty formula glossing over rather than settling the issue and at best a compromise among divergent views to be approved by the President. The new policy being the labored product of a faceles collectivity rather than due to the decision of one man, nobody in particular can be held to account for its results, and being a compromise, its decisiveness is likely to fall victim to the cross-purposes and divergent interpretations of the different agencies having a hand in its formulation and execution. Thus if it is not stillborn, it is likely to come into the world with a weak brain and a mutilated body.

This system of government puts a premium on inaction and on the mechanical continuation of safe routines. The best it can achieve is a hesitant half-step forward, with one agency pushing and the other pulling back, taken after months of intrigue, bickering and bargaining. There may have been times when we could afford this kind of government. The times in which we live require swift, decisive, coordinated action, instantaneous responses to sudden challenges. In terms of a single act, especially of a military nature, the President has proved himself capable of such a response. In terms of sustained policies, our system of government has proved itself incapable of it. As long as this system persists, whatever novel policies Congress might demand and be willing to support are likely to be delayed, corroded and obstructed by that jungle of impersonal committee government. In the field of the arms race, the superior speed with which the Soviet Union has been able to transform basic science into technological application and the prototype into the operational weaon is obvious and menacing. The superior decisiveness with which it has been able to take political and economic initiative is less obvious but no less menacing. The 86th Congress will be little more than an ineffectual bystander in the realm of great policy if it does not restore individual initiative, personal responsibility and coordination. Without that restoration, Congress, proposing new policies to the Executive Branch, will be like a man on the platform of a subway station during rush hour suggesting to his friend wedged in the crowd of a local that he ought to take an express; the friend may be grateful for the suggestion, which, however, will do him no good if he isn't first helped out of the jam. Thus the reform of the machinery of government, in view of its ability to act decisively, responsibly and in concert, is another urgent task of the 86th Congress.

Should and will the 86th Congress assume these tasks, and can it perform them? There can be no doubt that Congressional government is a poor way of governing a great nation in the most perilous perior to it; the Constitution assumes that superiority, and political exeperience militate against it. Presidential government is vastly superior to it; the Constitutttion assumes that superiority, and political experience bears the Constitution out. I have myself time and again pointed to this superiority and called upon the last two Presidents to assume the kind of leadership which only they could have given. However, we must come to terms not with a Constitutional proposition or a political lesson derived from the past, but with the political conditions of the day. We have to choose, alas, not between Presidential and Congressional government, but between Congressional government and no effective government at all.

Will Congress make the choice which the situation demands? There is among the leaders of Congress a respectable hesitancy to take a firm hold of the reins of goevrnment which, in view of Constitutional principle and political experience, should be in other hands. There is among the leaders of Congress also a less respectable hesitancy which stems from that misunderstanding of the nature of bipartisanship and of the role of the opposition in a democracy, which we have discussed in these pages before. The watchword of that hesitancy is "moderation." Congressional moderation is indeed a politieal virtue if it acts as a counterweight and restraint upon the lack of moderation of one or the other branches of the government. Similarly, Presidential or judicial moderation must from time to time counteract the policies of a Congress lacking in moderation. This mutual restraint is a necessary element in the political mechanics of our system of checks and balances. Moderation in Congress, then, presupposes lack of moderation elsewhere. But where the Executive Branch is already moderate to a fault, Congressional moderation can only compound the evils of executive inaction and indecisiveness. In the presence of these evils, it is the task of Congress to push not to hold back, to lead not to follow, to go ahead not to stand still. Only thus will Congress restore the political balance which the lapse of effective executive government has impaired and upon which the American system of government rests.

Can the 86th Congress perform this task of leadership if it should be willing to assume it? It would be rash to deny that the odds, on organizational and political grounds, argue against the possibility of success. Yet in the absence of strong executive government, Congress has governed before; it is true, as Woodrow Wilson has shown, it has done so ineffectually, pettily, and on occasion unworthily. But it was then not faced with a supreme challenge to the greatness and the survival of the nation, which either it will meet or nobody will, and it could not draw then upon the abundance of fresh and exceptional talent which is the great asset of the 86th Congress; nor did the people then expect its leadership. Congress has never had the opportunity of roving itself, supported by a popular mandate, with such an asset against such a challenge. Thus we can find hope, and the 86th Congress can find confidence, in the words which Demosthenes addressed in the Third Philippic under similar circumstances to the Athenians, however in vain:

> The worst feature of the past is our best hope for the future. What, then, is that feature? It is that your affairs go wrong because you neglect every duty, great or small; since, surely, if they were in this plight in spite of your doing all that was required, there would not be even a hope of improvement. But in fact it is your indifference and carelessness that Philip has conquered; your city he has not conquered. Nor have you been defeated—no! you have not even made a move.
> By the quality of that move, history will judge the 86th Congress.

"Don't Go Getting Any Ideas, Son"

Loyalty Oath Supporter

Sidney Dakar

It would seem that one of the favorite pastimes of writers, intellectuals, some public officials and all Communists is attacking with vigor the principle of taking an anti-Communist oath. These would-be saviors of freedom maintain that any Communist would not demur when asked to sign an anti-Communist oath. So such an oath is really useless these people feel.

I will be the first to agree that the Communists would have no moral scruples about signing such an oath. But, there is more to this issue than apparently meets the eye of some. In many instances signing such an oath, if later found to be false, lays the person open for prosecution under laws. In these circumstances the Communist will think twice before signing such a statement.

It must also be remembered that in our present age of so many guarantees of personal freedom it is often difficult or impossible to convict say a known gambler, wealthy criminal or a Communist. It is very difficult to prove by law that these people are gamblers or Communists, even when they are known by many to be just that. Convictions have been made, however, by showing that such persons failed to declare several hundred thousand dollars of their income, or, that they swore that they were not Communists. If it was not for these very indirect methods of administering justice, many of the most ruthless men would be at large today. It might be added that the Russians are faced with no such problem of removing people who are undesirable.

But, the guardians of freedom do not stop with this. They maintain that signing an anti-Communist oath gives "... a bit of taint that I'd rather not see us smeared with," to quote only one of a hundred such statements that we have seen in the daily press in recent months. Let me ask you, since when did it become a "taint" and a "smear" to declare that we are in favor of, and supporters of, freedom rather than slavery under Communism? I am all for allowing a person to keep his views on religion to himself; this is a private matter which does not concern me and I could care less about it. But, it is another story in the political field. Political views sometimes cause millons to die and cities to be destroyed. In short, I am selfsh enough not to want to grant anyone the freedom to destroy me.

The shortsightedness of the human race never ceases to amaze me. While Khrushchev is telling American newsmen "we will bury you," we have people over here who start a big campaign not to force anyone to take an anti-Communist oath if it might hurt his feelings. Poor little dears, their feelings are so delicate. It is ironic that the more highly educated people in this country have a softer attitude toward Communist than the average person (as shown in a recent poll). If education does this, I am not so sure it is good. There is such a thing as being too tolerant. It will be remembered that the Romans were also highly educated at the time the Huns decided that it was time for a change.

I have been given security clearances on four different occasions and have held several jobs that required signing an anti-Communist oath. Now maybe my feelings are not delicate, but never did I feel "tainted" or "smeared" because I signed such an oath. Indeed, I felt that it was a great privilege just to be able to go on record as opposing a system that has as its aim that of destroying everything that I hold dear. I wonder how many people in Siberia would feel "tainted" if they signed an anti-Communist oath?

On Georgia's Russell

Russell Eisenman

According to NEWSWEEK, Georgia's senior senator, Richard B. Russell is "one of the most respected men in the U. S. Senate." Senator Russell has drawn praise from magazines which have strongly condemned southern Senators like James O. Eastland of Mississippi, and Russell's colleague Herman E. Talmadge. Those who differ with Russell's views, but praise him nevertheless, feel that Russell is a sincere man who leads his fellow Southern Democrats, but does not indulge in fanaticism.

His recent advocacy of a Negro relolation plan is certainly typical of what many had though Russell was above—cheap politics. The Senator says his plan would cost well over a billion dollars but would be advantageous since it would help race relations by sending southern Negroes to states where there is not a heavy colored population. If Russell is as intelligent as most people suppose him to be, then his sincerity is definitely open to question.

One politician admitted what many had suspected all along—that the idea was to get the wirst Negroes and send them to good, northern residential sections. This plan certainly would not improve race relations, and there is reason to believe that Russell's plan is similarly bad. As a matter of fact, it is very doubtful that Senator Russell would actually favor the bill he introduced if he were in a position to freely express his beliefs. However, as a United States Senator from Georgia, Russell must cater greatly to the wishes of Georgians, if he expects to remain a Senator. This he has done.

Russell is the acknowledged leader of the southern bloc in its fight against integration. He has also followed the conservative thinking of the south in the area of civil liberties, and it was not Dick Russell's fault that a bill to limit the Supreme Court's authority in certain fields was defeated by only one vote. In short, his vote in the Senate counts just as much as an Eastland or a Talmadge.

When the Democrats were honsidering who to nominatt for President of the United States, many said that if Senator Russell came from a different part of the nation he could have received the nomination. It is equally true that if Senator Russell came from a different part of the nation he could make a greater contribution to our country.

A Letter

Editor:

A Judge asked the man he had sentenced to a long prison term if he wished to say anything. The man answered, "You are mighty liberal with other people's time."

After sitting in a doctors reception room for three hours yesterday I could say that Judges are not the only people who are liberal with other people's time.

I was to drive a friend to a hospital clinic in Durham. We hurried to leave Chapel Hill by one o'clock, hoping to be not too far down the waiting list.

When we finally checked out at 5 o'clock I stopped at the desk and asked if I could ask them a question: "Did they take people by turns, in order of their arrival?" The answer was "Yes." "Then why," I asked, "did all the people who came in after we did go in to see the Dr. before we did?" The answer, "They had appointments." "But when my friend phoned over for an appointment she was told that the doctors didn't make appointments, for her to come and wait her turn," I said.

I write of this experience because it is not an isolated one. It is typical of the tyranny of secretaries all over the country. The patient, having no other alternative, waits patiently, because it is too much trouble for an indifferent secretary to check her list and suggest an opportune time for the patient to arrive. I am glad to report that there is one clinic in Durham that does just this: tells how many people are ahead of you and suggests that you go shopping and return at a certain hour.

What recourse does the public have for combatting this situation? None that I know of except to complain when this happens and turn the spotlight of publicity on the practice. Most people grin and bear it, hoping that the other fellow will write of his experience. However, a little orginized public pressure can change most any situation for the better.

Notes In Review

Arthur Lessing

The first part of Mr. Berl Senofsky's violin recital devoted to two classical works for the violin, the Mozart Rondo in C Major and the A Major Sonata of Brahms, demonstrated the violinist's inability to penetrate to the heart of the musical matter. The second part of his concert which included the Bruch violin concerto, the "Poeme" of Chausson and a host of short pieces within the romantic tradition were better suited to the musician's temperament but still suffered an interpretation and performance which struck me as slick to the point of insincerity.

Although the violinist has a command over his instrument when it comes technique, his control over the artistic dimension of the music performed was either vague or non-existent. There was none of the Mozartian clarity and roundness in his playing of the Rondo in C. The violin tone itself, with its unfocused vibrato and loosely distributed quality along the path of the bow (particularly on the down-bow), was hardly suitable for the subtleties of Mozart. The piano accompaniment of Mr. Boris Barere also seemed unaware of the demand of the music.

It was unfortunate that Brahms' A Major Sonata was scheduled on this program as less than two months ago it was performed here by two different artists whose performance, as far as I am concerned, set a standard of interpretation that immediately invokes comparison. To say the least, the Senofsky conception of this work operated on an entirely different level of musical understanding in which depth is understood in terms of the intensity of vibrato, and phrasing is an aspect of bowing rather than the reverse. The total expressive character of the sonata remained on a rather limited scale of dynamics and tone shading. As it was played by both violinist and pianist the work sounded simple and naive, while in reality it is a deeply serious musical composition of majestic dimensions and depths.

Before the concert deteriorated into the inevitable series of silly solo pieces of no musical consequence whatsoever, but apparently designed for those loving souls who must measure music in terms of the most number of notes per minute, Mr. Senofsky played the Bruch Concerto before the Chausson "Poeme" after intermission. Of the two, Chusson came off the better. The Bruch Concerto is a ridiculous wasteland of unconnected snatches of poor taste. In the "Poeme" Mr. Senofsky showed at least the refinement that was missing in the rest of his program.

Furtado Letter

(The following is a letter sent by Student Body President Don Furtado to President William commending President Friday's action in recommending removal of loyalty oaths in job application forms of the University of North Carolina in Chapel Hill.)

Dear President Friday:

Several weeks ago, it was announced by your office that a request would be made to the Board of Trustees to remove the present trustee regulation requiring prospective employees of the University to sign so-called loyalty oaths.

On behalf of the students of the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, I would like to commend you and Chancelor Aycock for your desire to eliminate what is presently a scar on the integrity of our University. Of the three units of the Consolidated University, the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill is presently the only unit which requires that such a policy be followed. This incongruity, in addition to the fact that loyalty oaths can serve no rational purpose but can merely alienate those individuals who dislike such a childish questioning of their integrity, is sufficient reason for the immediate elimination of loyalty oaths. Certainly every individual who is employed by the University will be expected to abide by the laws of our Nation and our State, but, as you have so wisely observed, no additional loyalty oath is necessary to place them under this obligation.

Don Furtado

WUNC-TV's Birthday Show Will Feature One-Act Play

One of the special features of WUNC-TV's big "Glorious Fourth" anniversary show tonight at 9 o'clock will be a one-act play, "The White Butterfly," written by well-known Chilean playwright, Miss Gabriela Roepke.

The ninety-minute "Glorious Fourth" show marks WUNC-TV's fourth year on the air. All three studios on the Raleigh, Greensboro and Chapel Hill campuses of the Consolidated University of North Carolina will be utilized in presenting this special anniversary program.

"The White Butterfly," a comedy-fantasy, was first produced by the Carolina Playmakers in January 1958. Later that year it was featured as one of the annual commencement plays.

Miss Roepke, who teaches drama at Catholic University, Santiago, Chile, was a special student in the Department of Dramatic Arts at the University in 1957-58. One of her plays, "The Spider," currently in production in Chile, is considered a success.

Other highlights of "The Glorious Fourth" include a message from Gov. Luther H. Hodges and birthday greetings from University and broadcasting dignitaries.

WUNC-TV, Channel 4, North Carolina's first educational television station, has been on the air since Jan. 8, 1955.

THE LOWDOWN ON THE UPSTAIRS

Everyone back in the groove? Everyone on a diet? Everyone trying to get rid of that bloated, full feeling? . . . Now is the perfect time to come get fitted in a brand new Slack-ees panty girdle (I guarantee the most comfortable girdle you have ever put on and only $6.95) and a wonderful new Goddess Bra that is the most amazing thing in the under-garment world. (I sound like an "under-cover" agent . . . . come to think about it—I really am at that.)

So few women really appreciate how important it is to have the right foundation — and it takes a lot of trying on and proper fitting to get the most out of your figure—(and I do mean out-of.)

So much for the "under-cover work" . . . when it comes to the "show-down" (the things that show are really down—in price, that is) we are really having a terrific SALE—everything is reduced, including Skirts, Sweaters, Dresses, Coats and Suits. Grab yourself some transportation and get over here quick, quick, quick. These things are going at prices that are "sick, sick, sick." Remember fat or thin, short or tall, Ruth Gordon fits 'em all.

THE DATING SEASON

I have recently returned from a tour of 950,000 American colleges where I made a survey of undergraduate dating customs and sold Zorro whips. I have tabulated my findings and I am now prepared to tell you the simple secret of successful dating.

The simple secret is simply this: A date is successful when the man knows how to treat the girl.

And how does a girl like to be treated? If you want to know, read and remember these four cardinal rules of dating:

1. A girl likes to be treated with respect.

When you call for your girl, do not drive up in front of the sorority house and yell, "Hey, fat lady!" Get out of your car. Walk respectfully to the door. Knock respectfully. When your girl comes out, tug your forelock and say respectfully, "Good evening, Your Honor." Then offer her a Marlboro, for what greater respect can you show your girl than to offer Marlboro with its "better maknin's," fine flavor and new improved filter? It will indicate immediately that you respect her taste, respect her discernment, respect her intelligence. So, good buddies, before going out on a date, always remember to buy some Marlboros, now available in soft pack or flip-top box at your friendly vending machine.

2. A girl likes a good listener.

Do not monopolize the conversation. Let her talk while you listen attentively. Make sure, however, that she herself is not a good listener. I recollect a date I had once with a coed named Greensleeves Bigsfoos, a lovely girl, but unfortunately a listener, not a talker. I too was a listener so we just sat all night long, each with his hand cupped over his ear, straining to catch a word, not talking hour after hour until finally a policeman came by and arrested us both for vagrancy. I did a year and a day. She got by with a suspended sentence because she was the sole support of her aged housemother.

3. A girl likes to be taken to nice places.

By "nice" places I do not mean expensive places. A girl does not demand luxury. All she asks is a place that is pleasant and gracious. The Tomb of the Unknown Soldier, for example. Or Mount Rushmore. Or the Taj Mahal. Or the Bureau of Weights and Measures. Find places like these to take your girl. In no circumstances must you take her to an oil-cracking plant.

4. A girl likes a man to be well-informed.

Come prepared with a few interesting facts that you can drop casually into the conversation. Like this: "Did you know, Snookiepuss, that when cattle, sheep, camels, goats, antelopes, and other members of the cud-chewing family get up, they always get up hind legs first?" Or this: "Are you aware, Hotlips, that corn grows faster at night?" Or this: "By the way, Loverhead, Oslo did not become the capital of Norway till July 11, 1924."

If you can slip enough of these nuggets into the conversation before dinner, your date will grow too torpid to eat. Some men save up to a half-million dollars a year this way.

Registration For ABC Vote Open Saturday

Registration for the special ABC election to be held in Orange County Feb. 3 will begin Saturday.

Election officials point out that only those voters who were not registered for the general election last November need register. Registration for the general election will remain valid for the liquor referendum.

Registration polls will be open from 9 a.m. to sunset on the Saturdays of Jan. 10, Jan. 17 and Jan. 24. Challenge Day will be Jan. 31, when polls will be open from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m.

Meanwhile, pro- and anti-ABC forces apparently are gathering forces for the showdown. Neil Clark of Chapel Hill, who discounted one rumor that his group was about to disband, said a meeting of "dry" forces will probably be held early next week.

And it was learned that forces backing the ABC stores planned a strategy meeting later this week.

A CAMPUS-TO-CAREER CASE HISTORY

Pete McCullough (center) discusses requirements for new telephone equipment with Traffic and Plant Managers.

Success story—with a moral to it

Robert G. "Pete" McCullough got his Bachelor of Arts degree from Columbia in June, 1953. In September, he took a job selling for a manufacturing firm. He was hurriedly trained—and, after 23,000 miles on the road, decided he wasn't fully using his capabilities.

He resigned and contacted his college Placement Office. Interviews with a host of firms followed. Pete chose the New York Telephone Company.

That was April, 1954. He spent the next 13 months training—getting basic experience as installer, repairman, frameman, staff assistant, etc. He was then appointed Service Foreman.

In January, 1957, he moved over to the business side of the company. In May, 1957, he became a supervisor. In January, 1958, he managed a business office serving 25,000 customers, with 42 people reporting to him.

In October, 1958, Pete was promoted again—to District Commercial Manager. Reporting to him now are two business office managers, nine supervisors and 54 service representatives and clerical personnel. There are 64,000 customers in the territory he heads up.

That's Pete's story—up to now. Future promotions depend on him. Opportunities are practically unlimited in the Bell Telephone Companies for Pete and many young men like him.

Moral: The most capable of men need good training and honest promotion opportunities to move ahead as they should. Shop carefully for your career. And be sure to talk to the Bell interviewer when he visits your campus.

Pete is active in civic affairs. Here, as chairman of a Boy Scout fund drive, he confers with R. A. McCaffrey, Branch Manager for the First National City Bank of New York.

Third Ranked Tar Heels Survive Deac Freeze To Win 44-34

Carolina Never Behind Shaffer Collects 17;

By RUSTY HAMMOND

Wake Forest coach Bones McKinney put a North Pole temperature in Woollen Gym last night as his Demon Deacons tried to deep-freeze Carolina's Tar Heels into mistakes, all to no avail as the Heels rose to the challenge and soundly beat the Deacs 44-34.

It was one of the lowest scoring games for a Carolina team in a long time. The Tar Heels had been leading the ACC in scoring with a 78 point average before last night.

Frank McGuire's cool, calm, and collected youngsters just refused to blow up, as the Tar Heels made the shots that counted and was never in serious trouble.

Carolina got the opening tap, but missed the shot. Wake Forest came down the floor and immediately began to dribble around outside, refusing to shoot. Carolina switched to a man-to-man defense from a 1-3-1 zone and got the ball when Olin Broadway walked.

First Basket

With 14:41 left, and no score in the game, Lee Shaffefr broke the ice with a jump shot that gave his mates a 2-0 lead. Afterwards the Tar Heels were never headed, although the count was tied twice at 2-2 and 7-7.

The Deacons speeded things up somewhat after the mid-point of the first half, but still played very deliberately. Carolina left the floor at halftime leading 17-11.

The Tar Heels came back onto the floor after intermission and quickly spurted to a 22-11 lead. Wake came back to 23-19, but the Carolinians pulled away again. Shaffer's turn, Kepley's lay-up and Salz's two free throws ran the count to 35-24.

Caroline got its biggest spread of the night when two baskets by Kepley and a free throw by Shaffer ran it to 40-26. At that point Wake Forest stopped holding and started runing, but to no avail.

Deacs Press

The Deacons pressed the last five minutes of the contest, but once again the Tar Heels refused to panic and calmly held onto their lead.

The victory upped Carolina's overall mark to 9-1, also putting them into a tie with N.C. State for the conference lead. Both teams now have 4-0 league slates.

Carolina outrebounded Wake Forest 29-20, another big factor in the win. Shaffer and Kepley controlled the boards most of the second half, with the Tar Heels getting as many as four shots before giving up the ball.

Big Lee Snaffer turned in his fourth straight high-scoring performance getting 17 for the night. Doug Moe trailed with 11.

George Ritchie led Wake Forest with 14 points followed by Olin Broadway with 7 and Dave Budd with 6.

Wake Forest hit a phenomenal 7.1% of their shots in the first half, but only took 7 shots. In the whole game averages, Carolina outshot the Deacs 43.2 to 38.7. Both teams being rather cold from the floor.

Grapplers Meet Deacons Today

By JAMES PACKARD

Coach Sam Barnes' grapplers return to action tonight against Wake Forest in Winston-Salem in an attempt to even their season's record at 2-2. A win would also give the Tar Heels a 1-1 conference record. The Tar Babies will try to improve their 1-2 record when they face the Deaclets in a preliminary match.

By comparative scores the varsity appears to have too much for Wake Forest. The Deacons lost their only meet of the season to Virginia, 29-3 while Carolina was edged out by the Cavaliers, 16-14. For the Deacs, Morton appears to be the standout at 157. Captain Henry Rhyne and Bill Suttle should lead the way for the Tar Heels. Also in the lineup for ternationally famous horse wrestler" John Matney, heavyweight and Ron Purdy 157.

For freshmen, the encounter marks the first time the two schools have met in wrestling. The match also pits pupil against teacher as the Wake Forest freshman coach is Dave Wall, a member of last year's Carolina squad.

WALTER RABB, BASEBALL coach at the University, is the new president of the College Baseball Coaches of America. He received the high honor at a meeting in Cincinnati this week.

Tar Babies Stop Baby Deacs 64-60

By ELLIOIT COOPER

Powered up by Ken McComb's 23 points and some clutch foul shooting in the final ten minutes of play, Dean Smith's freshman basketballers took revenge on Wake Forest last night in Woollen Gym and beat the visitors 64-60.

For the Tar Babies the win was their fourth of the season and avenged an earlier 84-65 decision which the Deaclets had pinned on them in Burlington.

To take the contest the Tar Babies had to overcome a 26-21 Deacon halftime advantage, and they did just that as they scored more than double their first-half output and got nine more markers than the losers in the final twenty minutes of play.

Eight men saw action for the Tar Babies with three of them scoring in double figures. Big center Jim Hudock followed McComb in the scoring column with 16 points to his credit. Don Walsh had 13 with Yogi Poteet getting 7, Bill Hubbard 4, and Lew Phillips 2 to round out the Carolina output. Both Ward Marslender and Pep Callahan got into the game but not into the point production.

One of the main reasons for the Tar Baby win can be attributed to the dribbling ability of Walsh and Poteet. In the latter stages of the game the Carolina offense began to hold the ball and wait for that one good shot. Needing the ball to get back into the contest the Deaclets were faced with the task of taking it away from the two Tar Baby guards.

This task proved to be almost impossible, and the two backcourtmen literally dribbled their way to victory. When the eager Deacs began to foul to get possession they started digging their own grave. Although they were only 19 for 30 from the foul line for the entire game, when the pressure was on late in the second half the frosh sank the all-important charity tosses.

In addition to leading the Tar Baby offense, McComb and Hudock did an excellent job in holding down Deacon center Len Chappell. In their previous meeting Chappell had led the Deac scoring with some 25 points, but last night he could manage to get only 10, 4 of which came in the last 32 seconds. Tom McCoy was high man for the visitors last night with 20.

With 4:24 left in the game the Carolina frosh held their biggest lead of the night at 59-44 after two foul shots by Poteet. The Baby Deacs began to chop away at this lead, however, and cut it to 64-54 with 1:22 left. Here the Deacs began their rally and although they got the last six points in the game it was too late.

Carolina—Hubbard, 4; McComb, 23; Hudock, 16; Walsh, 13; Poteet, 7; Phillips, 2.

Wake Forest — Loeffler, 11; Compton, 4; Chappell, 10; Facker, 9; Wiedeman, 6; McCoy, 20.

First Gambling Hearings Result In 11 Convictions

By NORMAN SMITH

Thursday night in a five-hour session 11 students were convicted in the first series of gambling cases ever brought before the Student Council.

This action was the result of a joint statement made last fall by the Student Council, Interdormitory Council, and Interfraternity Council that all gambling cases are to be tried by the Student Council.

TWO ON PROBATION

Two sentences of indefinite probation and 10 official reprimands were handed down; one student was exhonerated. The cases were originated by Jim Long, Student Council chairman, who "by mere chance happened to be at the scene of the crime," according to Council Clerk John Owens.

The gambling, described as being of serious nature involving substantial sums of money, occurred in a fraternity house. Several more defendants will be tried at a later session of the Student Council.

With information in hand that gambling games with stakes as high as $2,500 had recently ocurred and a greater number of complaints lately a gambling in dormitories and fraternities registered to administrative and student government leaders, the Student Council has embarked on a "get tough" policy concerning gambling on campus.

"It's a problem that had been neglected for too long. The administration has felt that the increased tempo of gambling has resulted in financial embarrassment and academic neglect on the part of many students who have participated," said Student Council member Erwin Fuller.

Yet the crackdown was entirely student insired; there was no direction by the administration, according to several council members.

NOT 'TEST CASES'

Although the Council doesn't want these cases considered "test cases" or the men convicted "scapegoats" and could not commit itself to more or less lenient disposition of sentences in the future, Chairman Long asserted, "I feel that these sentences might not have been what they were had there been precedents to rely on. We can't say that all of the cases will follow this pattern. Each case will be judged on its own merit."

DEFINITION DIFFICULT

Members of the Council said that they are as yet unagle to make definitions of exactly what type or degree of gambling would be punished Several of the members said they and probably everyone else at the University had at one time or other been guilty of petty gambling such as matching coins for coffee.

Coed Judiciary Councils Have Tried Seven Cases

Six social rules cases and one honor code case came before the Women's Council and Women's Honor Council between Nov. 20, 1958 and Jan. 8, 1959.

In three cases of coeds returning to campus one day late, one defendent received one night's campus and two received two nights' campus in decisions by the Women's Council.

Two defendents were found guilty of breaking curfew by the Women's Council. One was suspended with recommendation that she be allowed to re-enter spring semester. The other was campused until April 30.

A defendent accused of breaking campus was found guilty by the Women's Council. She was campused until Feb. 28, 1959.

The Honor Council found one coed not guilty of cheating on lab quiz.

The Honor Council also voted to allow readmission in the spring semester of two women suspended earlier in the fall semester.

Three new members elected to the Women's Honor Council in November were admitted before Christmas. They are Libby Johnson, Sandy Trotman and Rosemary Roberts. Two retiring members are Paddy Vall and Lillian Wellons.

The council issued a statement stressing the importance of checking a calendar before signing out.

Fidel Castro Has Trouble With Students

By STANFORD BRADSHAW

HAVANA, — (AP — Cuba's revolutionary movement, once firmly united in opposition to dictatorship, was menaced yesterday by the pressures of victory.

Fidel Castro, given a hero's welcome to the capital, already was appealing for maintenance of unity in the tasks of reconstruction.

Seizure of arms and ammunition from Havana's San Antonio barracks Tuesday by dissident revolutionary elements was one sore point with the bearded guerrilla leader.

Maj. Camilo Cienfuegos, Havana province commander, told a news conference yesterday that members of the student-backed revolutionary directorate had made off with 457 rifles, 63 machine guns, some hand grenades and pistols, and 80,000 rounds of ammunition. Lt. Achilles Chinea was assigned to parley with the directorate for their return.

"Why must there be a half dozen revolutionary parties?" Castro demanded at a victory rally last night at camp Columbia, the army headquarters just outside Havana.

Angrily disclosing the barracks arms seizure, he asked:

"What for? to fight against a provisional government that has the support of all the people?"

Orders went out five days ago for the surrender of all weapons in unauthorized hands. But police are having difficulty rounding them up.

Castro declared he would take to battle again if anyone attempted to topple the new regime by force of arms. He appealed to public opinion to check contraband traffic in weapons and leave "the little leaders" without troops.

Pressure is believed to be coming from elements within the revolutionary directorate—composed principally of students—and some members of the Autentico party of ex-President Carlos Prio Socarras, himself a Castro backer.

It became evident several days ago that the directorate was demanding a big voice in the government that succeeds Fulgencio Batista's fallen dictatorship.

Levy Bill Is Amended— Telegrams Will Be Letters

The fight over the controversial Levy bill to send telegrams to Governors Almond of Virginia and Faubus of Arkansas took a decisive turn Thursday night.

An amendment proposed by Gary Greer deleting the entire text of the telegrams and turning them into letters was passed by the Student Legislature in its last meeting of the semester. The bill was returned to committee with the amendment.

While the entire text of the proposed letter was not available, in essence it amounts to a toning down of some of the language of the telegrams and a shift in the emphasis to education per se.

The letter states the concern of the Student Legislature over the situation in the two states and requests the governors to lead their states "in a progressive manner to a more enlightened policy." It finds the idea of closed public schools discouraging and, in Greer's words "requests some solution of the matter; not necessarily integration, but some solution."

As to the matter of fault in the closing of schools, the letter agrees that "there is fault present," but that most of this fault lies with the people, whose mandates the governors were carrying out. The closing "was not a direct action on your part."

The concern of the Student Legislature with education being neglected was expresseed at length, adding force to Greer's argument that the letter shifts the emphasis to education.

Norman Smith commented briefly on the amendment, saying that "it somewhat damages the emphatic quality of the telegram in not mentioning specifically the reopening of schools.

"Neither does it place the proper degree of fault on the governors, who were materially responsible in that they allowed the loud and rowdy element of the electorate to influence them too heavily."

Passage of the Smith bill for a referendum on a constitutional amendment to abolish the fall election of legislature was the second major action of the legislature.

The amendment would eliminate inequities in the electoral system, such as six month seats, and save the heavy expense of two elections and two campaigns for candidates.

Comment on the bill was generally favorable, and it passed the legislature unanimously. The one amendment to the bill sets the referendum at the time of the spring elections.

Student Literary Magazine Makes Appearance Tonight

The first issue of Carolina's new literary magazine, Spectrum, will go on sale today.

Spectrum will cost $.35 a copy at various places in Chapel Hill and at book stores of Duke, State and Woman's College.

The material for Spectrum was chosen by the staff on the basis of the theme of the magazine "Relationships Between People." It contains essays, art work, poetry, short stories and a one act play written by Carolina students.

The Spectrum, edited by Dennis Parks, has caused a great deal of comment from student and faculty members of UNC, Duke professors and a National magazine.

Freshman Class Leaders Plans Several Projects

A project with one of the area orphanages and a spring social were two of several events tentatively planned for sophomore next semester by the sophomore class officers.

Project plans were outlined yesterday at a meeting of the Executive Cabinet of the sophomore class

The five class officers agreed that their activities would be curtailed to some degree because of a lack of funds.

However, the group plans to go ahead with some type project with one of the orphanages in the area and will have a social event in the spring. There is also some possibility of some type of a limited scholarship fund being established.

Sophomore Class President Davis Young announced that the group will seek a monetary appropriation from the Student Legislature. Young said, "until we get some limited financial backing, our hands are tied."

At the meeting, the officers also selected 50 people representing all of the housing districts on campus. Each of these people will be in charge of a dorm, fraternity or town district, being the liasons between the officers and the residents of these districts.

As soon as the second semester starts, a meeting of these 50 people will be held, at which time plans for the spring will be outlined.

Language Association Re-Elects Holman

Prof. C. Hugh Holman, chairman of the UNC Department of English, was re-elected bibliographer of the American Literature Group of at the meeting of the Modern Language Association in New York during the holidays.

Prof. J. O. Bailey, also of UNC, was elected discussion leader for the MLA Conference on Science Fiction for the Modern Language Association meeting at Chicago in December. The Conference on Science Fiction is a newly organized discussion group within the framework of the national Modern Language Association meetings.

'Get Acquainted' Social Held For Frosh Coeds

A "get acquainted" social for freshmen girls here drew nearly 60 coeds and guests Thursday afternoon in the recreation room of the Nurse Dorm.

Freshmen girls from the Nurses and Spencer dormitories and Chapel Hill were greeted at the open house by their class officers: Jey Diefell, president; Eddit Manning, vice president; Maxine Greenfield, secretary, and Peggy Costner, social chairman.

Special guests at the open house included Miss Isabelle MacLeod of the dean of women's office, Mrs. Margaret Jackson, Nurses Dorm hostess; Paddy Wall, secretary of the student body, and Ralph Cummings, vice president of the student body.

Refreshments were served at the social to the nearly 50 per cent representation of freshmen girls enrolled.

Class Secretary Maxine Greenfield said yesterday that because of the success of the social for freshmen girls, similar social events are being planned.

Freshman class officers were in charge of arrangements for the Thursday afternoon open house.

Free Lancing To Be Topic At Press Club

Heinrich Schnibble's creator, Dave Morrah, will speak on "Free Lancing" at the January meeting of the UNC Press Club Monday night at 7:30 p.m.

Morrah is a free lance humorist whose work appears often in the Saturday Evening Post's "Post-Scripts" as well as in a Greensboro Daily News Sunday column called "Nothing Ventured." He has also written six humorous books.

The meeting will be held at the home of Dean and Mrs. Norvil Neil Luxon on Mount Bolus Road. Rides will be available at 7:15 p.m. in front of Bynum Hall Monday night.

Morrah's trademark is his "Katzenjammer" German. He does not know a word of German but has mastered a humorous form of German-English.

Past editor of the N. C. State College humor magazine, Morrah is now the director of public relations at Guilford College. He graduated from N. C. State College and was a member of the wrestling team there.

State Of Union Talk Calls For Just Peace

Comments Vary After Message By Eisenhower

By DOUGLAS B. CORNELL

WASHINGTON (AP)—President Eisenhower challenged a "yes, but" Democratic congress yesterday to join him in quest of military and economic strength for a surging America and a just peace

These were the great goals set forth for the year ahead in a presidential state of the union message. In general terms, Eisenhower outlined a formidable but "sensible posture of defense" along with a balanced budget and war against inflation.

In these days when the latest bombers "cost their weight in gold," Eisenhower said, "We can afford everything we clearly need, but we cannot afford one cent of waste."

The President appealed to the legislators to work with him to keep in balance the 77 billion dollar budget he is sending to them Jan. 19. If this is done, he said, there is hope for tax reforms "in the foreseeable future."

A White House official interpreted this to mean tax cuts, but not before the 1961 fiscal year—beginning July 1, 1960—a period which spans the next presidential election campaign.

To Senate and House members assembled in the House chamber, and to Americans who heard him by radio and television, Eisenhower said:

"One basic purpose unites us: to promote strength and security, side by side with liberty and opportunity."

The President drew his heaviest applause for jabs at inflation and pledge to defend the people of Berlin "against any effort to destroy their freedom."

Comments after he finished his 6000-word, 42-minute speech fit into a familiar format. Republicans offered generous praise. Some said it was the best presidential message they ever heard.

Many Democrats found no reason to quarrel with the broad objectives. Some said the speech lacked meaty details. Others were strictly uncomplimentary.

"A bowl of mush without even a bean," said Rep. Richard Bolling (D-Mo).

Evidently," said freshman Rep. Neal Smith (D-Iowa), "You can't teach an old general much about farm income and expenses merely by his buying a farm."

The "yes, but" reaction was strongest where it counted most—among the Democratic leaders who will have so much to say about how the presidential program fares.

Speaker of the House Sam Rayburn of Texas summed up:

"I hope we can effect economies but we can't do it at the expense of essential programs."

'THIRD MAJOR STEP REALIZED'

Triangle Plans Advance

Gov. Luther Hodges announced Friday that the third major step in the state's Research Triangle program has been realized.

A fund of $1,500,000 has been raised by North Carolina businessmen and industrialists for establishing a Research Triangle Institute to conduct scientific industrial research.

UNC is one of three institutions which encompass the Triangle. Duke University and North Carolina State College will also aid in the development of this project.

The funds, amounting to $250,000 more than was originally sought, were earmarked for three phases of the Research project—a Research Triangle Institute, a building to house the Institute and the Research Triangle park.

The Institute, to be headed by George R. Herbert of the Stanford Research Institute in California, will do research work on a contract basis for industry, business and government.

The Institute building will be named for Robert M. Hanes of Winston-Salem, chairman of the Research Triangle Foundation. His family contributed $300,000 toward its construction.

It will be built in the center of the Triangle area in the 4,000-acre Research park.

The park, assembled in 1957 and held privately by Karl Robbins, New York City industrialist, will pass to the non-profit institution. Its business name, Pineland Corp., will be changed to Research Triangle park.

In discussing the progress of the Triangle idea, the governor also said an engineering company specializing in various phases of missile and aircraft work, ECSCO is planning to build and operate a facility in the triangle.

The governor said the firm, whose main office is at Downey, Calif., plans to make its Triangle plant its eastern headquarters.

In his announcements, the governor praised the efforts of Watts Hill Sr. of Durham, chairman of the Institute's Board of Governors; Archie Davis of Winston-Salem, president of the Research Triangle Foundation Hanes and others.

He said, "This is one of the most significant events of recent years in North Carolina. We have here in this Triangle the greatest potential

'SNO FUN SOMETIMES

Why Weathermen Get Gray

By MARY ALICE ROWLETTE

It cannot be said that the unusual weather in North Carolina this winter hasn't been predicted. In fact, the weather has been predicted by just about everyone who has spent more than 12 months in the state.

The only trouble is that it hasn't been predicted correctly. At least not very often.

Admittedly, the official weather bureau has made a few correct predictions, but they were met with such howls of protest that even they have been forced to back down.

It all began on December 12 when snow was predicted in Chapel Hill. "But it can't snow," said the natives confidently, "It never snows around here until about February. And that's just about once every four or five years."

On December 13, it snowed.

It wasn't just a light, powdered sugar snow that could be ignored, but an honest to goodness, car stalling, snowball-fight-sleigh-ride-provoking SNOW.

The weather bureau said, "I told you so." The natives said nothing.

However, on December 14 comments such as, "Well, this should be gone by tomorrow. Snow never lasts longer than a couple of days around here," were almost as thick as the snow itself.

On December 15, it snowed again.

Accompanying the soft, white flakes were shaking heads and remarks of utter disbelief.

By December 16 people were beginning to become seriously worried about getting home for Christmas and there were mutterings about hanging the weatherman in effigy.

However, in the next few days the snow began to turn into a dirty, sloppy slush and everyone thankfully went home to try to forget the whole thing.

Over the holidays several of the northern states suffered from extremely bitter weather which only served to remind people of the disgrace of the North Carolina Chamber of Commerce and many came back to school asking, "Will the storms come this far south?"

This time, not only did the laymen answer this question with a resounding, "No," ("We never have more than one snow a year.") but the weather bureau got into the act.

On January 6, the weather bureau at the Raleigh-Durham Airport predicted warming weather.

On January 7, that same weather bureau predicted that the temperature would hit a high of 60 on January 8.

On January 8, it snowed.

Snow is cold and wet. It causes colds and automobile accidents and, occasionally, broken legs.

All this, however, could be forgiven if it didn't make such disgusting liars out of, otherwise, pretty nice people.

Gambling Trials

The gambling trials of Thursday night are vaguely reminiscent of the Russian purges.

A few students were brought up for trial. They were convicted and were set up as an example of what happens to bad boys who gamble. They were given sentences, and the Student Council assumed a pious attitude to what they were doing, although they admittedly all have gambled at one point or another.

It may be that the Student Council hopes by setting a precedent to get students away from their paths as professional card sharks and into the paths of righteousness through fear. They may be reminded that the Pilgrims came to America to escape religious and moral persecution.

There may be something wrong with gambling. It may be a disease that can permeate and rot a community so that all that is left is one big casino, but it seems quite doubtful. The funny part is that in a democratic society that avenue is supposedly open to all citizens, since a democratic society is supposed to protect the individual's freedom of choice

However, to the majority of UNC residents gambling is not necessarily such an evil. Indeed, to some it is sport and some it is recreation, and to 99½%, it does not mean the deprivation of an education. To the ½%, it may mean a deprivation, but it must be remembered that it was deprivation by choice, and at the age of eighteen a person is able by choice to make his own decisions. At some time or another he must learn to stand on his own two feet and take the responsibility for his actions. Neither the University, the Student Council, nor any other body has the right to dictate one's own moral conduct. None of these should serve as a substitute mother. Children should be weaned at a young age. Students should be morally weaned before they come to college.

It is still a question as to what authority the Student Council has to try students for gambling. It does not seem unbecoming a gentleman to gamble. Although it may be quite unbecoming if he does not pay his gambling debts. However, the latter is also not an area for the Student Council since the Student Council was not set up as a collection agency.

Student Council Chairman Jim Long has said that the Council's purpose was "to correct as well as protect," and protection may mean the secrecy that the trials are conducted under. Indeed the Student Council rightly reveals no names, but Student Council proceedings are not sacred to civil courts, and the civil judicial can very well subpoena all the records of the Council, use the Council as witnesses, and reveal whatever names it wants to. Indeed, the Student Council's conviction is an open invitation to civil action. This is surely protecting the defendant in the best way possible.

As far as correction is concerned, those who do not believe gambling to be normally wrong, and this group is large and includes the editor of The Daily Tar Heel, the correction serves the purpose of showing that it is bad to get caught.

For the Council to set themselves up as the God figure of the campus and protect students from the evil of gambling is equally wrong. Part of an education is experimental. And perhaps the healthiest experience for a student is to gamble and lose, for he might not be quite so tempted to earn his living in this manner.

Apart from the sheer hypocrisy of the Council trying people for gambling when their own admissions say that they have gambled in one form or another themselves, they raise an interesting point. This is the question of when is gambling, gambling.

The answer they have tried to give is that gambling becomes gambling when the stakes get too high. But, this does not suffice. Some people can afford higher stakes, and some must gamble at lower ones. All who gamble are not evil. Even those who gamble at high stakes are not evil, provided they do not stack the deck, use marked cards, or other devices to win illegally. The answer to the dividing line question comes somewhere else.

The answer comes in the same place as the answer of freedom in any democracy. A person's right of choice ends where another's begins. Thus, it is not the stakes that are involved but how the game is played that is important. Most campus gamblers are honest. They have to be or they wouldn't find a game, a bet, or even a match.

The Student Council has been a very honest group in the past. They have done their job conscientiously and thoroughly. This is just one time that they have stepped into left field to catch a fly ball around the home plate.

The editor is willing to wager five dollars that they do not succeed in driving gambling from the campus. The editor is also willing to wager a bonus dollar that the gambling problem is not as big as the "responsible" student leaders would like to make out.

Holidays

Ron Shumate

Holidays are, as a whole, rather mad, mad, maddening, wouldn't you say?

Now that we've been back almost a week, we have almost rid ourselves of all the nightmarish occurences of the two weeks.

Holidays begin rather routinely, with the mad rush to get packed and get away—supposedly back to serenity. But oh no, not on your life.

The first night you get home you sit up until the wee hours of the morn—not watching the Jack Paar show—but talking over "things" with parents "Things" such as: "Are you getting enough to eat, Johnny dear?" (So who eats, arredy?); and "You haven't let any of those boys up there talk you into drinking, have you, Johnny dear?" (Hic); and "Are we sending you enough money, Johnny Dear?" (Yes, $25 a month is quite sufficient); and so forth and on and on!!

So, after convincing the parents of how virtuous you are, how hard you study, how much sleep you're getting, and all such things, you retire.

The next few days (or daze) you spend visiting and revisiting. And everywhere you go it's the same old story: "Have some fruit cake and coffee?" Fruit cake and coffee!! Aggghhh! But finally you visit some kind souls who don't gag you with fruit cake and coffee. They offer you fruit cake and egg nog.

Following Christmas day, "over the river and through the woods, to grandmother's house we go." And with a visit to "grandmother's house" come the inevitable: "My, my, hasn't dear little Johnny grown;" and "Now, Johnny, you listen to your old grand-dad. You watch out for those evil women up there. Back when I was in college . . . ."; and "Have some fruit cake and coffee;" and on and on it goes, in a never-ending cycle of frustration and utter disgust!

After one of "those" tremendous meals of grandmother's comes the "setting around and talking" session. The men-folk sit around and talk of old politics, old cars, old school-days (again) and how old their wives are. But, on the other hand, the women-sit around and talk of new fashions, new affairs their neighbors are having, new babies, new hair-dos and new recipes.

Finally comes the long-awaited time of departure. They say parting is such sweet sorrow. It must undoubtedly be! You sit in the car with the motor running for 30 minutes, if you're lucky enough to get away that quickly.

And all those last minutes goodbys are enough to make a preacher cry in his beer. They're almost as bad as first-minute hellos. "Now you beg good, Johnny dear." (You just watch my smoke, sister). "I still just can't get over how dear little Johnny's grown." (Aaaaggghhh!!). "Are you sure you don't want some fruit cake and coffee to take home with you?" (Double Aaaaggghhh!). "I promise to write this week." (Well, that's the last we'll ever hear from You.)

After several days of recuperation, you visit some more, receive visits, eat you-know-what, and attend parties which come in rapid-fire succession. And the morning after headaches come in equally rapid-fire succession.

Finally, comes the final glorious day.

You frantically pack, at the last minute; look for text-books you never opened; and again those infamous last-minute good-bys.

After the last supper, you wend your weary way back to The Hill. And all the way back you wonder what you forgot. You finally remember as you enter the Beautiful Little University Village: your best pair of Sunday-go-to-meetin' shoes; four text-books and a 10,000-word term paper; your ear muffs; and two of your riders.

So, Monday it's back to classes. But for week on endless week you suddenly scream out in the middle of the night, as visions (No, not sugar plums) fruit cake and coffee flash across your mental screen.

"Have some fruit cake and coffee?"

The Freedom To Travel

William D. Patterson

No truism of the modern world is more tired than to say we are living in an age of revolutionary change. Yet the strength of the platitude is in its truth. What is remarkable is that change should have become such a constant in our modern world that we no longer marvel at it.

A major part of this revolution has to do with movement—by sea and land as well as by air, but chiefly by air. Only a few years ago no more than 25 per cent of the Earth's surface was readily accessible to the average traveler. Today the figure is 90 per cent. The sociological implications of this almost universal accessibility are only beginning to be comprehended. In the case of the individual, for example, it means enlarging his personal horizon as it has never been enlarged before. For travel, in the most personal sense, is a unique medium of person-to-person communication. Some fifty million people are on the move annually across national frontiers. They are, quite literally, experiencing a new habitat, with all the advantages that increased personal scope has to offer.

But the individual is more than a unit of humanity in transit. He is a bearer of opinions, ideas, manners, desires; he creates effects and absorbs them. He can bring understanding or misunderstanding. In any event, he is now a major factor in the relationship among nations. Anything that interferes with his freedom of movement, therefore, not only runs counter to the dominant trend of living history but interferes with his potential usefulness. Indeed, to the basic American freedoms we must now add the freedom to travel. And any interference with the freedom to travel should concern the American people to no less an extent than interference with speech, press, religion, or assembly.

Yet the freedom of men to travel is being restricted in this country and elsewhere by the unwise actions of various governments, even as official policies in support of travel are widely and earnestly promulgated. In many cases, governments preach an open universe, but bureaucrats practice a closed world. In an official report to President Eisenhower on international travel, Clarence B. Randall, Special Assistant to the President, declared after several months' intensive study of U. S. tourism abroad:

"I hold the strong conviction that tourism has deep significance for the people of the modern world, and that the benefits of travel can contribute to the cause of peace through improvement not only in terms of economic advancement but with respect to our political, cultural, and social relationships as well.

"The freedom to travel is a dramatic freedom. It is a unique instrument of friendly, peaceful communication among the peoples of the earth . . .

"The United States could exercise no more powerful influence in behalf of peace than to display strong leadership in promoting through travel the interchange of friendly visits among the peoples of the world."

President Eisenhower himself has spoken out clearly on the power of travel to promote understanding within the community of nations. Yet the State Department has withheld passports from U. S. citizens when it disapproved of their political views, has banned visits fo countries it disapproves of, and has delayed the issuance of visas to friendly visitors from abroad until they despair of ever coming to the U. S., or finally arrive in a mood of angry frustration.

Unrepentant in the face of a recent Supreme Court decision that passports cannot be withheld from U. S. citizens simply because the Department believes they are Communists or otherwise is displeased with their political associations, the officials at State have requested Congress with the utmost urgency to pass legislation specifically authorizing the Departdent to withhold pasports at its own discretion.

The International Union of Official Tourist Organization (IUOTO), the world parliament of travel to which all leading tourist countries belong, has strongly protested impediments to the freedom to travel. The IUOTO has called upon the Economic and Social Council of the United Nations to summon a global conference on reducing all barriers to free travel.

All Americans, beautiful or ugly, should be at liberty to carry their particular image of America abroad—whether the State Department approves of that particular image or not. This image will be a varied one, or we are an enormously varied people. Our strength lies in the variety, not in any official image, processed, sterilized, and certified by a Federal agency. The travel industry, led by the IUOTO and The American Society of Travel Agents (ASTA), is aware of this strength and should be encouraged to support it.

Freedom for one should be freedom for all. Freedom to travel should be the right, not only of all Americans anxious to know the world around them firsthand, but of all visitors from abroad who would like to see the United States in order to learn in the words of President Eisenhower, that we truly are "a friendly nation and one dedicated to the search for world peace and to the promotion of the well-being and security of the community of nations."

The U. S. travel industry, as a prime agent of this contemorary revolution in international communication among the peoples of the earth, should resolve during 1959 to enlarge the freedom to travel and to defend the peaceful tourist against all who, for either political, economic, or security reasons, would restrict his free movement around the globe. Travel as a force for education in world citizenship and for peace and understanding among all nations, is a standard to which men of good will everywhere can repair. —The Saturday Review

Conspiracy

The Nation

Little Rock and Johannesburg, Arkansas and the Union of South Africa: the parallel is even closer than Anthony Sampson suggests. Governor Faubus and his merry men have now made the last desperate gamble of all racist demagogues—they have decided to make integration synonymous with communism. The Arkansas State Legislative Council, protected by armed state troopers, has been holding hearings in Little Rock to "prove" the predetermined proposition that "racial unrest" in that city is part of "the international scheme of the Russian Kremlin." J. B. Matthews, of the House Committee on Un-American Activities, and State Attorney General Bruce Bennett, are the chief witnesses. The conspiracy began, it seems, some twenty-three years ago with the founding of Commonwealth College. Then along came the Southern Tenant Farmers Union, with its interracial membership and interracial committees. And in its wake were formed the Southern Conference for Human Welfare and, later, the Southern Regional Council. Four Negro colleges, the University of Arkansas and the College of the Ozarks were quietly "infiltrated" by contributors to the Southern Regional Council. Then the Fund for the Republic contributed "several thousand dollars" to the Southern Regional Council—a telltale circumstance, since "a Mr. Ashmore" is a member of the board of directors of the Fund. (This, of course, would be the Harry Ashmore of the Arkansas Gazette.) The gallant Mrs. L. C. Bates, who has led the fight to integrate Negroes in the Little Rock school system, is made a party to the conspiracy by reason of the circumstance that her husband contributed to the Southern Conference Education Fund.

All of this, of course, is in the savage repression pattern of the Union of South Africa. So if apartheid borrowed from "Jim Crowism," the debt is now being repaid: Jim Crowism is aping apartheid racism. Once again Governor Faubus has obligingly confirmed the most serious charges of his most severe critics. As rapidly as circumstances will permit, he is busily proving that he is a racist in the Strydom mold. The attempt to prove that "integration" is synonymous with communism will fail in Little Rock as eventually it must fail in Johannesburg; but, before it does, some of Little Rock's foremost citizens are likely to be smeared Their consolation—if such it be—is that they could not be smeared in a better cause.

Education

Hubart T. Steele Jr.

The following deals primarily with education at the University of North Carolina, but those things which I am about to discuss are not peculiar to Chapel Hill; they can be found in most institutions of higher learning in America.

Before public education reached the present level children were able to obtain very little formal education, almost none if their parents were not wealthy. Their education had to be obtained on their own by reading, questioning and observing. But then, how else can one learn? How can someone teach except to guide our minds to the proper references for us to learn on our own?

The National Student Association states that the urpose of a university is to perpetuate and enlarge the sum total of human knowledge. How can the sum total of human knowledge be perpetuated without knowing what came before? And how can one be expected to enlarge upon this knowledge without learning to think for himself?

Most college graduates know nothing of the intellectual heritage bequeathed to our civilization by the great cultures of the past. Furthermore, they have no inkling of the nature of our own civilization. They are totally unprepared to deal with present problems because they have never learned how these difficulties were dealt with before. This may be a challenge to their training, common sense and reasoning, but how much better it would be if they realized how helpful the past can be. The practice of Law is based largely on precedent, and justly so, because we can study our predecessors' handling of a particular case and profit by their decisions. The Greek and Roman Civilizations have much to offer if the student would just delve into them. But how many college graduates have read Plato, Aristotle, Augustine and others—all of whom lead to an understanding of the past? In our own Western background, Shakespeare, Milton and Chaucer are the only authors of whom students become aware.

Professors fill their lectures with facts taken directly from a text when they should be elaborating on those facts—relating them to other facts and ideas—so that one not only memorizes but also learns and understands. Class periods should be used for explanation, questions, and elaboration; if they are not used for these purposes, the student would be much better of studying and reading on his own with no restrictions whatsoever on class attendance. Many times these memorized but misunderstood, facts are examined objectively. This is permissible if the instructor is interested in testing only the memorization and not the application of the facts. Could it not be possible that many are simply too lazy to grade subjective examinations?

Because of the influence of John Dewey on the American educational system, the emphasis on all levels of education has shifted from teaching people to think, to reason, and to understand, to that of teaching them how to make, to construct and to do, without ever understanding why. If, as Descartes said, cogito ergo sum, "I think, therefore I am," and if the quality which distinguishes Man from his lower relations on the evolutional scale is his ability to reason, then mankind is currently losing his uniqueness and certainty of being and the course of evolution is in the process of reversing itself.

The apostles of Dewey's pragmatic theory profess to teach "learning by doing." But thinking cannot be taught by pragmatic, utilitarian methods. The fuel of thought is ideas. Unless the fuel is ignited, the process of accumulation facts is pointless. Those who profess this system should carry its philosophy one step further and say: "learn to think by thinking;" unfortunately, they do not, and most schools of education instill the primary and secondary school instructors with this method of teaching. They know the methods but not the subject. Students taught in this manner bring with them to college no ideas and so back to the primary levels they go, continuing the vicious circle. Who shall, ney, who is capable of breaking it?

Vanishing American

P. W. Carlton

Good old pre-registration is come and almost gone, but never forgotten. The strains and stresses of this hectic experience send unnerved students cowering to dark corners, where they remain until their flaggering courage is sufficiently bolstered to face humanity. Some don't ever come out. They just hide until the next registration period arrives, at which point they sally bravely forth to renew their assault upon the portals of education. I have, in the course of my harrying experience with pre-reg., set down a record of some of the idiosyncracies of that ephemaral, little seen and highly sought after individual, the faculty advisor. The advisor is a man of many talents. He instructs, writes, does research and raises a family. This in itself is not so unusual, but the fact that he fulfills his obligations without being seen by anyone at all is an amazing feat. No matter how hard one looks, no advisor is to be found. On days when he's to be in his office, students nervously arrange for appointments and take seats outside the closed office door. Always there's someone ahead in line and he's inside. Hours pass. No students enter, none leave. Eventually the last hangers on give up and cancel their appointments. The secretary cheerily advises a return visit at a later date. This can go on for weeks. Always there's the closed door and dead silence. No one enters or leaves the office. Eventually one begins to notice that students are getting most of their advice thru the secretary, who acts as an intermediary between student and advisor. Paperwork is handled there also. Some sly students try to arrive at the office ahead of time so as to catch the highly elusive rascal coming in, but this never works. One enterprising young fellow reached South building just after 4 a.m. At 9 the secretary approached and he wearily arose, a triumphant gleam in his eye.

"I'd like to see my advisor please," he croaked.

"Sorry, there's someone in there now," she replied sweetly. He left school the next day.

Some students try to get him on the phone. This is squelched by such coy comments from the secretary as:

"He's in conference; he's OTL; he's instructing a course in basketweaving; he's doing research in Afghanistan; he's dead; he's playing tiddly winks this afternoon with the chancellor." It's quite frustrating.

Recently, startling information has come to light. I have just returned from Dix Hill where I interviewed the one man who has actually seen his faculty advisor. He told a strange story. It seems that he waited outside the office until he couldn't stand it anymore. Then one day he got up and went in, causing consternation among his fellow waiters. The door snapped shut behind him and he was in a plush office with no one. There was no one behind the massive. He looked carefully about, then ducked behind a curtain as the secretary. He was astounded as she addressed the empty desk concerning some academic matter. But he was dumbfounded when an ethereal voice gave a reply. The secretary left, thanking the invisible speaker cordially. Shaken, the student emerged and examined the desk for signs of life. Almost immediately he found the source of advice, a small black speaker sitting on the desk top. A wire led toward another part of the building. Cold dread seized the student but he resolutely determined to get to the bottom of this enigma and set out, tracing the wire through the next room and into the woodwork. Eventually he traced the wire into the sub-sub-basement, where he was confronted by a small door. A warning sign upon the door denied him access to the room adjoining, toward which the speaker wire ran. Throwing caution to the wnids, he threw open the door and was overwhelmed by the odious sight before him. A metallic humming filled his head and nausea shook his frame.

At this point in the story he went to pieces and it took me 20 minutes to get the terrible secret from him. When I left they were putting the unfortunate fellow into a strait jacket.

I hesitate to reveal this secret to mankind, for it must surely destroys our confidence in truth. You see, the head advisor, that fountainhead of knowledge whence comes the decisions that affect our lives and plans, the great benefactor of college students is—UNIVAC.

But I'm not worried. Hee Hee. The butterflies will take care of me. Look how they fly in the air. Pretty butterflies. You aren't mechanical. I think I'll go weave a basket for Teedlemonger. He'll like that.

Seriously, it is a shame that the advisors are so overworked. Often these hard working people are inconvenienced in their desire to aid the students with their problems. Students, too, spend much valuable time waiting in outer offices when they could be putting it to better use. It would be highly desirable if something could be done to remedy this situation, thus alleviating the pressure on both faculty advisor and student. Let's hope it's done soon.

that North Carolina has ever offered."

He said Davis, who headed the fund campaign, has reported that contributions over the $1,500,000 figure are expected soon. "He tells me that a number of people haven't been seen yet," the governor added.

Of the original goal of $1,250,000, a half million was earmarked for Institute operating expenses until it can become self-sustaining, another half million to complete land purchases and secure water for the park and $250,000 for the building to house the Institute.

The building figure was increased by $300,000 because of the Hanes family's contribution.

Institute President Herbert, former executive associate director of the Stanford Research Institute in California, began his North Carolina duties Dec. 1.

A graduate of the Naval Academy he taught engineering at Michigan State University and joined the Stanford Institute in 1948.

In a luncheon speech, Herbert reported progress in assembling an Institute staff and in beginning to outline concrete projects.

He said the Research industry has blossomed into one of the nation's largest — financially bigger than the petroleum and rubber industries and almost half as large as the entire automotive industry.

"As a result of the unique advantages of the research industry," He said, "there has been a growth of major centers."

"Because of the friendly living conditions combined with the stimulating atmosphere of the universities," he added, "I feel confident that this area will become a leading center of this new industry."

The old Research Triangle Committee began work on developing the area two years ago. It planned to make use of the area's three large colleges in establishing the Triangle into a major research center.

Herbert already has gone to work in offices the Institute has set up in Durham and which it will occupy until its building in the Research park is completed.

Dr. Gertrude Cox, director of the Institute of Statistics at North Carolina State College, has taken a leave of absence, to establish a statistics Division in the Research Institute. It was pointed out that there is a growing need for all types of statistical control and analysis in industrial research.

Other types of work already under development at the Research Institute include use of radioisotopes for industrial purposes; nutritional work of interest to the pharamaceutical industry; and work in economics including market surveys and operations analyses.

and making token bets on football games.

"In theory gambling can be strictly defined, but in practice allowances for the nature of the case must be made," Long said. Fuller felt that a definition of punishable gambling will be evolved from this and future series of cases.

Owens declared that the intention of the Council was to try to eliminate extreme cases of gambling, to cut the flow of gambling off at a major artery hoping that the effects of the action would filter down to decrease moderate and lesser forms of gambling.

POLICE NOT CALLED

No attempt has been made or is anticipated to request local police authorities for aid in enforcing gambling regulations of the University by invoking state statutes outlawing gambling. However, state courts will have the right and the ability through use of the subpoena to summon witnesses, even Council members themselves, and gain access to the confidential Council files if their solicitors wish to bring the cases to public trial that have already gone through the Student Council. Chairman Long conceded that they could make good cases against the convicted men since the decisions of the Council "were made only after hearings and due deliberation. And the boys accepted their sentences well in stride."

EXCLUSIVE JURISDICTION

The Student Council has had exclusive jurisdiction over gambling cases only since Nov. 20, 1958. Previously the Inter-dormitory Council courts had enforced the regulations in University-owned housing. The Interfraternity Council, having no court system, could only issue reprimands and had had to rely on the individual fraternities to take judicial action.

INCREASE

Speaking of the recent increase in gambling on campus a member of the Student Council said there is evidence that some people have worked their way through college by gambling, and that students from other colleges have come here to participate in gambling, but that no outside professional gamblers had been reported here.

In accordance with campus judicial system procedure the names of the defendants and the details of the cases will not be released. "Our aim is to correct as well as protect," Long stated.

The two students sentenced to indefinite probation will not be able to represent the student body in any capacity, nor retain membership in any activity or student organization (excluding fraternities to which they may belong but not hold office).

"Indefinite" is construed to mean not less than one semester at which time the student serving sentence may appeal to the Council for a release. The nine students officially reprimanded will in no way be punished; the reprimand will be recorded and would materially affect decisions of campus courts were they ever brought trial again.

WINSTON TASTES GOOD LIKE A CIGARETTE SHOULD!

The basketball climate in Woollen Gym came very close to matching the snowstorm outside Thursday night as Wake Forest coach Bones McKinney tried to put the freeze on Carolina's red-hot Tar Heels.

Knowing that Carolina is a young team (three juniors, two sophomores) McKinney was banking on the Tar Heels to get rattled and make mistakes when confronted with the stalling type game. It didn't work; in fact, it didn't even come close. Carolina was not in serious trouble all night.

Good Strategy

It was, in spite of the outcome, a smooth piece of cage strategy by former Carolina great McKinney. The plan would have worked against a team not quite as poised as the Tar Heels. On paper, it should have worked. But it didn't.

One reason it failed is that Frank McGuire was not born yesterday. The amiable mentor revealed after the game that his Tar Heels had been working all week on just that type game. They were ready.

The Deacons held Carolina to a 10-point margin of victory (44-34). Had they rebounded with the Tar Heels, it could have been a different story. But you can't give a hot-headed team like Carolina three shots at the basket each time they get the ball and expect to win.

The Tar Heels, man for man, refused to crack. They were calm and collected, refusing to give in to the freeze treatment and throw the ball away. They worked for the good shots; when they came, they took them. Most went in, at least enough to win.

"Good For Team"

Frank McGuire, commenting after the contest, said he believed such a game was good for his team. He added he thought Wake Forest might begin to run in the second half. "They got good experience out there tonight. It takes self-control to play a game like that, to wait for the good shots and not make mistakes," McGuire continued.

"That's the kind of basketball I was raised on," McGuire went on to say. When asked about Hugh Donahue, who he recently decided not to hold out, McGuire replied that "we'll use Donahue when we need him. We didn't need him tonight because in that type of game nobody gets tired. I think he can help us, and he wants to play."

Donahue, who has one of the best hook shots around, is nearly recovered from an ankle injury sustained in a practice session. A point to ponder is that there is only one more game remaining in this semester and if Donahue doesn't play against State he would have another whole semester of eligibility.

McGuire commented further that next week's big encounter with brother institution N. C. State may turn out to a "battle of the freeze."

No State Tickets

Speaking of the State game, there are no tickets available at the ticket office here for the contest. Only 200 were sent and they are long gone. Why no more? You got me.

Wake Forest center Dave Budd turned in another sterling performance last night, this time against Dick Kepley. Budd is rapidly getting a name as a "tough" player. In the Dixie Classic, he mixed it briefly with Cincinnati great Oscar Robertson.

Carolina was leading the ACC in offense until the big freeze. The Tar Heels had a 78.6 average until Wake Forest limited their vaunted attack to 44 markers.

Lee Shaffer turned in his fourth straight good night against the Deacs, hitting for 17 points for the game. He hit 7 of 11 from the floor and 3 of 5 at the free throw line.

York Larese went into the Deacon game needing 21 points to take over the ACC scoring race from John Richter. He only got 4 against the stalling Wake five.

Now that Kentucky has bitten the dust at the hands of lightly-regarded Vanderbilt, there is a good chance that the polls next week will find N. C. State and Carolina ranked 1-2 respectively. The Wildcats, with four sophomores in the starting lineup, just aren't that good.

Dream Game

Should the aforementioned voting take place to put the brother institutions at the top of the heap it would accomplish two objectives: 1—A great tribute to the ACC to have two teams so highly ranked, 2—It would make the upcoming battle between the two squads next Wednesday a basketball fan's dream game.

State meets Duke's five sophomores Saturday night, but the Devils looked rather bad in getting clobbered by Maryland 68-33. It was the lowest a Duke team had scored since 1947.

So, if things work out, Carolina and State will go into the fray with a 11-1 and 8-1 records, respectively. What a game!

Matmen Take Pair From Wake Forest

Carolina's wrestling teams, both varsity and freshman, made the going plenty tough for Wake Forest's matmen here last night as they swept both events by big scores.

The varsity rolled over the Deacons in convincing style by a score of 25-10, while the frosh really poured it on to the tune of 35-5.

The varsity matmen managed four pins in winning their second match in a row and pulling their season record to an even 2-2. They are now 1-1 in the conference.

The frosh came through with 7 pins as they won everything but the gym in an utter rout. Their record now stands at 3-1 for the year.

137-pounder Henry Rhyne got his second pin in as many outings. Last time around Rhyne was the only man with a pin but last night he had to share the honor with 3 mates: Larry London, Bob Caufill, and John Matney.

Matney, injured earlier in the year in a horse riding accident, showed he'll be tough to handle as the Tar Heels' big man this season.

The only man to lose for the freshmen was heavyweight Davis, who was pinned by Wake's Hall.

There was one draw in the varsity meet. Ronny Purdy drew with the Deacons' Danforth in the 157-pound division.

The summaries:

VARSITY: 123—London (C) pinned Hamilton (W), 130—Carison (W) pinned Suttle, 137—Rhyne (C) pinned Johnson (W), 17—Borton (W) decisioned Perinni (C), 157—Purdy (C) drew with Danforth (W) 167—Atkinson (C) decisioned Ashburn (W), 177—Caufill (C) pinned Geer (W), heavyweight—Matney (C) pinned Padula (W).

Tar Babies Play Best Game Against Deaclets

Carolina's basketball Tar Babies turned in their best performance of the season Thursday night in whipping highly regarded Wake Forest 64-60. The victory avenged an earlier setback at the hands of the same Baby Deacs in Burlington.

Though the Baby Deacs led 26-21 at halftime, Carolina came back in the first half and forged ahead, mainly on Ken McComb's shooting from underneath and tap-ins, and Donny Walsh's driving and outside shooting.

McComb Has Best Night

McComb had by far his best night of the season by gunning in 23 points. He was also tough off both boards. Big Jim Hudock, who fouled out late in the second half, had 16. Walsh wound up with 13 for the night.

Wake's highly-touted center Leonard Chappell, one of the most sought for players in the nation last year, was high man for the Deacons with 11, but he didn't show his potential as Hudock and McComb made it very difficult for him to shoot.

The Tar Babies ran their advantage of 58-44 with 4:24 left in the game, but then Hudock fouled out. The Tar Babies went into a freeze, and that's where Walsh was really valuable. He looked like the next Lou Pucillo as he dribbled all around the court to stave off the Deacon attack.

Rally Falls Short

With 1:22 left and the score 64-54, Wake really started to pour it on. A late rally fell short, however, and Carolina had a revenge win over the only team to beat them.

The Tar Babies, who are ably coached by Dean Smith and Joe Quigg, play their next game next week against tough N. C. State. The game is Wednesday the 14th, a preliminary for the big varsity battle between the two schools.

Carolina's overall record now reads 4-1.

Bloom Sets Mark

Swimmers Swamp VMI 56-36

LEXINGTON, Va. — Carolina's unbeaten swimming team completed the first leg of their northern swing on a winning note here last night as they rolled over Virginia Military Institute 56-36.

The Keydets turned out to be a little stronger than most had suspected but the tough Tar Heels still had little trouble in winning their fourth straight this year.

The amazing Tar Heel victory skein, which stretches over three seasons, now stands at 23 straight meets without a loss for Pat Earey's talented crew.

This afternoon they travel across to Charlottesville to meet conference foe Vlirginia at 2:00. VMI has already defeated Virginia this year. A win over the Cavaliers would pull the Tar Heel conference record to 3-0.

Harry Bloom was once again the big gun for Carolina, getting two wins and lowering a pool record. Bloom's time of 2:14.5 in the 220 freestyle was good enough for a record in the VMI pool.

Randy Dodson, a soph like Bloom, continued his winning ways in taking the 200 butterfly and anchoring the victorious 400 medley relay team.

Two surprises for the night were another pair of sophs, Harvey Hamrick and Sam Douglas. Hamrick, who hadn't shown too much previously, finished second in the 200 backstroke ahead of Carolina's perrenial winner Bob Hunter. Douglas was an eye-opening second in the 50 freestyle.

Kit Mercer, one of the old hands, came through with a triumph in the 200 breaststroke, while Brent Nash copped the 100 freestyle.

Carolina divers also dominated, with Dick Cashwell first and newcomer Jack Rudy second.

Orange County Residence Necessary For ABC Vote

A number of Carolina students were not allowed to register Saturday for the ABC election because they were not "residents" of Chapel Hill.

Students were turned down on the basis of this interpretation of their "residence": the location to which the students will return, even after an extended absence.

The real test for determining whether or not Chapel Hill is a student's residence is if the student has registered his real and personal property for taxation purposes.

Dormitory, fraternity, sorority, even married students cannot register and vote in the Feb. 3 refreendum if they do not plan to make their home in Orange County.

Earlier this week, third precinct Registrar Harold Walters said students would be eligible to vote if they filled requirements of duration of residency — one year in the state and 30 days in Chapel Hill.

Walters did not mention requirement of property ownership or future plans regarding residence.

Students who are not allowed to vote in Chapel Hill have voting privileges in their hometowns even though they may live at home only during the summer months.

At the Cone precinct, approximately four students were registered Saturday. At the Estes Hills precinct, two students who tried to register were declared ineligible.

Twelve students were registered at Woollen Gym out of a large number who came by. Ten of 50 students were registered at the Glenwood School precinct.

No student was registered at the Town Hall.

Pioneer Program Extended By UNC

The UNC School of Medicine will sponsor two postgraduate courses in medicine beginning this week in the Ahoskie-Edenton-Elizabeth City area and in Goldsboro.

The first lectures will be held in Ahoskie on Wednesday. The speaker will be Dr. Warner Wells, faculty member of the UNC School of Medicine.

Dr. Wells' afternoon lecture will be on "New Etiologic Concepts in Peripheral Vascular Disease." His evening lecture will be a most timely one, "The Atomic Era: Survival or Extinction."

This course is co-sponsored by the first District Medical Society and the UNC Extension Division. The following week the lecture will be given at Edenton and following that at Elizabeth City. Both courses run for six weeks.

The second course begins in Goldsboro Thursday. This is co-sponsored by the Wayne County Medical Society and the UNC Extension Division.

The Goldsboro speaker will be Dr. Felda Hightower of the Bowman Gray School of Medicine.

Dr. Hightower will speak in the afternoon on "Office Management of Peripheral Disease." His evening lecture will be on "Some Medical and Surgical Problems Related to the Colon."

The UNC School of Medicine is a pioneer in offering postgraduate courses in medicine away from the campus. This program was started in 1916, the first such program of its kind in the United States. It soon became known as the "North Carolina Plan" and other schools followed the lead of the UNC School of Medicine.

SP To Appoint Four Committees Monday

Members will be appointed to four new Student Party committees at the party's Monday night meeting in Roland Parker I and II at 7:30.

The Advisory Board has made recommendations to SP Chairman John Brooks, who will appoint the members of the committees.

The four committees are the Program, Interviewing, Membership and Social.

Student Party floor leader Jim Crownover said the more important and more far-reaching of these committees as far as the student body is concerned is the Interviewing Committee.

This committee, like the other three, will consist of three members. Two of the three on the Interviewing Committee must be or must have been members of Legislature. Interviews will be held throughout the spring semester for all people interested in running for Legislature.

The purpose of the Interviewing Committee is to inform interested persons of the function of Legislature, the time the jobs require and the ability and desire to work needed to be a good legislator.

Students appearing before this board will automatically be nominated in the Student Party for Legislature seats, and won't have to be nominated from the floor.

The Program Committee will obtain speakers on campus issues. The Social Committee will be in charge of all SP parties. The Membership Committee will strive to increase the membership of the Student Party.

"The next couple of months will be very critical ones for the Student Party," said Crownover, "and we strongly urge any people interested in the Student Party, both old members and those who haven't joined us yet, to come out to the meeting Monday."

Mikoyan Rated As Top Tourist By Nixon

WASHINGTON — AP — Vice President Richard M. Nixon rates Anastas I. Mikoyan, the Soviet's top tourist now in this country, as by far the ablest communist leader he has ever met.

Unlike other communist chieftains with whom Nixon has exchanged ideas and opinions, the vice president regards Mikiyan as flexible with a keen sense of humor, and not given to repeating rigid communist doctrines.

The vice president is convinced that the unofficial and highly publicized visit of the Soviet deputy premier here will aid relations between Russia and the United States.

Nixon is uncertain just why Mikoyan and his Kremlin associates decided on his unorthodox trip here. Some believe the articulate Armenian hopes to build up more direct contacts and communications between the two most powerful nations.

Nixon's impressions of the Soviet's No. 2 leader were formed during a good-natured but crisp visit in the vice president's office last Tuesday. It lasted more than two hours.

An authentic version of Nixon's impressions was obtained yesterday on an informal basis.

Glee Club May Sing In Azalea Festival

The UNC Men's Glee Club may be extended an invitation to participate in the annual Wilmington Azalea Festival in April.

A committee official of the 1959 Azalea Festival visited the Glee Club during its bi-weekly practice Thursday to hear them perform and listen to the club's recently marketed 45" record. The official also heard a local girl's singing group, a blues vocalist and a recording quartet with its headquarters in Chapel Hill.

Although the final decision is pending upon a program committee meeting in the middle of next week, the Glee Club reportedly is already preparing its selections.

"If the invitation is extended and accepted, the 60-voiced singing group will perform at both concerts and programs on Friday and Saturday nights, performing an opening songfeeset at the Friday night concert," Glee Club Director Joel Carter revealed.

"The Glee Club," according to Carter, "has scheduled its annual spring concert tour to include Eastern North Carolina. If the Azalea Festival plans mature, this would easily round out our normally full tour schedule."

Summer Opportunities Presbyterian Topic

A panel discussion on summer opportunities will be the topic of the program for students at the Presbyterian Hut tonight at 6:30.

The four main areas of discussion are: work camps, community service, seminars and interns of industry.

Participating students include Donn Wells, Tommy Iseley, Dot Richmond and Martha Turner. Ann Morgan, a recent graduate, will be chairman of the panel.

A supper at 5:30 will precede the program.

Canterbury Club Re-Schedules Meet

The Canterbury Club meeting has been re-scheduled at 6 p.m. today, instead of 7 p.m. as was reported yesterday.

Episcopal Light Feast To Be Held Tonight

The annual Feast of Lights candlelight service, presented by the Episcopal Student Congregation of the University, will be held tonight at 8 in the large chapel of the Chapel of the Cross, next to the Morehead Planetarium.

The traditional Feast of Lights pageant, considered the first, original Christmas play, commemorates the visit of the three magi to our Lord at his birth. Traditionally given on Jan. 6, its use is older than the observance of Dec. 25 as the date of Christ's nativity.

The Epiphany, as the visit of the magi is known in the Church Kalendar, symbolizes the gift of the light of Christ to the Gentile world. The word Epiphany comes from the Greek meaning "light-bearing" or "enlightening."

The Feast of Lights is taken from the traditional meaning of the Epiphany and is presented in pageant form. Each parish presents the pageant according to local tradition, all basically representing the adoration of the magi.

The traditional service for the Chapel of the Cross portrays the panorama of the coming of Christ to the world, from the prophecies of the Old Testamant to the ministering of the Bishops in the early Church to the Gentile world.

At the beginning of the service the Church is cast into total darkness and continues in darkness until the Christ candle, symbolizing the light of Christ, is lit.

To this candle come the wise men, the twelve apostles, and the bishops of the early Church, from whom the light is spread to the candles of the congregation. The service concludes with the congregation carrying the light of Christ to the world, symbolized by the candles they carry.

Rival Rebel Units Agree To Support Castro Government

HAVANA, — AP — Fidel Castro today apparently won his battle for peace within the revolutionary movement. Two rival rebel units agreed to yield their arms and pledged support for the new provisional government.

They are the student-supported revolutionary directorate, whose leaders were assailed by Castro, and the second national front of Escambray. Both wanted greater representation in the new government of provisional President Manuel Urrutia.

Castro had declared some rebel leaders were the worst enemies of the revolution. He denounced the directorate for seizing huge arms and ammunition stores at the San Antonio airbase southwest of Havana after the fall of the Fulgencio Batista dictatorship.

"We are ready to deliver the arms and do all necessary for the tranquility of the republic," Maj. Faure Chaumont, commander of directorate groups, told a news conference.

"The epoch of arms and war has passed. Now all that is important is the future of Cuba and for this no arms are necessary."

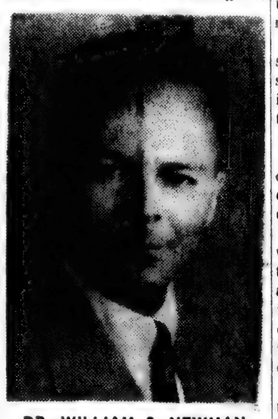
The same sort of word came from the second national front of Escambray, named for the mountains in Las Villas province where the decisive battle of the revolution was ought in the last days of December.

"We are at the disposition of President Urrutia and commander in chief Fidel Castro," said Maj. Eloy Gutierrez Menoyo, commander of the movement.

Castro, who had accused Chaumont of hostility to the Castro forces, was quoted by the newspaper Diario Nacional as saying he was overjoyed at the return of the arms from the air base.

TV Music Course Includes Lab Classes

"Outstanding masterworks in the main stream of the Western world's music" is the melodious phrase being used to describe the latest educational TV offering to North Carolinans the UNC station of WUNC-TV.



DR. WILLIAM S. NEWMAN
. . . watching good music

The course, Music 41, will be taught on Monday and Wednesday evenings at 7 o'clock, beginning Jan. 26. It is designed to help the inexperienced listener in a fuller understanding and enjoyment of music.

Dr. William S. Newman, professor in the UNC Department of Music, and nationally recognized pianist, author and teacher, will lecture informally during the two class periods each week.

According to Dr. Newman, the course will present a broad survey of the field of music as the Western world has cultivated it.

He commented, "The emphasis will not be so much on music's history or its heritage of great men as on the music itself — especially its elements, its styles, and its over-all structures, whether song forms, symphonies, operas and other types."

This course, taught by Dr. Newman for 13 years on the UNC campus, drew large enrollments in two sections this year.

Several years ago Dr. Newman, using tape recordings of class proceedings, conducted the course over WUNC, the FM raido station operated by the Universtiy. The venture was so successful that the program series was repeated.

The idea of presenting the course on WUNC-TV has been considered for several years, but only recently the major obstacle — how to follow musical score on television — was surmounted through a specially devised technical process.

Dr. Newman noted that many visual interests have been added to the course outline which will make the television course more meaningful. Besides Dr. Newman's demonstrations at the piano, blackboard and phonograph, there will be guest performers including dancers and musicians, student participants and special films.

Another feature of the course will be a special listening hour to be provided as a "lab class' each Thursday. During that hour the actual music scores will be followed by the camera, and other aids will be offered by Edgar Stryker, graduate instructor in the University's Music Department.

LITTLE ROCK LOSES CASE

Judge Tells School Board To 'Take Steps'

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. — AP — U. S. District Judge John E. Miller yesterday laid down a 30-day deadline for the Little Rock School Board to come up with a plan for integrating the city's closed high schools.

But the judge left unanswered a key question in the current phase of the drawn-out integration controversy.

Miller did not spell out whether he expects the board itself to seek reopening of the schools, or whether his court would be satisfied if the board simply prepares an integration plan and has it ready for use when and if the schools are reopened by any means.

Little Rock's four public high schools were closed Sept. 2 by Gov. Orval E. Faubus in an anti-integration move. Faubus shut them under powers given to him by a special session of the Arkansas legislature last summer.

The school closing law under which he acted has not been tested in either state or federal courts.

School Board member Robert Laster, a city traffic judge, said he felt Miller's order placed the board in "an untenable position" because compliance with any integration directive would mean the board had to violate the state school closing law.

Laster said he felt the board was powerless to act in the dilemma and had no alternative but to wait out the 30-day period and see what developed.

Other members of the six-man board declined immediate comment.

Miller's order named all members of the board as defendants. They were elected Dec. 6 to succeed a former board which drew up Little Rock's integration plan in 1955.

Gov. Faubus declined to comment on Miller's action immediately. So did Wiley A. Branton, attorney for the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People which is the plaintiff in the integration case.

Miller's order, which put into effect a mandate issued by the eighth U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals at St. Louis, simply instructed the board to "take positive steps" to implement a previously approved integration plan.

It called for a report to the court within 30 days on what steps had been taken or proposed.

Faubus invoked the state school closing law after the U. S. Supreme Court turned down a request for

The concert program will be under the direction of Dr. Wilton Mason. Tickets for reserved seats may be purchased in Hill Hall.

These performers have been noted for their outstanding roles in recent University music dramas and operettas.

Supporting roles will be handled by Brian Klitz, UNC graduate assistant in music, singing the parts of Zungia, Morales and El Dancairo; James Pruett of Mount Airy as El Remendado; Marilyn Zschau of Raleigh, a UNC senior, as Mercedes; and Rebecca Carnes, a graduate student from Shiloh, as Frasquita.

Extension Course Has Wide Popularity

National and international recognition attest to the evident success of the correspondence course for dental assistants offered by the UNC School of Dentistry through the University Extension Division. Since its first enrollment in February 1954, the course has achieved some prominence in dental circles.

Its popularity (students have enrolled from 43 states and Puerto Rico) may be attributed in part to the fact that the course, which was prepared by Dean John C. Brauer of the University Dental School and 12 members of the dental faculty, is the only correspondence course approved by the American Dental Association as meeting it educational requirements for taking the National Certification Examination.

It is, in essence, an in-service training course with, in many cases, the local dentist providing the fee for his assistant and supervising the study. In at least one instance, the area assistants are holding study classes with local dentists acting as leaders of the discussion.

The fact that this is an innovation in the field of dental assistant is mirrored in the words of the president of a state dental assistants association who says, "I can't help but mention your Dr. John Brauer . . . and express my gratitude for all that he and the University have done for dental assisting!"

Further indication of the success of the course came in July 1958 when it was learned that the 14 girls who had completed the course and had taken the National Certification Examination averaged 90.5 with no failures. In contrast to this, the 11 girls who had taken a one-year resident course elsewhere averaged 73.3 on the examination with one failure and the 20 who had completed a two-year resident course average 83.6 with one failure.

Recently, the University has learned through Miss Merle Andrews, chairman of the Clinics and Exhibits Committee of the American Dental Assistants Association, that dentists from Mexico, Japan, Switzerland and England voiced interest in and approval of this dental assistants course at the American Dental Assistants Association meeting in Dallas, Texas. Inquiries were made concerning possible translations into Spanish and other languages.

Fire Guts University Building

The first fire of the new year erupted last night in a two-story University building and rendered the top floor of the building and the entire rear portion an almost total loss.

It took firemen an hour and a half to put out the blaze which started in the rear portion of the house at 219 Pittsboro St. at 7:30 p.m.

According to fireman on the scene the blaze apparently started around the furnace of the building, now used as an office for a University research group, but the official cause of the fire was not yet known at press time last night.

Firemen worked hard to keep the fire from hitting the lower portions of the building, a wooden frame house, and succeeded in keeping damage to the lower portion of the building at a minimum. The total damage to the building from both fire and water is still to be determined by University officials.

Anne Frank Interpretation Tonight At 8

AAn original dramatization interpreting the ideas from "The Diary of Anne Frank" will be presented by Mrs. Marion Rosenzweig in Gerrard Hall tonight at 8 p.m.

Mrs. Rosenzweig has given this reading in cities from Norfolk, Virginia to Fort Wayne, Indiana. She has also appeared at colleges in Charlotte and Greensboro.

Mrs. Rosenzweig considers Anne Frank to be a very courageous and mature child with great insight. It is her hope to bring Anne to the public so that they will get to know her and see what the world lost upon her death.

The reading will present the various emotions the adolescent experienced. Mrs. Rosenzweig will include Anne's reactions to her parents, sister and friends, her first falling in love, her fears and longings. The interpretations are based on the book.

Mrs. Rosenzweig has done dramatic presentations similar to her "Diary if Anne Frank" for a number of years. She does only books or plays with artistic merit or those that have a message, not best sellers.

Mrs. Rosenzweig has also worked with Little Theatre groups and the Carolina Playmakers.

The reading is being sponsored by the Drama Committee of the Graham Memorial Activities Board.

Free Lancer Dave Morrah To Give Talk

North Carolina humorist Dave Morrah will speak to members of the UNC Press Club Monday night at 7:30 at the home of Dean and Mrs. Norval Neil Luxon, Mt. Bolus Rd.

Morrah, whose backyard German appears in his Saturday Evening Post postscripts and several books, works primarily as public relations director for Guilford College. Another sideline for Morrah is writing a Sunday column for the Greensboro Daily News.

Though his most popular and well known work is the backyard German, Morrah has admitted not knowing a word of German himself.

At the Press Club meeting, Morrah's topic will be "Free Lancing."

Morrah completed his undergraduate work at North Carolina State College. While there, he edited the humor magazine and was a member of the wrestling team.

Cummings, Vedula Murthy, Lee Alexander, Phillip Nash and Russell G. Owens.

Research Triangle

Congratulations are in order for Governor Hodges, Archie Davis, and the others that worked so hard to make the Research Triangle a reality.

The Research Triangle, the institute, and the research that will be conducted will no doubt be a benefit to all people in the state, and the coming of industry will no doubt bring greater economic progress to what is now a somewhat economically backward state.

There was, however, a portion of the Governor's speech at the Research Triangle luncheon that was disturbing. This came when the Governor mentioned North Carolina's dependence on education that he said was freely admitted. He added, however, that the dependence extended specially to research education, and this perhaps the strongest bone of contention.

Driving through Durham the other night, one could see clearly a sign "What you don't know WILL hurt you," with an accompanying plea for better schools. What a person schooled solely in research, what a country devoted solely to science education, and what a state with a poor educational system aimed at bringing out only research for industry doesn't know will hurt them.

It is surprising that anyone in America realizing the potentialties for Democracy is not aware that knowledge of more things than science is necessary to sustain the society. Indeed, science far from being the most important is less important that the art of government and many other such skills. The scientist has his place. Research, is important, but neither outweighs the need for a solid groundwork in the humanities, and solid education for all citizens.

The path to America's and North Carolina's greatness lies in education — education for all in all subjects.

Voting

One registrar of the Orange County election apparently misinformed The Daily Tar Heel as to what the requirements for voting in the town election are, since several students have been turned away from the polls.

Apparently there is need for proof of intention to make Chapel Hill a permanent residence in the form of registration of property for tax purpose, ownership of land, or other measures.

There is still question as to whether a resident of a fraternity can vote, for fraternities do pay taxes to the town, and students do contribute to the tax money through their dues. If they are denied the right to vote, one has a situation whereby the people are taxed without representation and without the ability to find recourse for unfavorable action through the ballot box.

The issue of ABC stores is not so singularly important, but the general situation of many who are of legal age who reside in Chapel Hill for the majority of four years of their life without having a say through the ballot box as to their government. Indeed the town or county could levy more taxes on the students without the students being able to do anything about it.

At least some students can vote in this election — those who have registered their car in Chapel Hill for tax purposes, who rent houses that they list for tax purposes, and who own property that they list for tax purposes.

This number is not half the amount that should be eligible to vote, and if the students throughout the state wanted to do a real service to the community, they would press for legislation enfranchising them. It seems rather silly that the potential leaders of any community in the United States are deprived of their right to vote in the place where they spend most of their time. It would seem that the town would profit by their ballot.

When

When is the Carolina Symposium on Public Affairs going to choose a chairman?

The group has been comparatively inactive for six months, and if a chairman is not chosen immediately or sooner, the Carolina Symposium will be in the same trouble it was two years ago, when they had too much to do and too little time to do it in.

The World News In Review

Ron Shumate

World news this week produced some spectacular events, as well as some run-of-the mill occurrences.

Cuba's now-successful revolution was one of the more colorful news events, though the color was often red—blood red. The civil war in Cuba took 8,000 lives and ran up a bill of more than $100 million.

General Fulgencio Batista's domination of Cuba, which had leased off and on since 1933, came to an end on New Year's Eve.

Fidel Castro, 32, began his "crusade" against Batista in 1953. His original force of 81 men grew to 8,500 and took over the island of 6,500,000, with a yearly income from sugar, cattle, tobacco, minerals and tourists of more than $2 billion.

Castro declared Havana province under martial law;; executed 15 officers of Batista's armed forces tracked down known killer cops, with the aid of radio and television stations, who broadcast the prowl-car numbers of the cops so the rebels could more readily find them.

Castro, enjoying his hero's journey through eastern provinces of Cuba, indicated that he does not favor diplomatic relations with any dictatorship, including Communist ones.

Thursday, joyous Havana gave a tumultuous welcome to Castro. Two frigates in the harbor fired 21-gun salutes.

He was surrounded by armed cars, tanks and other vehicles. Confeti rained upon the rebel soldiers, along with shouts of "Long live free Cuba!" "Long live Castro!" "Death to the Batistaites."

A plot to kill Castro during his triumphal parade was thwarted by a revolutionary unit.

In an address to the roaring multitude at the presidential palace, Castro warned the Cuban people that they now face their greatest task.

Castro's grand entrance came just a week from the day his 26th of July movement drove Batista into exile.

Provisional President Manuel Urrutia, who met Castro at the palace, hailed him as "The great son of the Cuban people."

Even as Castro told the throng that their greatest test is to make a success of the revolution, the provisional government was making plans to disarm the young militia, reorganize the police, and set up scores of revolutionary courts. These courts will try hundreds of Batista followers.

As Castro left the palace he grabbed a rifle from a nearby rebel fighter and raised it in a triumphal salute.

State Of The Union

Other highlights of the week came from Washington, where the President's State of the Union message, the filibuster fight and Hallick's victory over Martin kept U. S. news wires buzzing.

Textual highlights of Ike's message were:

"We can have no confidence in any treaty to which Communists are a party except where such a treaty provides within itself for self-enforcing mechanisms . . ."

"We seek to prevent war any place and in any dimension . . . in support of these objectives we maintain forces of great power and flexibility."

Eisenhower further stated that 'modern weapons are exceedingly expensive . . . We can afford everything we clearly need, but we cannot afford one cent of waste."

"We seek victory — not over any nation or people — but over the ancient enemies of us all; victory over ignorance, poverty, disease, and human degredation wherever they may be found.' "

The Democrats, who control Congress, found little to get excited about in the President's message.

Eisenhower also gave a prelude to his forthcoming budget message by citing examples of weapons price tags which, as he put it, make the cost of defense tremendous.

"We are buying certain bombers that cost their weight in gold," he said.

White House spokesmen said he was referring to the Air Force's new B58 supersonic, medium jet bomber and the Navy's A3J jet attack plane for carrier-based operations. These spokesmen said the weight of the B58 is 47,000 pounds, the A3J 27,000 pounds.

Using the gold valuation of $35 a trop ounce, the costs for the two planes would come out at about $36,700,000 for the B58 and $17,600,000 for the A3J.

"Gambling Isn't Being Entirely Eliminated"

Ike told Congress that he will soon ask for new legislation in the field of civil rights. He did not give any details.

He announced his general plans with these words: "We are making noticeable progress in the field of civil rights—we are moving forward toward acheivement of equality of opportunity for all people everywhere in the United States. In the interest of the nation and of each of its citizens, that progress must continue . . . ."

Integration

Ike took a swipe at Southern opposition to integration, which has led to the closing of some schools rather than admitting Negroes as ordered by Federal courts, when he said "The image of America abroad is not improved when school children, through closing of some of our schools and through no fault of their opportunity for an education . . . . Whenever the supremacy of the Constitution of the United States is challenged I shall continue to take every action necessary to uphold it."

Speaking of labor, he said he will seek prompt enactment of legislation to correct labor-management abuses.

He said that disclosures by a Senate investigating committee of corruption, racketeering and abuse of trust and power in labor-management affairs "have aroused America and amazed other peoples."

The President said he would ask for legislation to:

Safeguard workers' funds in union treasuries against misuse of any kind whatsoever.

Protest the rights and freedoms of individual union members, including the basic right to free and secret elections of officers.

Advance true and responsible collective bargaining.

Protect the public and innocent third parties frim unfair and coercive practices such as boycootting and blackmail picketing.

The State of the Union message was actually a state of the world analysis keyed to the struggle against Communism.

Much of the emphasis was on the President's previously stated determination to maintain financial integrity at home while carrying on the battle for enduring global peace.

He held out hope of new record prosperity, while cautioning that the nation must continue to guard against inflation. He said the coming year is "expected to be the most prosperous in our history."

Peace cannot be built through desire alone, the President said, especially when the new Berlin crisis proves again that the Communists regard international agreements as mere scraps of paper.

Atom-Powered Submarine

The Halibut, first atomic-powered submarine capable of firing a guided missle, was launched at the Mare Islani Naval Shipyard Friday.

The commander of the Pacific fleet, submarine force, called the Halibut "the greatest and most powerful individual submarine weapons system in any Navy in the world."

The Halibut is the second submarine to bear that name. The first was commissioned in 1942 and during World War II sank 12 enemy vessels for a total of 45,257 tons.

Jet fighter patrols of Israel and the United Arab Republic battled Thursday for the second time within three weeks.

U. A. R. Army headquarters in Cairo declared one Israeli plane was shot down and another damaged. An Israeli army spokesman in Tel Aviv said all Israeli planes landed safely.

The fight, like that of Dec. 20 in which Israel claims a kill, pitted French-built Israeli Mysteres against Soviet-built MIG 17s.

The Dec. 20 fighting led to condemnation of Israel by the Israeli-Egyptian mixed armsistice commission, which Israel boycotts. The chairman Col. H. Norston, voted with Egyptian delegates at Gaza in finding that the Israeli fliers had violated Egyptian air space.

De Gaulle New President

Gen. Charles De. Gaulle became President of France Thursday and pledged to use his strong executive powers to keep the new Fifth Republic on the stern path he outlined as premier. He declared he would do what had to be done for the nation's good.

The following day De Gaulle released the names of his cabinet, which was a sign that he intends to continue his strict control over French affairs.

Back in the U. S. the new Congress got off to a roaring start with the battle over filibusters. The question is whether to change the rules so as to make it easier to shut off filibusters—the endless talk weapon Southern Democrats have used effectively in the past to torpedo civil rights legislation.

The anti-filibuster coalition met a major reverse Friday when the Senate rejected by a nearly 2-1 margin a maneuver aimed at opening the way for a tougher clamp down on the endless talks.

This development heightened prospects for adoption of a compromise proposal advanced by Senate Democratic leader Lyndon B. Johnson of Texas.

The southerners argue that the Senate's rules carry over from Congress to Congress. They say this is beecause only one-third of the Senate is elected every two years.

Martin Tossed Out

House Republicans Tuesday tossed the veteran Joseph W. Martin out of his House leadership post, and replaced him with Charles A. Halleck of Indiana.

A 74-70 vote in a secret Republican caucus overthrew the Massachusetts Congressman who has been the House GOP leader for 20 years.

Martin pinned part of the responsibility on aides of President Eisenhower and Vice President Nixon.

When asked whether Nixon had a hand in engineering his overthrow, Martin said: "All I know is that all his people were against me — actively against me."

The changeover provided a dramatic, spectacular prelude for a similar showdown within Senate Republican ranks and for Wednesday's opening of the heavily Democratic 86th Congress.

For their part, Democrats were free of leadership feuds. They picked another veteran, Sam Rayburn of Texas, for a ninth term as speaker of the House. Rayburn, 77, already has held the post longer than any other man.

Senate Democrats gave the nod to another Texan, Lyndon B. Johnson,, to stay on as majority leader.

Travel

The State Department lowered its travel barriers Tuesday to let Moscow No. 2 man, Anastas I. Mikoyan, go just about anywhere he wants.

The traveling Armenian, first deputy premier of the Soviet Union, visited several U. S. cities. He was greeted with abuse such as snowballs, booing pickets and flying eggs.

His tour so far has been coming off fairly well, but almost exclusively because of the efforts and initiative of private Americans and U. S. corporations.

That, apparently, is the way the U. S. government wants it, for it is helping the visit only in incidental ways and presumably in some degree behind the scenes.

The anti-communist demonstrations which are pursuing the Russians are small but they are noisy and grab headlines, obscuring more political questions involved.

Mikoyan said the demonstrations of groups of iron-curtain refugees and other anti-communists which greeted him in Chicago, Detroit and other cities are comedies to which headaches no importance.

Legislation to protest newsmen against punishment for refusing to reveal sources of information was offered the House Wednesday.

The bill exempting newspaper, radio and TV reporters from being compelled by Federal courts to reveal their sources, except in cases affecting national security, was introduced by Rep. F. E. Dorn (R-NY).

Marie Torre, TV columnist for the New York Herald Tribune began serving a 10-day contempt of court sentence Monday for refusing to disclose on Federal court order the source of a story.

Soviet Rocket Mechta

The cosmic rocket Mechta shot past the moon and swooped toward the sun. The rocket is said to be making about 72,000 miles an hour in its orbit around the sun.

All figures on the rocket's performance are based now on scientific calculations, not direct observations. The rocket is far out of range of optical instruments and direct contact was lost when its radio failed Monday.

Other news was the snow. 'Nuff said!

A Letter

FROM THE DESK OF: BIG BROTHER

Dear Komrads:

You no doubt realize the tremendous progress brought about here toward the realization of our dream, and no doubt most of you are anxious that we continue to effect the complete subjugation of the individual to the mass.

You will therefore be alarmed to realize, dear komrads, that there is a danger in our midst, a small current of free thought and individual expression which threatens our whole glorious enterprise.

'Your benevolent government has decided to protect you from this menace (lhude sing Hotdamm) by eliminating the offenders. Those of you who are loyal to the cause will of course feel that it is a great privilege just to be able to go on record as opposing a system that has as its aim that of destroying everything that you hold dear; and so those of you who are loyal will please sign the enclosed loyalty oath and receive the blessing of your rulers.

Those who do not sign will be dealt with in the usual manner.

Your everloving komrade,
Nicky

It was a Friday night, more than a month ago now. At Memorial Auditorium in Raleigh, I was to see Harry Truman for the second time in my life. The first dated back to the Presidential campaign of 1948, some ten years in the past.

I was in grammar school, then, and knew little of the Presidential race other than the names of the two candidates and that one of them was running around the country scratching for votes in what appeared to be a hopeless attempt. He was visiting our city that day, moreover, and as far as I was concerned, a parade was a parade. That afternoon, I was among the many thousands who stood cheering the festive passage of automobiles and bands.

In the back seat of one of the many open cars was a gray, grinning man who was apparently the object of the applause, the shouts of "Give 'em hell, Harry," and the other not-so-complimentary remarks that sprung from the gathering. In general, however, the crowds were responsive to the affable personality and his impression on me was quite distinct. As his chauffeur passed my vantage point, I waved and yelled some "brilliant" greeting to the effect of "Hi Harry." To my eyes, at least, the great man acknowledged me with a nod and a smile. He had gained one solid supported, and there was no one happier when news of Mr. Truman's amazing upset became history.

Harry Truman came to Raleigh to speak on the 150th anniversary of the birth of Andrew Johnson. As was consistently pointed out during that week, Mr. Truman's appearance was the next best thing to having Andrew Johnson himself.

The similarities between Andrew Johnson and Harry Truman — the tailor who came after Abraham Lincoln and the haberdasher who followed Franklin Roosevelt — are almost incredible. Although enjoying an initial degree of popularity upon being called by death to the Presidency, both were shadowed by greatness and given tasks under which greatness might have faltered. Both were left legacies which had to be sternly faced or tragically fumbled.

When both made known they were not to be governed by factions, they met with bitter opposition. Johnson was rejected in his determination and all but ejected from the Presidency. Harry Truman was as loudly damned by those who found they could not control him.

Both men were given the tremendous tasks of maintaining the best in the American tradition after great wars had spent the energies and exhausted the emotions of too many of their countrymen. Johnson tragically failed. Truman miraculously succeeded while he served, although sometimes since then the same forces which harassed and baffled Johnson have come close to destroying the work Truman did for America and the world. Yet, it may be much too soon to say that Truman in triumph proved himself the greater man. It can be said as fact that no men in the history of our Presidency have shown greater consectraton in courage than Andrew Johnson and Harry Truman who came to speak of Andrew Johnson in his birthplace.

Even an early arrival at the Colleseum found many of the choice seats already occupied and most of the others guarded by staunch supporters of the Historical Association of North Carolina. It was not long, however, before successive events brought the main to its commencement.

First, there was the elderly lady who so harassed the WUNC-TV crew members about the placement of a light near her that they finally decided that it might be better located several rows higher. Then there was the stately, but not particularly well noticed, entrance of Mesdames Truman, Hodges, and Davis. This was followed by the appearance of some gentleman attired as Uncle Sam and the violent rush for seats when the announcement came that the Historical Association had been seated. Then the wait for the television commercial, and finally the skilled voice of Governor Hodges announcing: "We in North Carolina welcome to North Carolina President and Mrs. Harry Truman."

Personally, I was a little disappointed that Mr. Truman stuck pretty close to his subject, with only an occassional digression. He bored no one, however, and received more than an adequate tribute upon his conclusion.

Mr. Truman stated that Andrew Johnson's loyalty to the United States Constitution, "the greatest document in the history of government," made Johnson a great President.

"He became a real constitutional President," Mr. Truman said. "Why? he had become great because of that document. It has taken ninety years for the facts of his time to come out, but they have."

"He believed that the Constitution is the greatest document of government ever written, and so do I," remarked Truman. Johnson believed the Constitution "can be debauched by amendments, and so do I."

After tracing John's stormy career, Mr. Truman concluded with the following paragraph:

. . . usually the truth comes to the view of the people. Great men have always been slandered and vilified by the press and biased historians, but when the smoke and fuss clears away, people usually find who worked for their interests and who did not.

Go home and think about it.

We did, Harry. And it seems to us that the role of Harry Truman was never greater than now. Not even the task of Andrew Johnson is finished. Both are teachers that America always requires courageous leadership for her creative people — and never needs it so much as in complacent times. No man on earth has a better right to speak of that now than Harry Truman. His text, the life of Andrew Johnson, gave him an opportunity to speak of the man who had to deal in terms of America — with the problems which in Mr. Truman's time beset the entire world.

As American citizen No. 1, Harry Truman spoke on the responsibilities which great leaders have demonstrated and the courage which our country and our world require.

I was fortunate to hear him speak.

His voice was never more needed in this nation or on this planet than now.

Med Students Get Lecture On Radiation

"The Nuclear Reactor as a Radiation Source" was described by Dr. Raymond L. Murray, Burlington Professor of Physics at North Carolina State College, in a lecture at the University of North Carolina here Saturday.

Dr. Murray, a member of the board of directors of the American Nuclear Society and an internationally-known author in the atomic field, presented the lecture as a part of the four-month long Medical Science Lecture Series on Radiation sponsored by the UNC School of Medicine.

The purpose of Dr. Murray's talk was to give to medical students an understanding of what a reactor is and what it does.

In his presentation, he discussed nuclear reactors as sources of radiation and showed illustrations of nuclear components. As one example, Dr. Murray used the medical reactor at Brookhaven National Laboratory in New York.

a 2½-year delay in the integration plan.

Yesterday's order also enjoined the board from leasing public school properties to any group for operation as segregated schools and "from engaging in any acts . . . to impede, thwart or frustrate the integration plan mandated against them."

Several private schools were set up here to take care of some of the 3,700 students displaced in the school closings. Two are church-operated schools and one, which is operated by the Little Rock School Corp., is supported by public donations.

Only white children attend the private schools. Nothing has been done about establishing a school for Negroes.

Miller attached to the two-page order a 20-page opinion in which he took cognizance of the school closing law and ntoed:

"The court is not unmindful of the task that is confronting the board of directors . . . if a public school system is to be operated,

Our roots go deep in the growing areas served by America's second largest telephone system

America is building big out where the grass roots grow.

New industries, new businesses, and new homes are springing up where there's elbowroom. And these are the areas where General Telephone is a citizen of long standing.

From a small beginning, Gen Tel has grown with the countryside. Today our 1,745 exchanges in 30 states provide modern service for 3,359,000 telephones. Our lines carry 119 million conversations each week. And we're adding 750 new phones every day.

It takes a pair of seven-league boots to keep up with the growing communities in Gen Tel territory. That's why Gen Tel is investing almost $200 million this year in the new facilities required to meet the ever-increasing demand for more and better telephone service.

America's big promise is in Gen Tel territory. And Gen Tel is doing its part to meet it.

Carolina Swimmers Win 24th Straight Over Va., 53-32

Two Wins For Bloom; Relays Set Record

CHARLOTTESVILE, VA. — Carolina's unbeaten varsity swimming team completed their tour of the north on a winning note here this afternoon as they rolled in convincing style over so-so Virginia 53-32.

The Cavaliers had previously beaten by the same score at the hands of VMI, a team the Tar Heels whipped Friday night.

The Tar Heel winning streak, which looks like it may go forever, ran to 24 straight after this win. The Heels are now 5-0 overall and 3-0 in the conference.

The crack 400-yard medley relay team of Bob Hunter, Kit Mercer, Randy Dodson and Tom Gurant set a pool record in winning the event with a time of 4:17.1.

Sophomore sensation Harry Bloom led his mates once again in picking up two victories. Bloom copped both the 220-freestyle and the 440-freestyle.

Randy Dodson, another soph, won the 200-yard butterfly event and anchored and record-setting medley relay team.

Still another soph, Harvey Hamrick, turned in his second straight surprising performance in finishing second in the 200-yard backstroke.

A newcomer in the diving competition, Jack Rudy, tied veteran Dick Cashwell in the 1-meter diving, each having a score of 158-7. Rudy was a close second against VMI.

Kit Mercer, a perrenial winner in the breaststroke, was disqualified for improper position, allowing Virginia to sweep first and second place in that event.

The Tar Heels grabbed off six first places to win easily and rack up another victory on the win column.

Led predominately by sophomores, the crack Tar Heels have already passed the major hurdle for the season in stopping Duke and appear to be well on their way to another in a series of conference championships.

The Dolphins' next meet is Jan. 15 against tough little East Carolina College, who gave them their toughest match of the year so far. The Tar Heels had to win the last event to win the meet back in December.

WILLIAM GASTON LECTURE

Dr. Franklin Dunham, chief of radio-television in the U. S. Office of Education, will lecture on "The Social Implications of Radio and T.V." at 8 p.m. Monday in St. Thomas More Hall, 740 Gimghoul Rd.

The lecture is being sponsored on the William Gaston series by the Men's Club of St. Thomas More Church.

MOST IMPROVED — Dick Kepley, Carolina's fine 6-8 center, is being hailed by many as the most improved player in the ACC. Kepley is averaging in double figures and has had the fans in an uproar about his new aggresive, heads-up play. His big test comes Wednesday against N. C. State.

Grail Mural Jamboree Plans Set

Plans are now being made for the second annual Grail Mural Jamboree to be held on March 11th and 112th. The Jamboree last year was a great success and the hopes are even higher that more teams will participate.

The Jamboree has two main purposes, first to promote a better relationship between fraternities and dormitories and secondly, to enable the best athletes from all organizations to compete with one another.

Woodard Chairman

The preliminary plans have been worked out in two meetings of the steering committee. This committee is composed of three members of the Grail, two from the Dormitory Intramural Council and two members from the Fraternity Intramural Council. Paul Woodard is chairman and backing him up is Herman Godwin, Wayne Bishop, Ed Graham, Tom Cordle, Walt Brown and Al Mustian.

This year, as it was last year, there will be a well rounded program or in other words something for everyone. The Jamboree is jointly sponsored by the Intramural Department and the Order of the Grail.

The plans call for each fraternity to be paired with a dormitory which will then form one team. It will be a round-robin tournament and will be divided into 4 leagues. The winners in each league will advance to the finals on the following night and also on the second night the relays will be held.

Swimming Added

The events are handball, badminton, table tennis, archery, four shooting, half court basketball and this year a free-style swimming relay will be added. This year the relays will be tougher in order to prove the athletic ability of the people who participate.

All entries will be due as announced by the Joint Instramural Council following their February 20 meeting.

A small entry fee will again be required this year, in order to pay for the steak dinner for the winners.

It is urged that each organization hold its own contest in order to find out who will be best qualified for each of the events.

Last year 24 teams participated in the Jamboree, representing 48 different organizations, which included 336 individuals. This year the number of participatants is expected to exceed last year's. Last year's winners were Chi Psi and Law School. The relays winners were Zeta Psi and Cobb.

Gamecocks Win, 69-64

COUMBIA — (AP) — A long jump shot by junior Bob Frantz with just over a minute to go put South Carolina ahead for a 69-64 Atlantic Coast Conference basketball victory over Virginia Saturday.

The win was a come-from-behind effort for the Gamecocks who trailed from the first minute of play until about mid-way in the second half. Virginia held a 33-34 half-time edge.

Frantz's coroner shot put South Carolina ahead 65-64. He followed a few seconds later with two foul shots.

Paul Adkins paced the Virginia attack with 20 points.

The win was the Gamecocks second in five ACC games. They have an overall record of 3-8. Virginia has a 0-6 conference mark and a 2-11 overall record.

Indoor Track Lineup Set

By BING SOMERS

Once again the pounding of boards and spraying of sawdust fill Carolina's rambling, shambling Tin Can as the 1959 UNC indoor track team, led by All-American half-miler Dave Scurlock and Captain and top distance man Wayne Biship, has begun a season which will be climaxed by the Indoor Games to be held here on March 14.

Returning 19 lettermen from a squad that finished second to ACC kingpin Maryland in last year's Games, the Tar Heels, coached by Dale Ranson and Joe Hilton, look ahead to a promising season.

The following is an event by event team preview:

60 yd. dash—weakest event with Jim Varnum gone via graduation; Moe DeCantis and Tom White are only big hopes.

600 yd. run—perhaps strongest event; unmatched Sculock will not lose here but Johns Sylvester and Fox, Benjy Seagle may build fire under him.

880 yd. run—this, too, belongs to The Horse who should be able to coast with it Sonny Sweet shows great potential, needs only one good race to prove it.

1 mile—deep and strong; cross-country champ Wayne Bishop can run 4:12 on boards and junior Cowles Liipfert (3rd last year) may be right behind him;; sophomoores Bob Foxworth and Bing Somers lurk in shadows, should go under 4:25 by March.

2 mile—Bishop is ace in conference, may push under 9:10; gutty Fiek Arthur and barrel-legged Alex Coffin back him.

Pole vault—Jack-of-all-trade Ward Sims is lone varsity vaulter and a good one; could crack elite Virginia Maryland stronghold on event.

High jump — Wally Graham from Miami finished second last year, can roll 5'10" with eyes shut; Bob Sherrill rates a notch lower.

Broad jump — springy basketballer Ray Stanley, outdoor champ, may not be ready for indoors; if not, load will fall on Ed Brawley, Ward Sims, and highly touted soph Bob Eubanks, all good jumpers.

Shot — Burly Don Kemper, who cracked heads for Tatum last fall, should shove shot far enough for place in Games;; Jerry Phaup and Tom White may come through but must work, work, work.

Hurdles — both highs and lows are dominated by pliable, reliable Lyndon DeBorde, one of league's best; vaulter Ward Sims could press him; Charlie Sowers and Fred Wood can fly, but are short on form.

W.A.A. Notice

All first and second round table-tennis matches must be played by Thursday. This is the final deadline for these matches.

GM RESERVATIONS DUE

Saturday's Answer

A program of supreme importance to anybody who ever buys classical records

The RCA Victor Society of Great Music

UNDER THE DIRECTION OF THE Book-of-the-Month Club

. . . its common-sense purpose is to help serious lovers of music build a fine record library systematically instead of haphazardly . . . under reliable guidance . . . and at an IMMENSE SAVING over what they would otherwise pay for the very same RCA VICTOR Red Seal Records

MOST MUSIC-LOVERS, in the back of their minds, certainly intend to build up for themselves a representative record library of the World's Great Music. Unfortunately, almost always they are haphazard in carrying out this aspiration. The new Society is designed to meet this common situation, sensibly, by making collection more systematic than it now is in most cases.

✶ Because of more systematic collection, operating costs can be greatly reduced. The remarkable Introductory Offer at the right is a dramatic demonstration. It can represent a saving of up to more than 40% the first year.

✶ Thereafter, continuing members can build their record libraries at almost a ONE-THIRD SAVING. For every two records purchased (from a group of at least fifty made available annually by the Society) members will receive a third RCA VICTOR Red Seal Record free.

✶ A cardinal feature of the plan is GUIDANCE. The Society has a Selection Panel whose sole function is to recommend "must-have" works for members. Members of the panel are: DEEMS TAYLOR, composer and commentator, Chairman; SAMUEL CHOTZINOFF, General Music Director, NBC; JACQUES BARZUN, author and music critic; JOHN M. CONLY, editor of High Fidelity; AARON COPLAND, composer; ALFRED FRANKENSTEIN, music critic of San Francisco Chronicle; DOUGLAS MOORE, composer and Professor of Music, Columbia University; WILLIAM SCHUMAN, composer and president of Juilliard School of Music; CARLETON SPRAGUE SMITH, chief of Music Division, N. Y. Public Library; G. WALLACE WOODWORTH, Professor of Music, Harvard University.

HOW THE SOCIETY OPERATES

EACH month, three or more 12-inch 33⅓ R.P.M. RCA VICTOR Red Seal Records are announced to members. One is singled out as the record-of-the-month, and unless the Society is otherwise instructed (on a simple form always provided), this record is sent to the member. If the member does not want the work he may specify an alternate, or instruct the Society to send him nothing at all in that month. For every record purchased, members pay only $4.98, the nationally advertised price. (For every shipment a small charge for postage and handling is added.)

Hodges Issues Compromise Plan To End Board-Trustee Dispute

UNC Trustees Back Officials On Red Oath

RALEIGH — (AP) — The Executive Committee of the University Board of Trustees Monday reaffirmed a long-standing policy that all University faculty members and employes be required to take oaths of loyalty to the state and federal constitutions.

It also reiterated a decree first adopted by the Board of Trustees in 1941 to the effect that "no communist be employed by the University in any capacity whatsoever."

As in the past, enforcement of this decree was left in the hands of the administration of the Consolidated University.

The Executive Committee's action, in effect, supported a recent decision of the Consolidated University administration. That decision was to omit from job application blanks of the Chapel Hill unit of the Consolidated University a question relating to communist affiliations.

Meanwhile, directors of the newly-organized North Carolina Defenders of States Rights, criticized the decision to delete the question on communist affilitations from the UNC application blanks.

"We feel that we and the people of North Carolina are entitled to know whether or not a person applying for a position at the University of North Carolina and other schools of higher learning is now or ever has been a member of the Communist Party," said the directors in a resolution adopted at a meeting in Burlington Sunday.

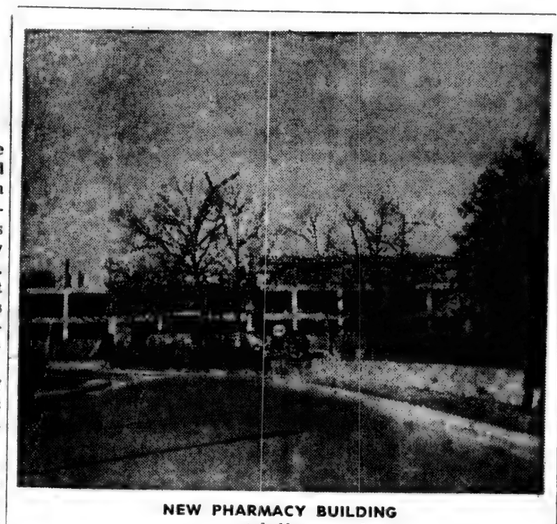
The ring sale is sponsored by the Grail.



NEW PHARMACY BUILDING
. . . at half-way mark

New Pharmacy Building Is Said Half Completed

The half way mark has been reached in the construction of the new School of Pharmacy building at the University.

The new building will be completed by Aug. 20. It will enable the school to double its present enrollment. This means that 120 freshmen students will be accepted in September and 75 transfer students will be accepted as sophomores.

The faculty will be increased by one assistant dean, one associate professor in pharmacognosy and three assistant professors of pharmacy.

The building is of concrete frame construction with a brick exterior. The new building contains 69,240 feet of floor space and is being constructed at a cost of $1,345,000.

Higher Education Board Has Power Reduced

A battle btween the State Board of Higher Education and the Board of Trustees of the University of North Carolina appeared ended with considerable loss of power for the Board of Higher Education.

A compromise proposal designed to end the dispute was made public yesterday by Gov. Hodges after it won the approval of the executive committee of the UNC Trustees.

The Governor, approving the agreement, said it, "represents the constructive suggestions of both groups, working together for the mutual benefit of higher education."

The compromise changes the original law which created the Board of Higher Education. The governor was asked if he felt the change would reduce substantially the powers of the Board of Higher Education. "I think that it clarifies them," he answered. "The language of the old law is a little rough. Frankly, it gave them powers they weren't exercising but that people were afraid they might exercise."

The new proposal changes the purpose of the Board which was originally given the power to promote and operate a coordinated system of higher education. The right to operate was removed while the function of planning such an educational system was added. In this purpose the Board is to "seek the cooperation of all institutions of higher education." The power of the Board to "require such institutions to conform to such plans" was removed.

The new proposal requires the conformity of all institutions to the educational functions and activities asigned to them, but the Board cannot require any institution to discontinue any existing functions and activities without the approval of the General Assembly.

It was made clear that each institution will perform its functions under the direction of its own Board of Trustees.

The Board was originally provided with the power to recommend to the Director of the Budget and the Advisory Budget Commission the budget expenditures for each of the institutions. This provision was changed to provide the Board with the duty to review and appraise the budget requests of all institutions and make its recommendations with respect to such requests to the Director of the Budget and the Advisory Budget Commission.

Under the proposal the Board would lose its right to make any decisions on requests for appropriations by the institutions of higher education.

Any appropriation request involving the establishment of a new educational function or activity is first submitted to the Board for approval.

The struggle came about early in 1958 when the Board of Higher Education cut the size of a housing project for married students at North Carolina State College. The Board of Trustees of the University of North Carolina requested 500 housing units which the Board of Higher Education cut to 300.

March 5 of last year the Board was attacked by the trustees for denying them their traditional powers.

Eight Dorm Social Rooms Commended

The residents of eight men's dormitories were commended Monday by University Director of Operations J. S. Bennett for the physical appearance of their social rooms.

Praised were Manly, Mangum, Ruffin, Lewis, Graham, Aycock, Cobb and Conner.

Bennett commended the students after inspecting all men's dormitories' social rooms to see what improvements they needed. The University has recently acquired new furniture to put in some of these rooms.

Those dormitories which appeared to "show the most interest," Bennett said, would get the most furniture and improvements. "We think the ones helping themselves should get the most help from us," he said.

Over half of these social rooms are in good condition, he said. However, some showed lack of interest. "One," hes aid, 'had pictures on the floor in a corner and draperies deposited on a mantle.

Encouraging dormitories that didn't have "good" social rooms to improve them, he said the University would respond to such interest by helping them.

Tickets Are Still On Sale For 'Carmen' Showing

Tickets are still on sale for the one-night performance of "Carmen" to be presented by the University Music Department tonight at 8:30 in Memorial Hall.

Claramae Turner, contralto of the Metropolitan and San Francisco Opera Companies, will sing the part of the famous gypsy.

All music from the original Bizet composition will be given in the UNC production which is under the direction of Dr. Wilton Mason.

Recitatives which were added later, however, have been omitted from the concert program with continuity being maintained by narration of Joel Carter, member of the Music Department faculty.

The University Chorus, regularly conducted by Dr. Mason, will be responsible for all the choral scenes of the full-length presentation.

Other members of the cast for the first Chapel Hill production of the popular opera include Gene Strassler, Joel Carter, Martha Fouse, Brian Klitz, James Pruett, Marilyn Zschau and Rebecca Carnes.

Rehearsals for the production began early in November.

Miss Turner has just concluded a season of opera with the San Francisco Opera Co. When she returns to New York she will join the American Opera Society in a production of "Medea".

In an interview Sunday Miss Turner conceded that her career was "built on versatility". This fact is borne out by the varied roles she has sung, including Madame Flora in Menotti's "The Medium" and Cousin Neddie in the motion picture "Carrousel."

While "Carrousel" was being made, Miss Turner was also singing Azucena in the opera "Il Trovatore" with the San Francisco Opera Co.

Miss Turner is the wife of Frank Hoffman, an industrial engineer with Standard Oil of New Jersey.

Coeds Get Late Hours For Two Campus Events

Late permission for coeds has been granted tonight for the performance of "Carmen" and Wednesday night for the State-Carolina basketball game.

By a joint resolution of the Women's Residence Council and dean of women's office, the one-hour late permissions were granted.

Coeds will be expected to sign out and in on a special sign-out sheet for these two nights and to return immediately to their dorms after the performance or game.

Student Reports Clothing Taken From Auto Here

A University student has reported to local police the theft of several items of clothing from his car parked near Woollen Gymnasium last week.

C. H. Townsend of Winston Dorm told officers that his car was parked near the gym Monday of last week. When he returned he said he found three pairs of slacks and two sport coats missing.

He valued the missing items at $95.

Furtado Plans Organization For Foreigners

A single organization to coordinate foreign student affairs is part of a plan to revise and expand the various foreign student programs here.

Student Body President Don Furtado met Friday with representatives of several organizations dealing with foreign students to discuss revamping the program.

The single organization planned would handle such administrative problems as finding homes for foreign students during holiday periods, preparing dormitory arrangements, arranging eating schedules and informing UNC students of exchange program opportunities abroad.

A bill will be presented to Student Legislature on the plan within a few weeks, Furtado said yesterday. But the provisions of the bill, such as the membership of the one organization, have not yet been worked out.

The importance of expanding the foreign student program was stressed by Furtado, who said, "At the present time we have on our campus a large number of students from other countries who are here because they have shown outstanding abilities and promise in their lands.

"Too often they never become a part of our community and because of this, when they return to their own land, their opinions of our way of life are sometimes not completely objective."

But even worse, Furtado said,

Police Arrest Three Men In University Wire Thefts

Three Durham county men have been arrested by Carrboro police and charged in the third and fourth incidents of theft of copper wire from the University Service Plant.

Two of the men, Rhett Williams, 32, and Bettis Holmes, 30, were out on $200 bond after appealing a previous conviction in Chapel Hill Recorder's Court last month on a similar charge.

Williams, Holmes, and Willie Leslie, about 30, will face the new charges in Recorder's court tomorrow.

According to Carrboro Chief of Police Alvin Williams, Holmes and Leslie are charged with taking a large quantity of wire from near the water plant on Jan. 6, and all three have been charged with taking wire on the night of Jan. 4.

The merchandise was allegedly sold to a Durham county firm and to a passing motorist.

Frank Alston and Thomas Mitchell of Chapel Hill were convicted of taking wire from the plant Nov. 29 and received 60-day roads sentences. They were said to have stolen 277 pounds of the wire.

Then, Holmes and Williams were charged with taking about $125 worth of wire about Nov. 22. Holmes and Williams were found guilty and three others implicated were found innocent of aiding and abetting.

Chief Williams said the wire has a market value of around 45 cents per pound. He charged that Williams, Holmes, and Leslie resold the wire at prices from 10 to 15 cents a pound.

He said the accused men evidently climbed a fence to get the wire and dragged it away through some woods.

APO Gets Office Space In Smith Dorm Basement

Carolina's service fraternity, Alpha Phi Omega, has moved to new headquarters in the basement of Smith Dormitory.

Harold Johnson, APO president, said he looks on the new location as "an added chance to provide volunteer service to the University."

Johnson indicated that after Feb. 3 the APO office will be manned each afternoon. Visitors to the campus will be able to get guides at short notice and a campus wide lost and found service may be set up.

Brothers of the fraternity moved office equipment from their old room in the basement of Graham Memorial to their new location in Smith. The new facilities consist of an office and a meeting room. The rooms open from a larger central conference room.

Johnson indicated that the facilities would not be fully developed until after the fraternity sponsored their annual book store for students after exams.

Fire Damage To Building Is Estimated

Building and grounds director J. S. Bennett said yesterday that insurance officials put fire damage to a University building at 219 Pittsboro St. at $9,000.

The Saturday night blaze consumed all of the building except the right lower front section which was damaged by water. The building housed seven offices of the School of Public Health.

"I don't think it is worth rebuilding," said Bennett. "I don't know what will be decided, though."

The insurance covered only the building and not the office furniture which was lost. The building as it stands is useless, accordng to Bennett.

Hood Reported Missing; Police Find It's Trick

Local police are used to having reports of stolen hubcaps, light reflectors, and other minor automobile paraphernalia being stolen.

But a hood from over the engine?

That was the report they had one day last week from Herbert Purser, of the Kappa Psi fraternity house. He said his hood from his car was taken from its hinges Tuesday.

A quick investigation recovered the item. Some of his frat brothers had taken it as a prank.

Loyalty Oaths

It is a happy occasion that the Board of Trustees has put its tacit stamp of approval on the action of the UNC administration in removing the useless loyalty oath from job applications at the University.

It is still a shame that they have to make their statement in a negative manner. It is a great shame that they should say that there should be no Communist on the faculty. In an academic community, it matters quite little if the person is Communist, Fascist, Democrat, or Republican, if only he is qualified to teach by virtue of his knowledge of the subject matter, and his ability to put the subject across.

However, be the negative political attitude of the trustees as it may, the loyaly oath is a thing of the past and the administration from top to bottom should be congratulated.

Here's hoping that the Committee on States Rights in Burlington set up to oppose the University's loyalty oath stand asphyxiates itself in its own hot air. Perhaps the University will breathe a healthier atmosphere after that.

State Game

It seems incredible that the UNC ticket office had so little foresight as to request only 230 tickets for the UNC-State game. No doubt they were not aware that UNC was rated third in the country in a recent poll.. Perhaps they did not know that State was voted second.

None of those in the ticket office apparently saw or heard the Dixie Classic and found that the two teams performed superbly in three games, proving what many have been said all along — that basketball in the ACC is perhaps the best in the nation.

The ticket office probably had no idea that UNC students were concerned with the fate of the UNC team or wanted to see a team which may very well make the NCAA finals more than the six times allowed in the regular home game schedule.

In recent years, North Carolina has been slightly more than avid in its views on basketball. It would seem that the ticket office might do well to keep up with the times. Of course the team won't mind if all the cheers, in the stands are for State.

Other Tickets

Ticket sales have not been proceeding at a rapid rate for the concert performance of the opera "Carmen" to be held tonight in Memorial Hall.

Many tickets have been sold, but student buyers have been rare. It is seldom that UNC can have an event of cultural importance, and the opera is an event of first magnitude.

Some students have objected to the $2 charge for the opera, but as usual most have been too apathetic to even muster enough steam to find out whether such a thing as an opera compares favorably with Elvis Presley.

The $2 charge is not exorbitant when one figures what one has to pay for opera in the big cities of the United States, and usually those performances are packed.

For students on this campus it may well be worth their effort to part with a couple of dollars. They may find out that the opera is even better than a German's Concert, the cost of which is usually greater than $6.

Fire

Watching the fire Saturday night was an interesting experience in which the fireman of Chapel Hill did themselves credit, the students of the University showed themselves in the worst light, and the University was faced with a problem.

The firemen Saturday night prevented a fire from completely demolishing a house, which was certainly not in any way a fireproof structure. The students contributed greatly by getting in the way, and heckling firemen in their attempts.

The firemen deserve praise not heckling, and the University is faced with a problem. The problem is in simple terms — what is to be done with the numerous wooden frame buildings that are nothing more than firetraps. Every one of these temporary structures are subject to a blaze that will demolish them, and one small slip can cause the destruction. Perhaps in the future when the state is not quite so tight on appropriations, these buildings can be replaced. Until then the prospect of their loss is one that must be faced.

Martin-Halleck

Joe Martin was sideswiped. He was defeated as floorleader in the Republican Party Caucus, but his defeat did not change the outlook of the Republican leadership in the House.

Indeed, Martin's defeat must have been personal in nature, for philosophically Charles Halleck is no greatly different from Representative Martin. Martin has never been the editor's ideal of a Congressman, but he surely did not deserve the dumping he got.

Politics can be quite dirty, as Martin well knows. It often gets quite muddy.

Letter From Olympus

This coming Tuesday evening, Bizet's opera "Carmen" will be presented by the combined efforts of the University Chorus, the University Symphony and several soloists. Miss Claramae Turner, one of America's foremost contraltos, will sing the title role, and the entire production will be conducted by Dr. Wilton Mason of the UNC Music Department. In recollection of his past successes which include "Brigadoon," Mozart's "The Marriage of Figaro", and Honegger's "King David", we went to see Dr. Mason in his second-story office in Hill Hall.

Having been comfortably seated, we asked him about the imminent production and as we talked, his enthusiasm became contagious.

"Carmen is one of the most popular operas in the modern repertory. Dramatically balanced, full of colorful and well-known tunes, it is ideally suited for a concert production. But the universal popularity of this opera can be accounted for in another way also . . . the personality of Carmen, the eternal gypsy. I don't think that there is a woman who does not wish that she were a Carmen, or a man who does not want to be loved by her.

"Choosing an opera for a university production is ,at best, difficult. As a matter of fact, we were also considering 'La Traviata', but it was always a toss-up between the two. Then when I found out that Claramae Turner was available and would perform the role of Carmen here, that was the clincher and I leaped at the opportunity. I have accompanied her on several tours throughout the country, most recently last year. She is a superb artist and a very good friend. Incidentally, she sang this role in Transylvania, N. Carolina, two summers ago and the house stood to cheer her. She is certainly one of the decade's great contraltos and, I might add, a very beautful woman.

"We are using the University Symphony orchestra, the sixty voice University Chorus and several excellent soloists to play the supporting roles. Gene Strassler is playing Don Jose. If you will remember, he sang leading roles in 'Brigadoon', produced two years ago by the Playmakers, and in 'King David,' which I directed here last year. Joel Carter, our Escamillo, has starred in 'Kiss Me Kate' and 'The Marriage of Figaro" and has played lighter roles in other productons. Martha Fouse, who plays Micaela, has a list of stellar performances behind her, both as an actress and as a singer.

"But the most rewarding thing is the excitement and vitality I find in every rehearsal. About two hundred people are involved in the production and every one of them is as excited about it as I am, and that, believe me, is saying a lot. If dedication and enthusiasm mean anything at all, next Tuesday night should be a hugh success."

After leaving Dr. Mason's office, we resolved to see Carmen. This is one of the most outstanding musical events for the year, and it is very rare that an opportunity to hear a great opera well performed is presented. We urge every student to attend.—C.L.

On Congress

James Reston

A single theme — the oldest in the American charter — has dominated the opening week of Congress: let's get going; we can and must do better than we are.

Everyone said it in his own way: the liberals and the conservatives; President Eisenhower nad Lyndon Johnson. The population, the scientists, the Russians are running ahead of the Government's plans. The time of consolidation is past, and even if it isn't, the time of exploration is once more at hand.

Other themes, other echoes from the past were heard this week, but this was the major recurring melody: we are running behind the pace of history; a booming country approaching 200,000,000 people cannot stand still: it must move and change and think as big as it is.

Washington itself was a symbol this week of this spirit of change: the East Front of the Capitol Building is being pushed out; the Senate has a new office building; the State Department is spreading across the flats of Foggy Bottom; Lyndon Johnson has a new suite of offices — "the Johnson wing of the Capitol" — with carpets as thick as mattresses and a toilet like a monument.

There are so many new, fresh faces in Congress that even Speaker Rayburn must sometimes feel a little lonely. His old and dear friend Joe Martin has been benched after twenty years as Republican leader of the House. Everett McKinley Dirksen of Illinois has taken over as Republican leader in the Senate.

The question now is: who has the energy and the political skill to transform dreams into plans and plans into laws? Speeches and committees do not change the state of the Union, but President Eisenhower and Lyndon Johnson might, if they combined ther power to implement the central theme of their speeches of the week.

It is quite possible that the President's message has been underestimated. He has spoken before in words that glow and flutter but lack the punch of politincal energy. Congress on the whole took his message as honest yearning, but turned away to other things.

This may be a mistake. The President has gone through a rough period in the last few months. He has been dwelling on narrow themes. He has been fighting sharp, limited political battles, but his intimates report that this is now changing; that he is beginning to think in larger terms of the future instead of the past; that he now recognizes that only by the aggressive use of Presidential power can he keep from being overwhelmed by a Democratic-controlled Congress; and that he is now talking not only of exercising more leadership at home but of going to Europe in the spring and perhaps even to India later in the year.

If this is true, the possibilities in the next year of a revitalized domestic and foreign policy may be better than they have been for some time. Most of the young leaders of both parties, from whom a President must be chosen in 1960, are beginning to realize that the prize of the White House is likely to go to the man who identifies himself most effectively with sensible plans for the growing nation.

The Congress, too, seems to be in a mood for more imaginative programs both at home and abroad, and, while it is divided on many questions, there is little doubt that a majority of members will follow any strong lead from Eisenhower and Johnson to provde the schools, the teachers, the houses and the incentives for a vigorous and growing country.

Johnson was sharply critical of the inertia of the Administration this week — more critical than he has ever been, and much more critical than Speaker Rayburn, who characteristically held out his hand to the President. But Johnson is not likely to put personal ambition or party advantage ahead of the development of the nation.

Both proposed the formation of a committee to define objectives and lay down the guidelines for the next critical decade. This is all to the good — though the Rockefeller brothers reports have already done a great deal of imaginative planning for the next ten years — but probably the most effective committee of all would be an Eisenhower-Johnson committee to implement those parts of their speeches which agree on the needs of the future.

They have in combination the power, if they have the will, to make their dreams of this week come true.

View Opposed To Supreme Court

(The following does not reflect the views of the editor. Indeed it is in oppositition to the editor's viewpoint. It is presented in the interest of making sense out of the column below, and to present an opposition view to the editor's oft presented opinion.)

Washington, D. C.
Oct. 13, 1958

The Hon. Dwight D. Eisenhower
President of the United States
The White House
Washington 25, D. C.

My dear Mr. President:

A few days ago I was reading over Justice Frankfurter's opinion in the recent Little Rock case. Three sentences in it tempt me to write you this letter.

I am a Northerner, but I have spent a large part of my life as a business executive in the South. I have a law degree, but I am now engaged in historical writing.

From this observation post I risk the presumption of a comment.

The sentences I wish to examine are these: "Local customs, however hardened by time, are not decreed in heaven. Habits and feelings they engender may be counteracted and moderated. Experience attests that such local habits and feelings will yield, gradually though this be, to law and education."

* * *

IT IS MY PERSONAL CONVICTION that the local customs in this case were "hardened by time" for a very good reason, and that while they may not, as Frankfurter says have been decreed in heaven, they come closer to it than the current view of the Supreme Court.

I was particularly puzzled by Frankfurter's remark that "the Constitution is not the formulation of the merely personal views of the members of this court."

Five minutes before the court's desegregation decision, the Constitution meant one thing; five minutes later, it meant something else. Only one thing intervened, namely, an expression of the personal views of the members of the court.

IT IS NOT my purpose to dispute the point with which the greater part of Frankfurter's opinion is concerned. The law must be obeyed. But I think the original desegregation decision was wrong, that it ought to be reversed, and that meanwhile every legal means should be found, not to disobey it, but to avoid it. Failing this, the situation should be corrected by constitutional amendment.

* * *

I CANNOT AGREE that this is a matter involving "a few states" as Frankfurter suggests. The picture in reality is of a court, by one sudden edict, forcing upon the entire South a view, and a way of life, with which the great majority of the population are in complete disagreement.

Although not from the legal, in fact from the ractical, standpoint the North, which does not have the problem, is presuming to tell the South, which does have the problem, what to do.

To me there is a frightening arrogance in this performance. Neither the North, nor the court, has any holy mandate inherent in the trend of the times or the progress of liberalism to reform society in the South.

In the matter of schools, rights to equal education are inseparably bound up with rights to freedom of association and, in the South at least, may require that both be considered simultaneously. (In using the word "association" here, I mean that right to associate with whom you please, and the right not to associate with whom you please.)

In any case the crux of this issue would seem obvious: social status has to be earned.

Personally, I feel only affection for the Negro. But there are facts that have to be faced. Any man with two eyes in his head can observe a Negro settlement in the Congo, can study the pure-blooded African in his native habitat as he exists when let on his own resources, can compare this settlement with London or Paris, and can draw his own conclusions regarding relative levels of character and intelligence—or that combination of character and intelligence which is civilizaton.

Finally he can inquire as to the number of pure-blooded blacks who have made contributions to great literature or engineering or medicine or philosophy or abstract science.

We were all in caves or trees originally. The progress which the pure-blooded black has made when left to himself, with a minimum of white help or hindrance, genetically or otherwise, can be measured today in the Congo.

Lord Bryce, a distinguished impartial foreign observer, presented the situation accurately in his American Commonwealth when he wrote in 1880:

"History is a record of the progress toward civilization of races originally barbarous. But that progress has in all cases been slow and gradual . . . Utterly dissimilar is the case of the African Negro, caught up in and whirled along with the swift movement of the American democracy. In it we have a singular juxtapositiin of the most primitive and the most recent, the most rudimentary and the most highly developed, types of culture . . . A body of savages is violently carried across the ocean and set to work as slaves on the plantations of masters who are three or four thousands years in advance of them in mental capacity and moral force . . . Suddenly, even more suddenly than they were torn from Africa, they find themselves, not only free, but made full citizens and active members of the most popular government the world has seen, treated as fit to bear an equal part in ruling, not only themselves, but also their recent masters."

One does not telescope three or four thousand years into the 70 years since Bryce wrote.

* * *

I WOULD EMPHATICALLY support improvement of education in Negro schools, if and where it is inferior.

Equality of opportunity and equality before the law, when not strained to cover other situations, are acceptable ideals because they provide the chance to earn and to progress—and consequently should be enforced by legal fiat as far as is humanly possible.

Throughout this controversy there has been frequent mention of the equality of man as a broad social objective. No proposition in recent years has been characterized by more loose thinking. Few of us would care to enter a poetry contest with a top-ranking poet. And few would care to play chess with the champion.

PIN DOWN THE MAN who uses the word "equality," and at once the evasions and qualifications begin. As I recall, you, yourself, in a recent statement used some phrase to the effect that men were "equal in the sight of God."

I would be interested to know where in the Bible you get your authority in Scripture for the concept of potential equality in the sight of God—after earning that status, and with various further qualifications—but where is the authority for the sort of ipso facto text? The whole idea contradicts equality suggested by your conthe basic tenet of the Christian and Jewish religions that status is earned through righteousness and is not an automatic matter.

FRANKFURTER closes his opinion with a quotation from Abraham Lincoln, to whom the Negro owes more than to any other man. I, too, would like to quote from Lincoln. At Charleston, Ill., in September, 1858, in a debate with Douglas, Lincoln said:

"I am not, nor ever have been in favor of bringing about in any way the social and political equality of the white and black races; I am not nor ever have been in favor of making voters or jurors of Negroes nor qualifying them to hold office . . . I will say in addition to this that there is a physical difference between the white and black races which I believe will ever forbid the two races living together on terms of social and political equality. And in as much as they cannot so live, while they do remain together, there must be the position of superior and inferior, and I as much as any other man am in favor of having the superior position assigned to the white race.' "

The extent to which Lincoln would have modified these views today, or may have modified them before his death, is a moot question, but it is clear on its face that he would not have been in sympathy with the Supreme Court's position on desegregation.

PERHAPS the most discouraging spectacle is the spectacle of Northern newspapers dwelling with pleasure upon the predicament of the Southern parent who is forced to choose between desegragation and no school at all for his child.

It does not seem to occur to the papers that this is the cruelest sort of blackmail; that the North is virtually putting a pistol at the head of the Southern parent in a gesture which every Northerner must contemplate with shame.

Indeed, there now seems little doubt that the court's recent decision has set back the cause of the Negro in the South by a generation.

He may force his way into white schools, but will not force his way into white hearts nor earn the respect he seeks.

What evolution was slowly and wisely achieving, revolution has now arrested, and the trail if bitterness will lead far.

Sincerely yours,

CARLETON PUTNAM

On A Free Press

Sidney Dakar

Our editor saw fit to call the recent action, or inaction, of the student legislature as a "black day" in Chapel Hill. Be that as it may, in my opinion, January 5, 1959, was a "black day" for the field of journalim. And who should have caused this black day but the all-knowing, all-seeing and impartial New York Tmes. On page 19 of the January 5th issue of the Times there appeared a paid political advertisement, commonly referred to as the "Putnam Letter." Let me give you the facts behind this letter.

Carleton Putnam was raised in the North, was graduated from Princeton and Columbia and is a biographer of Theodore Roosevelt. Putnam is the founder of The Chicago and Southern Airlines and is on the board of Delta Airlines. He has made his home in the South for many years and has tried to understand its problems.

Mr. Putnam composed a letter stating his views and also what he thought were the views of the South in general. This letter was sent to President Eisenhower on October 13, 1958. Eisenhower merely acknowledged the letter (probably from the links of The Burning Tree). This letter was so well-written that many southern newspapers printed in. The southern editors asked the northern press to publish this letter so that the northerners might at least read the views of the South on the racial issue. Many papers were asked, such as the Detroit "Free" Press and the New York Times. NOT A SINGLE NORTHERN NEWSPAPER WOULD PUBLISH THIS LETTER! Request after request to the "unbaised" northern editors was made by the southern editors, all to no avail.

Finally, a committee was formed to accept contributions from southerners and others in order that the letter might be distributed through the mails. The New York Times was approached again, this time to the tune of $3,075. The "impartial" (to whose money it takes) New York Times, "the model of American journalism," threw its principles, along with the envelope that had contained the check, into the wastebasket and printed the letter as a half-page advertisement in its January 5th issue. The Putnam Letter Committee (James E. Simpson, Treasuer; 317 N. 20th Street; Birmingham, Alabama) has furnished me with these facts and also a copy of the letter which will appear in the DTH so that you may judge for yourself the fairness of the northern press.

It is such things as this that turn many into confirmed cynics. How can we believe what we hear without closing our eyes? Who is free from bias and prejudice? Who utters pious platitudes and then does not violate everthing that he has said? Who talks of generousity and then does not think of greed? It seems that all of this pious preaching of equality and of love for thy fellowman is merely air — sound, devoid of meaning.

Night Study Halls Open In Two Campus Buildings

Three classrooms, 110 and 216 Saunders and 101 Alumni, have been opened to the student body for night time study.

These rooms, available for those who desire a quiet place to study after library closing hours may be used any time from 6 p.m. to 7 a.m. The Alumni Building, however, will be closed on Saturdays.

The opening of these rooms was obtained by a special committee appointed by Don Furtado.

Smoking will be permitted, but students have been warned that if these rooms are abused in any way or the purpose for opening these rooms is violated, the rooms will be closed.

The committee, headed by Bill Norton, also made an investigation concerning other study facilities on camus. Dean Katherine Carmichael pointed out that sororities have access to their chapter rooms and parlors for study. Dormitory women have study rooms, but these rooms need better equipment.

Several fraternities have study halls in rooms in Peabody.

Student government has made the rooms in Saunders and the Alumni Building available on the condition that students will "use them and respect this priviledge," Norton said.

In addition to Norton, other committee members include Julian Sessoms and Sarah Adams.

Costa Elected President Of Cosmopolitan Club

Heading the Cosmopolitan Club for the spring semester is Alan Costa, who was elected president at a club meeting Sunday.

Costa is a Fulbright scholar studying in the English Department from Recise, Brazil.

Other officers include: Mickey Gibson, vice president; Nicky Friedericch, secretary; and Wapie Mikhail, treasurer.

At Sunday's meeting, the Cosmopolitan Club also set Feb. 7 as the date for the International dinner.

THE OLD INN AT CAROLINA—This picture, the property of UNC Alumnus Raymon J. Rosenberger of Gastonia, is of the Old Inn on the Carolina campus as it appeared just before it burned on the afternoon of Wednesday, Nov. 30, 1921. Mr. Rosenberger had a room in the building. J. Maryon Saunders, alumni secretary at the University, recalls the fire: "I was coming out of Swain Hall after having had grits and gravy with J. Obie Harmon when the fire happened. As I recall, Frank Graham, then a young History teacher, led a group of volunteers who got on the roof of the unburned portion, as shown in the picture, to fight the blaze on the other part. Also, I believe the burned out part of the building was built about the time that alumnus James K. Polk visited the University at commencement of 1847." The location of this building was at the site of the present Graham Memorial.

Air Officer Candidate Grads Urged To Apply Immediately

All college seniors who graduate this semester and are planning to enroll in the Aviation Officer Candidate Course have been urged to make immediate application by Major Charles B. Redman.

Major Redman, U. S. Marine Corps selection officer in the Carolinas, said the Aviation Officer course will convene at Marine Corps School, Quantico, Va., in March.

The course consists of a 10-week indoctrination period which leads to a commission in the U. S. Marine Corps reserve. Graduates are commissioned as second lieutenants and are assigned to pilot training at Pensacola, Fla. A minimum of two years is served upon completion of flight training.

AED To See GP Movies Thursday

A general practice in medicine will be the topic of two films at Thursday night's meeting of the Alpha Epsilon Delta pre-med and pre-dent honorary fraternity.

Loaned to the Carolina AED chapter by the American Medical Association, the films will be shown in Room 106 Hanes at 7:30 Thursday night.

The routine, problems and requirements of a general practice in medicine will be brought up in both films. The film, "Night Call," deals especially with the problems created for the general practicioner and his family by disease's lack of respect for bedtime.

This program is one in a series being sponsored by the AED to acquaint the pre-med and pre-dent students with progress in and the nature of their future professions of medicine and dentistry.

Sorority Houses Close So The Gals Can Study

Sorority houses will be closed to visitors during exam week, Sophie Martin of the Panhellenic Council said yesterday.

Beginning Saturday, all sorority houses will lock their doors to all but members. Any visitor must knock on the door and give the name of the person to be seen.

The closing of sorority houses to visitors was a decision of Panhellenic with the agreement of each sorority.

IS STUDYING NECESSARY?

Once there were three roommates and their names were Walter Pellucid, Casimir Fing, and LeRoy Holocaust and they were all taking English lit. They were all happy, friendly, outgoing types and they all smoked Philip Morris Cigarettes as you would expect from such a gregarious trio, for Philip Morris is the very essence of sociability, the very spirit of amity, the very soul of concord, with its tobacco so mild and true, its packs so soft and flip-top, its length so regular or long size. You will find when you smoke Philip Morris that the birds sing for you and no man's hand is raised against you.

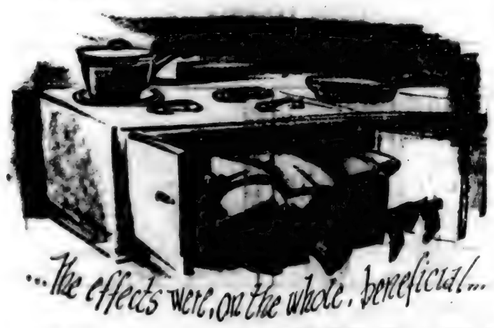
Each night after dinner Walter and Casimir and LeRoy went to their room and studied English lit. For three hours they sat in sombre silence and pored over their books and then, squinty and spent, they toppled onto their pallets and sobbed themselves to sleep.

This joyless situation obtained all through September and October. Then one November night they were all simultaneously struck by a marvelous idea. "We are all studying the same thing," they cried. "Why, then, should each of us study for three hours? Why not each study for one hour? It is true we will only learn one-third as much that way, but it does not matter because there are three of us and next January before the exams, we can get together and pool our knowledge!"

Oh, what rapture then fell on Walter and Casimir and LeRoy! They flung their beanies into the air and danced a schottische and lit thirty or forty Philip Morrises and ran out to pursue the pleasure which had so long, so bitterly, been missing from their lives.

Alas, they found instead a series of grisly misfortunes. Walter, alas, went searching for love and was soon going steady with a coed named Invicta Breadstuff, a handsome lass, but, alas, hopelessly addicted to bowling. Each night she bowled five hundred lines, some nights a thousand. Poor Walter's thumb was a shambles and his purse was empty, but Invicta just kept on bowling and in the end, alas, she left Walter for a pin-setter, which was a terrible thing to do to Walter, especially in this case, because the pin-setter was automatic.

Walter, of course, was far too distraught to study his English lit, but he took some comfort from the fact that his roommates were studying and they would help him before the exams. But Walter, alas, was wrong. His roommates, Casimir and LeRoy, were nature lovers and they used their free time to go for long tramps in the woods. One November night, alas, they were treed by two bears, Casimir by a brown bear and LeRoy by a Kodiak, and they were kept in the trees until mid-January when winter set in and the brown bear and the Kodiak went away to hibernate.



...the effects were, on the whole, beneficial...

So when the three roommates met before exams to pool their knowledge, they found they had none to pool! Well sir, they had a good long laugh about that and then rushed to the kitchen and stuck their heads in the oven. It was, however, an electric oven and the effects were, on the whole, beneficial. The wax in their ears got melted and they acquired a healthy tan and today they are married to a lovely young heiress named Ganglia Bran and live in the Canal Zone, where there are many nice boats to wave at.
